By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to allow, and, from the unexpended balance of the fund heretofore appropriated under the joint resolution approved February 1, 1888, for the expenses incurred by the Government of the United States in accepting the invitation of the British Government to participate in the international exhibition held in Melbourne in August, 1888, to pay to each of the following-named assistant commissioners, to wit: Richard F. Miller, of Lynchburg, Va.; Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, W. Va.; Francis B. Wheeler, of New York City; and Thomas B. Merry, of Portland, Oregon, who were appointed and represented the United States Government at said exhibition, the sum of $1,500, in full for expenses to and from and of sojourn at Melbourne.

SEC. 2. That should the unexpended balance of the fund so appropriated under the joint resolution of February 1, 1888, have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $6,000 is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid in the several sums above provided to each of the individuals named upon the warrant of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1778, to amend the act to regulate commerce.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1778) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887. It proposes to further amend section 10 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889, by adding the following clauses thereto:

Whenever any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act is a corporation such corporation may be prosecuted as for a misdemeanor under any of the foregoing provisions of this section, and upon conviction shall be subject for each offense to a fine not exceeding $5,000.

Whenever an indictment shall be found under the provisions of this act against a corporation the service of any writ or other process thereupon, or for the prosecution thereof, shall be sufficient if a copy of such writ or process be delivered to and left with any officer of such corporation resident in the judicial district wherein such indictment may be found.

Section 2 proposes to repeal so much of section 10 of the act to regulate commerce as provides for punishment by imprisonment.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment in section 1, line 18, after the word "officer," to insert "or agent;" so as to read:

Whenever an indictment shall be found under the provisions of this act against a corporation the service of any writ or other process thereupon, or for the prosecution thereof, shall be sufficient if a copy of such writ or process be delivered to and left with any officer or agent of such corporation resident in the judicial district wherein such indictment may be found.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SECURITIES OF JOHN S. BRADFORD.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4209, for the relief of the securities of John S. Bradford. It is only ten lines long, and will not take any time.

Mr. CALL. I reserve the right to object if the bill leads to debate.

Mr. DOLPH. If there is any debate I shall not press the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4209) for the relief of the securities of John S. Bradford. It proposes to release John Cassels and Rosalie M. Bradford, securities of John S. Bradford, deceased, late United States consul at Antigua, West Indies, from the payment of $239.06, claimed to be due the United States on the official bond of John S. Bradford.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOCUMENTS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOMES.

Mr. MARTIN. I shall be very much obliged to the Senator from Florida if he will yield to me long enough to have the Senate consider and dispose of House bill 236, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, relating to public documents for soldiers and sailors' homes. It ought to be disposed of.

Mr. CALL. I yield to the Senator from Kansas for that purpose, provided the bill leads to no debate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 236) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to soldiers' homes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments in line 13, after the word "California," to strike out "and the Soldiers' and Sailors' Widows and Orphans' Home at Knightstown Springs, near Knightstown, in Indiana;" in line 17, after the word "Territory," to insert "receiving aid from the United States under legislation of Congress;" in line 19, after the word "the," to strike out "journals of each House of Congress at each and every session; all," and insert "session;" in line 21, after the word "documents" to insert "in the abridgment thereof;" in line 22, after the word "daily," to strike out "(two);" and in line 22, after the word "Record," to strike out "and all other documents or books which may be printed and bound by either House of Congress;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1881, be, and hereby is, repealed and reënacted to read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 4837. That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall cause to be sent to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, and to the branches at Togus, in Maine; Milwaukee, in Wisconsin; Hampton, in Virginia; Marion, in Indiana; Leavenworth, in Kansas; Santa Monica, in California; and all soldiers and sailors' homes established by the authority of any State or Territory receiving aid from the United States under legislation of Congress, each, one copy each of the following documents: The session laws of Congress; the annual messages of the President, with accompanying documents in the abridgment thereof; the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives the documents referred to in this section."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I propose an additional amendment to the bill. After the word "California," in line 13, I move to insert:

And to the homes for widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors, established and maintained by any State or Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. From what committee is the bill reported?

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment which I offer has been submitted to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who reported the bill, and it meets with his approval. It ought to be adopted. There is no question about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me that a proposition involving as much printing as the bill does ought to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope it will not be so referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must ask that the bill be printed with the proposed amendments, and then we can look at it.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not do that. I have had a provision of this kind before the committee for about a year, and I have been unable to obtain a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. To-morrow or the next day there will be ample time to call up the bill, and it will not lose its place by imply going over and being printed as I suggest.

Mr. MARTIN. If the Senator objects I can not help myself, but I hope he will withdraw his objection and let the bill be passed. The matter has been thoroughly examined by the committee and reported unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is not on my file. It is on the Calendar, but it has just been reported.

Mr. MARTIN. It was reported several days ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not been able to look at it. I suggested that a bill involving so much printing ought to be considered by the Committee on Printing. It certainly involves a good deal of additional printing.

Mr. MANDERSON. Not a great deal.

Mr. MARTIN. There can not be any printing which is more useful or desirable.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri that as the bill came from the House of Representatives it did involve a very great amount of printing, but as the bill has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs the extent of the printing is that to each one of these homes there shall be sent a copy of the session laws and a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. So there is not any great amount of printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that all the bill involves now?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is all it involves by the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Merely a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. MANDERSON. A copy of the current RECORD to each soldiers' home, national and State, a copy of the session laws, and the annual message of the President, with the abridgment of accompanying documents.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the committee amendments. Let the bill be read as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1881, be, and hereby is, repealed and reënacted to read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 4837. That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall cause to be sent to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, and to the branches at Togus in Maine, Milwaukee in Wisconsin, Hampton in Virginia, Marion in Indiana, Leavenworth in Kansas, Santa Monica in California, and to the homes for widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors, established and maintained by any State or Territory, and all soldiers and sailors' homes established by the authority of any State or Territory receiving aid from the United States under legislation of Congress, each, one copy each of the following documents: The session laws of Congress; the annual messages of the President, with accompanying documents in the abridgment thereof; the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives the documents referred to in this section."

Mr. MANDERSON. It will be noticed that the important change in the bill as it came from the other House is that we strike out all documents published by order of Congress, which of course would involve an enormous amount of printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should these documents be furnished by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives? Why should they not be sent direct to the homes?

Mr. MANDERSON. That seemed to be the most convenient form in which to send them.

Mr. COCKRELL. The RECORD ought to be sent by the Public Printer.

Mr. MANDERSON. It could be sent by the Public Printer.

Mr. MARTIN. The bill has already passed the other House, and there is no use to make any unnecessary changes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] is confined to his room owing to illness. He requests me to ask the Senate to grant him an indefinite leave of absence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3458) extending the time for final proof and payment on lands claimed under the public land laws of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit; and

A bill (S. 2208) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River at the foot of Main street in the borough of Bellevernon, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson, and the bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2015) granting to the Columbia Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian Reservation in Washington; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

EARNEST C. EMERSON.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agrees to said amendment amended by adding to the part proposed to be inserted the following, viz, "At the rate of $10 per month;" so that said amendment shall read as follows:

"Subject to the limitations and provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, at the rate of $10 per month."

And the House of Representatives agrees to the same.

JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MARY BROWN.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 920) granting a pension to Mary Brown, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recedes from its amendments to said bill.

JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DONATION LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. DOLPH submitteed the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree thereto, with the following amendments:

After the word "claimants," in lines 15 and 16, page 2, insert the words "their heirs, devisees, and grantees."

Strike out the word "four," in line 31, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Strike out the words "at least three newspapers," in line 32, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one newspaper."

After the word "district," in line 33, page 2, insert the words "in a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

Strike out the words "describing such claims," in line 35, page 2.

After the word "abandoned," in line 38, page 2, insert the words "and the lands embraced therein."

Strike out the entire lines 1 and 2 and the words "before provided," in line 3, of page 3.

After the word "be," in line 3, page 3, insert the words "and are hereby."

After the word "provided," in line 5, page 3, insert the word "further."

After the word "claimant," in line 20, page 3, insert the words "or his heirs, devisees, or grantees, as aforesaid."

Strike out the figure "3," in line 1, section 3, page 4, and insert the figure "2" in lieu thereof.

After the word "Act," in line 4, section 4, page 4, insert the words "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair or affect any adverse claims arising under any law of the United States other than said donation act, to or in respect of the lands in this act referred to."

J. N. DOLPH,
S. PASCO,
WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS C. McRAE,
D. D. HARE,
JOHN F. LACEY.
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT. It occurs to me, from hearing the report of the conference committee read, that the amendment to the amendment just agreed to on the part of the other House is pretty comprehensive. Of course I can not tell what is the amendment which was disagreed to on the part of the other House, but from hearing the report read it looks as if there has been a general amendment of the entire bill by the conferees in other respects than those where disagreements occurred between the Senate and the House of Representatives. I should like to have some explanation of the matter.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate amendment was an entirely new bill. The phraseology of the bill as it came from the other House was not satisfactory to the Committee on Public Lands, and I reported from that committee a substitute drafted by myself. The amendments which are agreed upon by the conference committee are comparatively immaterial. They change the character of the notice required to be given before final action is taken in regard to donation claims under the bill.

The bill is a local one, and affects only donation claims in the States of Washington and Oregon taken under the act of September 27, 1850. Under that act donations were given, 320 acres to a single man and 640 to a married man. The settler was required to notify upon the claim, to reside four years on it, and then make final proof. The law did not provide when the final proof should be made. Consequently, as the matter now stands, although there have been a good many claims notified upon, where residence was not continued and final proof was not made, and which were therefore abandoned, up to this time it has been necessary to institute a contest in every case where a settler wanted to go upon one of these abandoned claims and to have an adjudication in each case.

The bill provides a limitation of time within which proof can be made, and requires a notice to be published in a newspaper in each land district requiring claimants to make proof, and at the end of a year, after notice, the claims are to be declared canceled and the land restored to the public domain.

The donation law was passed in 1850, and it has been a great many years since any claim could be taken up. This bill is simply intended to get rid in a lump of all these abandoned claims; that is, claims notified on in early days, where residence was not continued and proof has not been made of residence and cultivation, without requiring a contest in regard to each one.

Mr. PLATT. I made no criticism in regard to the character of the bill. If, as the Senator from Oregon now says, the amendment of the Senate went to the whole bill, there is no criticism to be made upon the form of the conference report.

Mr. DOLPH. It was in effect a new bill.

The report was concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, after line 14 insert:

RUSSIAN CACTUS.

For the destruction of the Russian cactus (technically salsoli koli tragus), $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by Russian cactus, said apportionment to be made in accordance with the necessities of the case, to be ascertained by the Secretary, and to be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

Mr. McLAURIN. There was a point of order made yesterday evening by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I think the point of order is well taken, and it ought to be passed upon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the Senator from Missouri did not make a point of order against the amendment, but simply reserved all points of order against it. No point of order has yet been made.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understood that the point of order had been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that he understands the case as stated by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. COCKRELL. I reserved last night the right to make the point of order. We did not consider the amendment then.

So I make the point of order now that this is an amendment which proposes general legislation. That is one point against it; that it is an amendment which proposes general legislation, and the report of a standing committee does not bring within the rule an amendment proposing general legislation. No amendment that proposes general legislation, whether recommended by a committee or not, is in order. In addition to that, I will have another point of order made which has to be decided in a different way.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I beg leave to disagree with the Senator from Missouri in claiming that there is any ground whatever for a point of order against the amendment. The amendment simply provides for a specific appropriation, and directs an officer of the Government as to the disposition of the money so appropriated, and that is all there is to the amendment.

I will state further that, as the Senator from Missouri very well knows, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry authorized the reporting of the amendment, and that it was duly reported and sent to the Committee on Appropriations under the rule of the Senate, and it is now before us as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that I do not agree with the majority as to the amendment. There is a minority of the committee who do not approve of the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state as a matter of fact that a majority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry authorized me to report the amendment.

Mr. BATE. That is correct.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I think the point of order is well taken. The purpose of the rule seems to be to confine legislation on the appropriation bills exclusively to matters of appropriation, and any legislation other than that which appropriates money to defray the expenses incurred under the existing law is general appropriation and is obnoxious to the rule. The purpose of the rule is that in the consideration of legislative matters other than those specially appropriating money to pay what the Government already owes, there shall be given an opportunity to both branches of the Congress of the United States, and the Executive, to pass upon the question of the legislation, disentangled from any question of appropriation or from any appropriation bill. Such legislation ought not to be tied on an appropriation bill.

The Executive ought not to be compelled to approve legislation which he otherwise would not approve, or else veto an appropriation bill all the other items of which approves. I think the rule would exclude this proposed legislation. There is no law which makes the appropriation necessary; there is no law under which the appropriation could be made; and unless the law is made by the bill which is now before the Senate there can be no law for the appropriation. I therefore object to the amendment on that ground. I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this is a very interesting question, and I am sorry that the Senate is paying no attention to it. Except the Senators who attempt to address the Senate, the rest of the Senators seem to be engaged in conversation on other matters. The question whether the amendment is in order is more interesting to me than the question whether the appropriation should be made. I think the amendment is strictly in order.

There is one thing I want to say preliminarily. According to the practice of the Senate at the present session and for a few sessions past, everything seems to be in order that the Committee on Appropriations wants to put on a bill, and nothing is to be in order that anyone else wants to put on an appropriation bill. The same rule ought to be applied to committee amendments as to amendments which are offered by Senators.

We can not all of us be on the committee; we can not all of us get those provisions accepted by the committee which we think ought to be put on; and we can not have two rules in the Senate. We can not have a rule for general legislation by committee amendments and one for no general legislation except by committee amendments.

But whether the amendments were reported by a committee or offered by a Senator, I do not conceive that it comes at all within that provision of our rule that amendments shall not be proposed to appropriation bills which provide for general legislation. I supposed the question as to amendments of this kind were settled in the Senate when the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] several years ago upon a Post-Office appropriation bill introduced an amendment appropriating $400,000 to be apportioned to American ships which should carry mails from this country to foreign ports, and provided in detail how the lines which might be organized to carry the mails from our shores to foreign ports should receive the money, in different proportions according to the tonnage of the ships and all that sort of thing.

It was decided then (and I have no doubt the clerks will be able to find the decision) that that proposed amendment was strictly in order. We had no law which provided for paying a subsidy to ships which should be organized to carry the mails. It was a feature entirely unknown to our laws. Yet the amendment was held to be in order upon the ground that the main feature in the amendment proposed was the appropriation of a certain amount of money. It was not to carry out any law; it was to appropriate money for a new purpose; and all the rest of the amendment, stating how the money should be expended, embodied conditions attached to the appropriation showing how it should be expended. I understand that ever since that time the rule in the Senate has been, as it ought to be, that an amendment does not propose general legislation which simply makes an appropriation and determines how the appropriation shall be expended, no matter how much detail may be involved in those conditions.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the appropriation bill was as follows:

On motion by Mr. FRYE to further amend the bill by striking out lines 174, 175, and 176, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

"For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $800,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip, each way, actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated."

The pending amendment is not nearly so much open to the suggestion that it is general legislation as was that amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me a moment? I should like to ask him whether there was any discussion upon that proposition at the time.

Mr. PLATT. There was a long discussion upon it. As I remember, it took nearly a whole day to discuss that point of order.

Mr. Bayard raised a question of order, that the amendment proposed general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The President pro tempore submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order under the sixteenth rule? and it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 33, nays 20.—Senate Journal, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, February 23, 1885, page 352.

Since that time the Senate has adhered to the decision thus made, that where an amendment proposes an appropriation and simply provides the method in which the appropriation shall be disposed of, the conditions attached to its expenditure, it is not general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Now, take the pending amendment, and it will be seen that there is nothing else in it. There is a proposition to appropriate $1,000,000 (whether it ought to be appropriated or not I do not say) for the destruction of the Russian cactus, and then it says:

To be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by Russian cactus, said apportionment to be made in accordance with the necessities of the case, to be ascertained by the Secretary, and to be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

There is nothing in the amendment but the proposition to appropriate a million dollars except telling how the Secretary of Agriculture shall pay out the million dollars, and that is not general legislation.

With regard to the other propositions I do not care to discuss them, but I do not think that the amendment falls within the rule which prohibits the reception of amendments which propose general legislation.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the fundamental question that will be presented to the Senate, and the House, and the Executive, by the pending amendment is, will the Government of the United States undertake to destroy this thistle or cactus? It is decided that there is no obligation at all on the part of the Congress of the United States for an appropriation of money, and there is nothing in existing law under which the money could be appropriated. It is a general question, and it ought to be disassociated from any appropriation bill. It ought to be determined by itself; and when determined, then there will be time enough to appropriate money for the purpose. An appropriation bill is intended only to appropriate money for the purpose of paying expenses that are incurred under the law as it then exists.

There is no law requiring the Government of the United States to appropriate a dollar for the destruction of the Russian cactus. Until there is a law of that kind, there is no obligation on the part of Congress to appropriate money, and it ought not to be done. Therefore it is extremely necessary that the first question to be determined shall be whether the Government of the United States will undertake the destruction of this cactus. That is the question of general legislation and it ought to be first decided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the pending question of order. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota in order?

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, before the question is submitted to the Senate I desire to say a few words on the subject. I am in charge of the pending bill, and I am not one of those who agree that it is proper to raise a point of order against the amendment. The argument upon the subject should be a precise one. The rule says in words:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That is a rule which applies to the whole Senate, to its committees, to the Committee on Appropriations, and to the Senators on that committee as much as to any others.

What did the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations do on Saturday last, and what construction did the Senate place upon the rule and the principle of this amendment? By a repeated vote this body declared that the revolutionizing the entire Treasury Department, the creation of many offices, the prescribing of a system and a method, until it should be repealed, for the conduct of the business in the Treasury Department, was not general legislation and not within the terms of this rule. With what propriety now do they say that what was done Saturday, there being no existing law for it and no pretense of an existing law, shall to-day by the Senate be held to be entirely wrong when applied to this amendment? Is it not true that the action taken Saturday in favor of a particular idea is to-day to be reversed in its application to this amendment and to other Senators?

Is it not absolutely true that on Saturday the Senate decided that to abolish the entire system and methods of business in the Treasury Department, to create a new system, to create additional officers, to invest them with new powers and with a different jurisdiction, was not general legislation; that to appropriate money in large sums for these new officers with increased salaries was not general legislation?

Mr. President, if there be any meaning in the word, if "general" does not mean particular, if "general" does not mean one or two, or a part, but means the whole or the greater part of the whole, then general legislation is not legislation unqualified; it is not particular legislation; it is not that which relates to one subject, to one person, to one State, but that which relates to the body politic at large and the economies of the nation, to considerations which affect the public at large.

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] when I say that there is no reason for the assertion that the term general legislation means that which affects existing law, because there never was and there never will be an appropriation passed which does not affect existing law, either by making a new law or repealing old laws. What is every increase of salary? What is every decrease of compensation in an appropriation bill? Is it not a change of existing law? Every decrease, every reduction is a change of existing law. Where, then, can be found the distinction?

Mr. PASCO. Will my colleague permit me to ask a question through the Chair? I desire to know whether the point of order was raised against the amendments he speaks of changing the order and manner of business in the Treasury Department. I was not in the Senate at the time, but I have examined the RECORD and no question of order appears to have been raised on those amendments here or elsewhere.

Mr. COCKRELL. It could not be raised because they were provisions of the House bill and were not subject to a point of order. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] ought to remember that fact, and he does remember it.

Mr. CALL. The rule is as absolute against a House provision as any other. I hold with the Senator that there can be no rule of the Senate which limits the prerogatives of the House. I hold with him that this rule of the Senate is in itself, if it were valid, a violation of the proper proceedings of each House.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida, if he will allow me, whether I understand him to assert that we can make a point of order upon a provision in the bill that comes to the Senate from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALL. No, sir; I do not assert that.

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad to hear the Senator's announcement.

Mr. CALL. I did not assert any proposition so unreasonable. I also say that we can not make a rule of the Senate which limits the sovereign constitutional prerogatives of the House, nor the House of the Senate. I say that therefore this rule was never intended to provide that that was general legislation which did not affect the whole body politic, but only a small part of it. The rule is simply a rule for the progress of business in this body, so that the appropriation bills shall not be interfered with by radical changes in the general laws which affect the entire body politic. That is all, nothing more nor less.

As to the point of order being raised, it is as obligatory upon this body when a proposition comes from the other House to this body here and the Senate of the United States undertakes to modify and change that proposition of the House by the introduction of an amendment relating to the general law as it would be if it had not come from the other House. The Senate may modify a proposition of the other House in any form it pleases, but when the Senate says that no amendment relating to general legislation shall be put upon an appropriation bill, it is as obligatory in reference to the provision of the other House, though it does not limit its sovereign power as a rule of proceeding, as if that bill had not come from the House and had originated in the Senate. Why, because it comes from the other House in no way affects the policy or the propriety of the question.

It is a question that upon an appropriation bill in view of the Senate, whether it be a provision of the House or the Senate, general legislation—that which affects the existing fundamental and general law—shall not be placed. As to the propriety of that rule, a hundred passages of a bill by the other House would not touch the question at all. If it be improper it is as much improper when the other House puts it there, and when the provisions of the bill come to the Senate it is as much obligatory, if we follow reason, as if the bill originated here. As a question of power, as a question of jurisdiction, as a question of constitutional right, no limitation can be put by any rule of this body upon the right of the other House to send any form of bill here they please, or to amend all the laws, or abolish all the laws upon an appropriation bill.

As a question of propriety of proceeding affirmed by the rules of the Senate, that the fundamental law shall not be altered; that the general law relating to the country at large shall not be affected upon an appropriation bill, the rule is just as applicable to a measure that comes from the other House as to any other. That is the distinction.

Mr. President, I say again, whether the point of order was raised or was not raised, the Senate Saturday affirmed that it was not general legislation to change the entire Treasury Department in its methods of business, in the number of its officers, to decrease some salaries and increase others, as a general law relating to all time and to the country; and to-day we are asked to decide—what? That a provision for seven States in relation to one particular evil affecting those States alone is general legislation affecting the whole nation.

I differ from my friend from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I think it is time for us to realize the fact that this is a country of 70,000,000 people, soon to be a hundred million, and questions that affect the subsistence, that affect the welfare of the whole people of the country other than mere matters of war, other than mere matters of personal protection, must have consideration and be controlled by the national councils.

What difference is there between the destruction of the people of the States of the West by an invasion of a military force or by pestilence or by famine produced by noxious elements there grown? The substance of the matter is that they should be protected against destruction, whether it comes by arms or by pestilence. Where a great national evil is being threatened, originating in those States, it ought to be suppressed, and I say, not knowing anything of the evidence in the case, that if it be true that some dangerous growth threatens the destruction of the agricultural interests of two or more States of the West, if that fact be ascertained, and the people of that great and growing section of the country need the national arm and the national protection for the preservation of the great agricultural interests, upon which all others depend, it is the plainest demand of wise counsels and of wise public policy that Congress should give that protection to them.

This view is confirmed and enforced by the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution. No State shall enter into any alliance or confederation. It therefore follows that if there shall be any great public evil which can only be remedied, prevented, or suppressed by the concerted actions of two or more States, it must be by the national Government, or remain a public evil unremedied.

Mr. PLATT. A single word more, Mr. President. I take it there is no question about the power of Congress to appropriate money in an appropriation bill by an amendment to an appropriation bill where there is no law existing at the time for the expenditure of the money. That has been done over and over and over again. But I rose for the purpose of calling attention to another instance, in which, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, a large appropriation was made for the purpose of transporting the mails in American-built vessels. I referred to one and said that that had been followed from that day to the present. That was in 1885. In 1886 the Committee on Appropriations reported this amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Republic of Mexico, Central and South America, the Sandwich, West India, and Windward Islands, New Caledonia, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies, China and Japan, $800,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance, in the most direct and feasible sailing course, between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

Pending debate,

Mr. HARRIS raised a question of order that the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and under clause 3, Rule XVI, it could not be received.

The President pro tempore overruled the question of order, and decided that the amendment was not general legislation on an appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule.

From the decision of the Chair, Mr. HARRIS appealed to the Senate; and

On the question, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

On motion by Mr. HOAR that the appeal lie on the table, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 30, nays 17.

If I had time, I could go through the Journal of the Senate from that day to this, and show that where an amendment proposes simply an appropriation and provides the method and means and conditions on which the appropriation shall be paid out from the Treasury, it has not been held to be a general appropriation or legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] makes the point that an appropriation with simply the necessary restriction as to its expenditure is always in order on an appropriation bill. I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order, even though it be only a specific appropriation with restrictions as to its disposition. It is not all appropriations that are in order, but simply appropriations. The rule says:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

I understand that this amendment was reported yesterday from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It was reported on Saturday last.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was "July 16" Saturday?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator that I understand one of the clerks made a mistake in transcribing the amendment and sent it to the Printer leaving out something; so it was reprinted again this morning, and that is the reason the Senator finds the date he mentions on the amendment. It was reported on Saturday last from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold the amendment is not in order, because it proposes general legislation; and if it be an amendment proposing general legislation, even though it be recommended by a standing committee of the Senate, it is not in order.

I say the amendment is not in order, further, because it is not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill.

Let us see what the amendment is. It reads:

For the destruction of the Russian cactus (technically Salsoli koli tragus), $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary—

What is to be done with it? It is—to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by Russian cactus—

There is a duty imposed upon the Secretary of Agriculture which is not imposed upon him by the existing law. Then the amendment continues—said apportionment to be made in accordance with the necessities of the case, to be ascertained by the Secretary—

There is another requirement of the Secretary of Agriculture not imposed by existing law—and to be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

Here is express legal authority, a new enactment, imposing upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority to pay to the governors of the States a given sum of money, and giving to the governors of the States the right to execute an obligation on behalf of their States and to receive the money, they not having any such power now. If such an amendment is not within the prohibition of the rule, I certainly know of no amendment which could be so.

I hope the Senate will decide that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that the Secretary of Agriculture has been for the past two years engaged in making investigations concerning this very pest; that he has already spent a large sum of money in that direction, and that the proposed legislation is predicated upon reports made to Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the pending question of order. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] in order?

Mr. MCLAURIN. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called) I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], and vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present I should vote "nay." I have, however, reserved the right to vote to make a quorum.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin] is absent from the Senate on account of the sickness of his wife. As has been stated, he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and as I see that he has not voted, I withdraw my vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I shall not vote unless my vote be necessary to make a quorum.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate decides that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota is in order.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I had very much hoped that the Senate would have held otherwise. I have been accustomed to legislation under a constitution which provides that the subject of every bill shall be expressed in its title, and also that bills appropriating money for general purposes shall not be connected with any other subject, or that no other subject shall be connected with them.

I confess I have been surprised at the liberality with which Rule XVI of the Senate has been interpreted in this body. I deprecated several amendments made by the Committee on Appropriations to appropriation bills. I have thought that there were radical changes made in existing laws in appropriation bills, which ought not to have been found in that connection. It is the rule of the Senate, however, now, the rule having been interpreted by the Senate that this amendment is in order.

Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of stating my objections to the amendment, to its purpose, its objects, and its methods. The destruction of noxious weeds and plants ordinarily belong to the States, and such communities as the States may authorize to engage in it. I do not agree that it is any part of the duty of the United States to engage in the suppression of the Russian cactus. I think that is an extension of the powers of the Federal Government to a limit that is without precedent, but precedents are not necessarily conclusive and do not necessarily control.

I object to this appropriation also on account of its inefficiency. I regard it as an attempt to waste $1,000,000 without doing any good. The amendment provides for the appropriation of $1,000,000, and that that $1,000,000 is to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by the Russian cactus.

Mr. President, who will undertake to find the exact boundaries of that test, its exact limitations, and its extensions? I can understand that there might be some authority given to the Secretary of Agriculture to make explorations and examinations, with a view of determining the limit, not necessarily State boundaries, that there might be some provision, if the money is to be so applied, that would enable the Secretary of Agriculture to discharge his duty intelligently; but the rule that is to govern the Secretary of Agriculture is the necessity of the case—that is to say, he is to determine as to the several States which are infested by the cactus; he is to determine the relative importance or the relative extent to which States are infected; he is to determine the relative difficulties or conveniences for the extirpation of the cactus. In fact, the amendment lacks to my mind but one essential condition at that point, and that is that this money should be employed by the Secretary of Agriculture under his own authority to effect this object.

But that is not all. It is further provided that these proportions, after having been determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, are—to be paid to the Governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

It will hardly be claimed by the Senator from North Dakota that it is within the power of Congress to impose that particular duty upon the governor of a State. It is an offer on the part of Congress of a sum of money which may be paid to the governor, and the governor may enter into an obligation on the part of his State, as this amendment reads, that his State will faithfully apply its proportion of the appropriation to the object of this measure.

Who will undertake to say that any governor of any State can be required to perform this duty? Who will say that any governor of any State has the power to engage his State in the discharge of any duty whatever? As a matter of course, the governor could not employ this money by his own authority. If we had the power to impose that duty upon him, all that the governor could do would be to appeal to the proper department of the State government, and ask their coöperation with him in this enterprise. But who will say that the governor of a State has the power to bind his State to do anything as a condition of paying over this money? How would it be in the State of Illinois if that State was afflicted with this particular nuisance? Where would this authority be found for the governor of the State of Illinois to enter into an engagement—something like a bond, I take it, with conditions—to undertake to bind his State to the discharge of those duties?

But there are still other difficulties about it. As I am informed as to the facts of this case, the United States owns very large bodies of land, and a very large quantity of land in the States which are supposed to be within the purview of this amendment. I understand that those lands are mountains, that they are plains, and that they are swamps, and that the Government has immense territories in those States. By what authority would the governor of a State enter upon the lands of the United States, and from what source would he derive his authority to invade them? I use the term "invade" in its legal, not in its military sense.

The seeds of this plant, as I understand, fly upon the winds; they go everywhere, and the mere clearing of one tract of land, or one county or one State, would be entirely ineffectual, because I am told, so far as we know, this injurious plant was brought into the Northwest by Russian immigration. The mere seed came without the knowledge of the owners of the baggage; they came with their baggage; they came with whatever those immigrants imported, and the weed has grown from time to time until it has taken possession of several States, or threatens to do so. Those seeds are borne upon the winds. They are like the seeds of many other plants with which we are familiar.

If under this appropriation there should be an apparent extirpation, if there was left a single plant upon a single quarter section of land, that plant would, in its turn, spread again over the whole country. Nothing but the most radical, thorough effort will extirpate this noxious plant.

Who has any confidence that this money would effect the object? I venture to say that this million dollars, if appropriated, would be something like the appropriation made by the Illinois Legislature for the destruction of the English sparrow. Three years ago the Legislature of Illinois provided a reward for the head of each English sparrow, and the small boy was put to work, and many thousands of the sparrows were destroyed. As I remember, when I was at home last year I heard the boys had been shooting around my neighborhood for months; but I found the English sparrow was still there. I do not know that this destruction actually increased the number, but there was no apparent decrease in the number of English sparrows which were seen. The appropriation was money wasted. So this will be.

If a scheme is to be adopted at all, it must be a radical scheme. In order to make it successful there must be a power somewhere to enter upon the land of any person, and whether that person is willing or not—although I can understand very well that we may presume that every man will consent that his premises may be invaded, and that his barnyards may be searched, and that his haystacks may be overthrown, if need be; that all those things may be done—but there is no authority anywhere to do it. The result would be that there would be carelessness, and perhaps there might be some who would refuse. We can not tell about that. Perhaps in some cliffs, where goats may go, and where no other animal can find a footing, these seed would fly in and take root and find a resting place, like the seed of the cottonwood, with which we are familiar, or the nettle; they might come flying along and fall on the mountain top or on the hillside in some out-of-the-way place and escape observation, and after awhile multiply and again spread.

Nothing will extirpate this pest, if it admits of extirpation, except the most painstaking care on the part of the people interested, or there may be one other mode. As I understand it, the money we appropriate is appropriated to be expended by the governors of the States. I have already adverted to the proposition that Congress has no right to impose that duty upon the governor of a State. He may decline, and I have spoken of the difficulty of his binding the State. I shall say no more on that point. It is a rule, however, which I have been accustomed to regard as very well established, that the United States can only perform its duties, assuming this to be a public duty or national duty, through agents of its own appointment, and that the duty must be imposed upon some person who would be subject to public or national reprehension if he should fail to discharge it.

Assuming that the governor gives his bond, assuming that he is able to secure the coöperation of the Legislature, what redress would the United States have for the money which has been paid over to him? Can it be said that the governor's bond would insure the return of the money? I understand the governor does not bind himself by this proposition. He binds his State, an impossible thing. But suppose he should accept the money and should fail to perform the duty; what would be the redress of the United States Government? Therefore if the extirpation of the Russian cactus is a duty to be discharged by national agency, by the Federal Government, the only effective mode of doing it is to appoint agents for the discharge of that duty who are responsible to the Federal Government for their failure to discharge their duty.

The provision, in my judgment, is lame and impotent. It is an appropriation of a million dollars for a purpose which will never be accomplished by its means. It is a waste of a million dollars. It is the exercise of a doubtful power; and if I had no doubts of the power I should insist upon some carefully considered statute which would in some way look in the direction of accomplishing the purpose for which the appropriation is made.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into a general discussion of this subject, but I should like to suggest a thought or two. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who has just addressed the Senate, has called attention to the difficulty of an efficient use of the money which it is proposed to place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he also refers to the large amount of labor, much of which may be more or less impracticable, entailed by the proposed legislation on the Department of Agriculture.

I think it will be much better for the Secretary to undertake an examination at least of the work that is to be done. We in Kansas have not yet been troubled any with the Russian thistle, so far as I am aware, but from gentlemen in the States infested by it, my information is that it is peculiar in many respects. The seed is collected in small bulbs or receptacles at the ends of branches. They dry, and the shell becomes very brittle and is easily broken. The plant spreads out, it branches widely, and with the swaying of the wind, which is constantly in operation more or less in that region, the plant as it dries breaks. The stalk becomes brittle, and will break off near the ground or the roots will come out of the ground entirely, as in the case of the weed which we call the tumble-weed in Kansas and Nebraska. The latter is known in Illinois, too.

These branching plants are rolled across the prairies and the fields, and will bound as they go along, striking little nodules, if I may so call them, on the surface of the earth or a post or a shrub or anything of that kind, and every time their progress is arrested suddenly, there is more or less seed settled upon the ground. In that way one of these plants, rolling across the country, will scatter seeds for miles and miles; and when there are a thousand or a million of them moving about the country it becomes a question of very great magnitude.

The appropriation may seem large, and probably but a very small proportion will ever be used, but if it should be necessary to use every dollar of it for the purpose of getting rid of such a plant, it will be well expended. We have spent millions upon millions, aye hundreds of millions of dollars, to construct highways, to open rivers, to improve harbors, to enlarge and multiply the facilities for commerce in different parts of the country, and this is one of the means of enlarging the area out of which the supplies of commerce are made.

I think that this particular subject and the irrigation of the semiarid lands or arid lands are just as much proper subjects of national legislation as the dredging of a river, the opening of a harbor, or the improvement of any other place or condition for purposes of national defense. It will not be long until the people of the Northwest and the West, through all of that splendid region extending from about the ninety-seventh degree of longitude to the coast-range mountains, will be a unit in asking assistance from the people of the United States, through the National Legislature to procure water which may be applied artificially to the lands for purposes of cultivation.

This is a great national question which interests every citizen of the country, not so much when we consider them as individuals as it does the individual persons interested in that section of the country. It has become evident, however, that no one man, or two men, or a hundred men, in any portion of the country can do anything effective by way of exterminating this plant, and that therefore it must be a large work, one which will comprehend a large area and a very considerable expenditure of money. It is practically throwing a large portion of that country open to the conquest of this weed, and the people, if they will help us, can relieve us from that condition. That is all that is asked for here. I hope the amendment in one form or another will be adopted, so that we can at least make a beginning in this work.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very sorry that my friend from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has insisted upon this amendment going into an appropriation bill. I find by the Senate Calendar that the bill (S. 1545) to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus, technically Salsola kali tragus, was reported favorably from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by the Senator from North Dakota, and is now pending here.

The pending amendment proposes that a large sum of money shall be appropriated, to be expended with scarcely any limitations or restrictions, for the destruction of the Russian cactus. That is an annual plant. It comes from the seed every year. Cut before the seeds have matured destroys the particular plant for all time to come. It is nothing compared with the cockleburr of Missouri and other States of the Mississippi Valley. I have no doubt the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] has some of those weeds in his State.

Mr. PALMER. A few.

Mr. COCKRELL. It takes two years to kill them out. The seed germinates once in each of two years, one part of the seed in one year and the other part in another year. We certainly ought to provide for the destruction of such a noxious plant. It is absolutely destructive to the wool of the sheep. It renders the wool comparatively worthless. It ought to be added to the amendment, it seems to me.

Then we have the Canada thistle, which ought to be added to the amendment, too. It is said to be equally destructive to agriculture as the Russian thistle is. I believe there are a number of States which have special laws compelling every owner of land and every road overseer to destroy the Canada thistle.

I find that a similar measure was pending elsewhere, and a similar bill, making a provision for this identical object, has been reported adversely elsewhere from another committee called a Committee on Agriculture. They do not take the same view of the question that the committee here take of the matter. I wish to read from a document upon our desks here what some other committee elsewhere say in regard to this matter.

The advocates of Congressional legislation, as proposed in these bills, not only asserted that the weed is the worst known to agriculturists, but that national aid and authority are necessary to secure its extermination. They presented statistics and evidence to show that it is rapid in growth; that each plant, through the almost unlimited quantity of seeds it matures and by the facility with which its ripened branches breaking from the main stem are driven by the wind, scattering its seeds over large areas of territory, is capable of reproducing itself with remarkable celerity, each new plant in its turn becoming a fresh source of seed supply. In this way it is claimed the thistle advances its frontiers of growth several miles each year, and it is generally believed that it is the most troublesome of all the weeds which infest the Western farms.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Russian thistle is an annual plant; that it dies each year and is propagated by seed only. It is evident, therefore, that if it is destroyed before its seeds ripen it can not reproduce itself.

Its extermination is certain if each farmer on his own lands will give sufficient care and attention to the destruction of these weeds before they mature, and if the State and local authorities will combine to destroy it in the same way on highways and lands not in private ownership. Several of the States have statutes providing for the destruction of the Canadian thistle and other weeds, and if those statutes are amended so as to include the Russian thistle, and if like statutes are enacted in other States, it is presumed no further legislation will be necessary.

The service required will not be exceedingly burdensome, but prompt and efficient work, and, possibly, a repetition of the means adopted to destroy the thistle will be necessary to fully eradicate it. It may be done either by turning it under with the plow or by mowing it as often as is needed to prevent its seeds from ripening.

The labor and expense necessary to rid farms of this thistle is much less than that required to clear land in many localities or to prepare rocky farms for successful cultivation in others or to exterminate the Canadian thistle where it has become firmly established.

Your committee are of the opinion that State and local authorities are fully able to eradicate this weed without national aid.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. From what does the Senator from Missouri read?

Mr. COCKRELL. I read from a report of a committee on agriculture somewhere else, not in this body.

In view of these facts, I hope the Senator from North Dakota will accept an amendment to include the cockleburr and the Canadian thistle. I believe my friend from Texas on my left has another noxious plant in his State which he wishes to add to the amendment, and it also is perfectly ineradicable by the ordinary means. But I make this suggestion to the Senator from North Dakota and I hope he will accept it, and even if such an amendment is accepted I hope the Senate will vote down the entire amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I wish to enter my protest against the amendment. It is a proposition to take out of the Treasury a million dollars for an experiment. This question was before another committee of the Senate, and it was said that the Congress of the United States has no power to enact a law to give this money to the individual farmers in the States which are infested with the thistle or cactus, and that, therefore, it is necessary to give it to the States, to do indirectly what could not be done directly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that any committee of the Senate has declared that Congress has not the authority to make this appropriation?

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir; I did not say that. I was repeating the argument which I heard.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I beg the Senator's pardon; I misunderstood him.

Mr. McLAURIN. The money which is to be appropriated is not our money. It belongs to the people of the country. It is taxed from them and put into the Treasury for purposes which are defined under the Constitution and the laws of the country. It is improper, it is not right, it is unjust, it is not within the purview of the Constitution of the country to take money out of the pocket of one man and give it to another, and it does not matter whether it is for the purpose of improving his farm, or what the purpose is.

It has been said by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] that this appropriation is for the purpose of benefiting the farmers, who of all others should be benefited. I can say to the Senator that no man in the Senate Chamber more deeply sympathizes with the farmers of the country than I do. I am one of them. I have been one all my life, and my sympathy is with them. But I do not believe that it is right to tax the farmers in one section of the country in order to give money to another farmer for the purpose of improving his land. It is not right to tax the farmer in the State of Mississippi, or the State of Ohio, or the State of New Jersey, or the State of Alabama, or any other State in the Union to improve the farm of the farmers in the State of North Dakota or any other State in the Union, and I object to it. It is true that if this noxious weed is destroyed the farms and the farmers of the Northwest will be benefited, but it is not right to tax the farmers in my State or the State of Florida for that purpose. It is not right to tax the farmer in any portion of the country for that purpose.

Now, when you come to talk about this noxious weed, there is in my section a grass equally injurious to the farm. It is the cocoa grass. We have the cockleburr there and we have cocoa grass. If such amendments are to be engrafted upon the bill, I wish to have the pending amendment amended by providing that the money shall also be used for the purpose of exterminating the cocoa grass. It is just as right, it is just as proper, because when the cocoa grass once gets its footing upon the land of any farmer, the land is gone for all practical purposes and especially for all farming purposes, and it, too, ought to be eradicated and destroyed.

Do not Senators see where this thing leads? It is not so much the million of dollars to be thrown away in the experiment to which I object, although I do not know that we have a million dollars to throw away, but it is the dangerous precedent which is set, because if you set the precedent of improving a man's farm which is infested with the Russian cactus, you ought to improve the other man's farm by destroying the cocoa grass. You ought to destroy the cockleburr; you ought to destroy the crab grass, and you ought to destroy every other grass which is hurtful to the cultivation of the farm in any section of the country. The appropriation ought not to be made.

I remember that yesterday there was a proposition to make a lump sum appropriation of $49,000. There was great objection to it because it was a lump sum. To-day the very Senators who opposed that appropriation are willing to appropriate a lump sum of $1,000,000, more than twenty times as much. It seems, therefore, that it is not so much an objection to a lump sum, but to the size of it. If a Senator comes here and offers to appropriate a lump sum of $49,000, there is great objection to it and it is voted down by the Senate. But when another Senator comes into the Senate and proposes an amendment to appropriate a lump sum of $1,000,000, there is no objection raised to it at all by the very Senators who took part in voting down the other appropriation of a lump sum. On the contrary, they advocate it and vote for it.

I for one enter my protest against this measure. I enter my protest against it because I do not think it is proper to take out of the Treasury of the United States, for the purpose of making an experiment, money which is put there by the taxation of all the people of the country for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Government. If this is a noxious weed, if it is disastrous to the people of those States, and I believe there are only four or five of them who claim so, let the States themselves destroy it. Let the owners of the farms, who will be benefited by its destruction, destroy it, and not call for the taxation of other people in order to destroy it for them, and thus improve their farms.

I am in favor especially of State's rights, and one of the rights I am in favor of preserving to the States is that every State shall be allowed to destroy the Russian thistle within its own borders.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who strenuously objects to the amendment, has referred to the fact that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has already reported a bill on this subject, and that the bill is now upon the Calendar. That is true. I found, however, and other members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry found, that there was serious objection on the other side of the Chamber to the bill, for the reason that it provided that the Secretary of Agriculture should make contracts with the people in the States infested by the Russian cactus. It was said that it would be an interference with States rights.

For that reason, on last Saturday, I submitted the question to the Committee on Agriculture as to whether it would not be best to meet upon a common ground and have a compromise measure of some kind on this question. A majority of the committee agreed that it should be so, and the amendment reported by me is the result of that agreement.

The Senator from Missouri says he proposes to introduce an amendment to my amendment providing for the destruction of that old-time enemy of the farmer, the cockleburr, and then another amendment for the destruction of the Canadian thistle.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not propose to introduce such amendments. I suggested them to the Senator, and expressed the hope that he would accept them and incorporate them in his amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I wish to say to the Senator, however, that I can not accept amendments of that kind to this amendment, for the very reason that the pests he refers to are simply local inflictions, while the Russian thistle is a great national infliction. The seed of the Russian cactus was brought to this country by Russian immigrants who came here under laws enacted by the American Congress. It is a national pest, and it should be dealt with as such by the National Government.

I will state to the Senate that within the last five or six years, time, the time in which the thistle has become obnoxious and troublesome, it has spread over the better part of seven of the great agricultural States west of the Mississippi River. It continues to spread and is on its way to other States where the lands are chiefly prairie lands, and it will be but a short time before every agricultural State in the United States will be infested by it.

The thistle is not only an affliction upon the grain fields of this country, but it is entirely ruinous to the wool industry wherever it is found. The spines and seeds of the thistle coming in contact with the fleeces of the sheep completely ruin them. I make this statement in reply to a statement made by the Senator from Missouri to the effect that the cocklebur is injurious to wool. The Russian thistle is much more so, in my judgment.

Mr. McLAURIN. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment by inserting in line 3, before the word "one," the words "and cocoa grass."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had not intended to occupy the attention of the Senate in the discussion of this very interesting topic, and I rise now only to make an observation or two in answer to the position taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] in his advocacy of what he is pleased to call States rights. That is a subject which is rather threadbare these days. It has been called upon to do service in so many different directions during the last thirty years in this country that I am not surprised to hear it urged against the amendment just proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the pending bill. The Senator from Mississippi takes the broad ground that the farmers of his section of the country ought not to be asked to contribute any taxes or any portion of money which is to be used for the benefit of the farmers in other sections of the country.

Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that our legislation is constanly destroying that beautiful theory which our Southern friends always call to our attention when it answers their purpose, I do not know that I should say a single word. But I am reminded of the fact that a herd of cattle suffering from pleuro-pneumonia in Mississippi is destroyed; it is destroyed under Federal laws; the Treasury of the United States is called upon to pay for the cattle, and the farmers of New Hampshire pay their proportion. I am reminded of the fact that under the Federal statutes we appropriate money in vast sums, millions of dollars, for the purpose of exterminating yellow fever and cholera, which never infest the Northern States, to protect largely the people of the Gulf States from those pestilences which come and carry off their citizens in thousands and tens of thousands.

Yet when we come to support the Marine Hospital Service the people of my section of the State pay their share in taxes without regard to the question whether they have derived any benefit from it or not. I might go on and enumerate statute after statute that is to-day the law of the land whereby the people of one section of the country, not benefited a farthing, contribute their share to meet the obligations of the Government in destroying things that are obnoxious to the welfare of our people in entirely different sections of the country.

But, Mr. President, the mere suggestion of the matter ought to be sufficient. I am somewhat surprised, I say again, that in the discussion of a question of this kind the ancient, threadworn, and somewhat unpopular doctrine of State rights is to-day invoked. I have had my doubts as to the propriety of this legislation, but it has not been upon the ground that it invaded the rights of Mississippi or New Hampshire. I shall vote for the amendment believing that the Government has precisely the same constitutional right to appropriate money to protect the people of the great agricultural States of the Northwest from this noxious weed that the Government has to protect the interstate commerce of the country, or to protect the cattle of one State from diseases that may possibly be communicated by infection in herds of cattle in some other State.

If there is any well-settled principle in this matter it is that the legislation we have approved, covering a period of a great many years on questions that are on all fours with this proposed legislation, gives us the clear constitutional right to do what the amendment asks us to do.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I do not think that Congress has ever failed to vote money for any necessary purpose for the people in the States where there is such an emergency that one State itself can not successfully overcome the difficulty.

The Senator from New Hampshire has alluded to the matter of pleuro-pneumonia. In 1883 or 1884 the National Live Stock Growers' Association sent a committee to Congress asking for an appropriation to crush out pleuro-pneumonia in several of the States. The objection was then urged that Congress has no right to go into States and interfere with private property; that it was unconstitutional to vote money for this purpose. Congress did, however, appropriate, I think, the first year $500,000, and continued the appropriation for several years, until that disease was successfully stamped out in the United States. They accomplished in the United States in less than ten years what Great Britain had not been able to do in half a century. It greatly advanced the live-stock interests of this country, because it removed certain restrictions in foreign countries against the meat products of the United States.

It is too late in the day to present the constitutional question against the appropriation of money for this purpose. We vote money to buy seeds to distribute in the several States. All the people of the country contribute the money to buy the seeds. We vote money to discover means to destroy the tobacco worm. We vote money to destroy the cotton worm. Cotton is a product that is grown in only one section of our country.

Unfortunately, the weed or plant under consideration, which is not indigenous to our soil, got into the State of South Dakota. It is not worth while to question how it came there. In a very few years it has spread, I will not say over seven States, but it has spread so as to get into seven States. It does not make much difference what South Dakota does by itself, it can not destroy this plant in the United States. There must be a coöperation of States. In other words, it has passed beyond the control of States, and the United States must take the matter up and legislate upon it or the weed is likely to spread over every State in the American Union.

The amendment is certainly guarded in its terms. First, the use of the money is left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. He is to find out and determine certain things and then using his best judgment he may appropriate the money to the several States where the weed is found provided the governor of the State gives sufficient bonds to the United States to guarantee the use of the money honestly and for the purpose for which it was appropriated. It is not likely that any State infested with the weed will fail to legislate on the subject and pass laws which will be directory, and the governor will be compelled to execute those laws as he is compelled to execute other laws in the State.

Now, it is true it is but an experiment. If it succeeds the money is well expended. If it is a failure there will be only this amount of money lost and Congress will not further appropriate money for this purpose.

I recollect but a few years ago comparatively the grasshopper plague came upon the plains. Grasshoppers swept down into the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys and destroyed millions of dollars' worth of growing crops. Congress immediately appointed commissions and appropriated money to determine if there was any mode of prevention or any way by which the eggs of the insect could be destroyed.

When there is an emergency in the country I believe it is right for Congress to appropriate money to overcome that emergency or to meet it. It does not make very much difference for what purpose, whether to stay the yellow fever or to stop a disease which is destroying the herds and flocks of the country, it is right that Congress should appropriate money for it, making all the time the reservation that the money is not to be expended if the State is able to do it itself, and in doing it is enabled to prevent reinfection, I may say, or the renewal of the weed in the State, as in this case; but here more than one State must take hold of the matter or the remedy can not be effective.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. In how many States does the Russian cactus now exist?

Mr. CAREY. I have not the map before me, but as I recollect the map which was prepared at the office of the Secretary of Agriculture it has spread through seven States from a few seed in South Dakota.

Mr. McLAURIN. Which are the States?

Mr. CAREY. South Dakota, North Dakota, Nebraska; I think there is a little of it in Kansas, some in Wyoming; I do not know whether it is in Montana or not——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state, in addition to that, it is now in the State of Minnesota and also in Wisconsin.

Mr. McLAURIN. With the Senator's permission, I will ask him one other question. Is there any State of those seven not able to cope with this infection or calamity, or whatever it is to be called?

Mr. CAREY. I believe each State would be able itself to suppress it as it now exists in the State; but suppose South Dakota should go to work, it would do South Dakota no good, because the windstorms would seed the State again. So it would do North Dakota no good to spend the money unless South Dakota and the surrounding States should join in the effort. If anything at all is to be done the weed must be absolutely eradicated in the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is there one of those seven States that would not coöperate with the other six States?

Mr. CAREY. Perhaps not; but I have never known any two States in the American Union to start out and coöperate to perform a work which it is clearly the duty of the United States to do. You can not get seven States to act together. It must be done under one head, and some well-devised plan must be carried out to make it a success.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understood the Senator to say that it was first the duty of a State, and only the duty of the United States when the States themselves could not cope with the difficulty.

Mr. CAREY. I say an individual State can not cope with it.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is it not first the duty of the seven States themselves to destroy the weed before calling upon the United States to do it?

Mr. CAREY. No; it is not the duty of the seven States.

Mr. McLAURIN. You think not?

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to answer a little more fully upon that point?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. It seems to me the strongest argument in favor of the Government appropriating money for this purpose has been overlooked. The States will to a certain extent coöperate. It is true, as the Senator from Wyoming has said, that if one county alone attempts to exterminate the weed it is absolutely useless, because the weed is peculiar to itself. It is no more like any other weed than a tree is like an ordinary weed in the field. It is a distinctive weed; it is sui generis. It grows by a small tap root and then branches out in bell-shape as large as an ordinary tub. As soon as it becomes ripe it loosens from the ground and goes traveling over the prairies for a distance of 20 miles, like the ordinary tumbleweed. It will roll from county to county, and it is rolling from State to State. During the period of fifteen years it has covered over seven States.

Now, as to why the Government should interfere to help out the seven States which have been mentioned. In those States there are to-day 125,000,000 acres of public lands which the Government of the United States owns, and is therefore responsible to that extent for the extermination of that noxious weed. The public lands are scattered all through these States, not in any particular portion of any one State, but through them all. Were the States themselves to attempt the extermination of the noxious weed, it would nevertheless grow upon Government ground and would roll back again upon cultivated farms, and the whole work would have to be done over again. As far as I can see, the appropriation of this lump sum of $1,000,000, distributed among the States, will be no more than the just proportion, in consequence of the public lands that are in these various States, that the Government itself should bear toward the total expense of exterminating the weed.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to ask him a question? Has any one of those States appropriated money and undertaken to exterminate this weed?

Mr. KYLE. I will state that we have noxious-weed laws in all our Western States. I know that the noxious-weed law in South Dakota includes the Russian thistle, but it is next to impossible for the State to attempt to exterminate the weed. We have tried it in various portions of the State, but in a period of one year it will spread a distance of 60 or 80 miles.

Mr. McLAURIN. Has there been an appropriation made by any of those States for the extermination of this weed, and if so, how much?

Mr. KYLE. We do not make a specific appropriation, except that we have a general law by which the road supervisors and county commissioners are asked and required to look after the weeds. The appropriations, I believe, are ordinarily made for this purpose out of the county treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CAREY. I have only one more sentence to add, and then I will yield the floor. I was going to speak further with reference to pleuro-pneumonia. New York City had appropriated a great deal of money; New Jersey had appropriated a great deal of money; the State of Illinois and various other States of the Union had appropriated money to try to get clear of this disease among neat cattle in the United States. They failed for the reason that when the disease was eradicated in one State it was immediately brought there from adjoining States. There was no uniform action by the States. As soon as the United States took hold of the matter and adopted a uniform plan and the States joined with the Government, there was no further controversy about entering States and interfering with private property. Where the Government was compelled to destroy neat cattle in a State it appraised them and paid for them. The United States succeeded in that case where States had failed for years. In this case the condition is very similar so far as this noxious weed is concerned. This is all I have to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I find myself compelled, after a very careful and patient examination of this question, to reverse the opinion which I originally held; and as a result of the vote this morning upon the point of order indicates very clearly that I am with a very small minority of my party—only three or four, upon this question—I believe it my duty not only for my own visdication, but also for the elucidation of this question before the Senate, to say something upon the merits of this very much misunderstood amendment.

A bill was introduced sometime ago by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] which I deemed unconstitutional. It proposed to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to enter upon private land and there go to work for the purpose of exterminating this thistle. I did not believe we had the power to make any such entry upon private property. I did think, and I so expressed myself at the time, that we have the power to make an appropriation in aid of any State action that might be taken on the subject. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] prepared an amendment which embodied the ideas which I entertain on this subject. The pending amendment substantially embodies the same ideas.

The question now before the Senate is not, as has been supposed, whether we shall go into the State and with Federal money and Federal power undertake to improve the farms of the State. Nothing of that sort is intended. On the contrary, as was well suggested by the Senator from South Dakota, there is a larger question, a question which does not appeal simply to the charitable sentiments of the American Congress on this subject, but which raises the question as to what we ought to do, what we are bound to do, what as honest and honorable men, representing the Government which owns property in the affected States, we are bound to do in aid of the local authorities in exterminating a pest which equally affects the Government property as well as the property of the private citizen.

As was stated by the Senator from South Dakota, in the six or seven States in which this pest now is doing so much injury, the Government of the United States owns over 125,000,000 acres of land. The ownership of this land imposes upon us duties as well as confers upon us rights.

It so happens that this peculiar pest—and I want the Senate and the country to understand this—is not of the character of the pest of cocoa grass, mentioned by my colleague, and which is a very serious pest in the State of Mississippi. It is of such a peculiar character that if you do not destroy it wholly in a very large district, it soon occupies by the aid of the winds all the uninfested territory within that neighborhood; a neighborhood, as well remarked by the Senator from South Dakota, extending in a circle the diameter of which is 120 miles, the radius 60 miles. So I want the Senate to understand that there is no sentimentality in this matter. It is a question of business; it is a question of honor; it is a question of honesty, whether we, the United States, owning 125,000,000 acres of land in the infested district, will sit down quietly and fold our arms and leave to a struggling and poor community, as new States always are, the great burden not only of exterminating this pest from their own land, but of keeping the public lands free from it. I assert as an undeniable proposition both in constitutional law and in moral law that we, as proprietors, are under as much obligation to contribute our share to the protection of our property as private individuals are.

Now, let us see whether the facts sustain my individual view. If the pest be exterminated on one quarter section with all the sedulous care of the most careful farmer, it is immediately reseeded by the cactus growing on the next quarter section. So it is utter folly to waste the time and the money and the energy of the private owners unless some system can be inaugurated which not only embraces him, but also all other private owners; and not only all private owners, but all owners of all the land upon which this pest may get a foothold and from which it may spread over the surrounding country.

Do Senators understand what sort of a pest the Russian cactus is? Do they suppose it is a noxious weed only, choking up the growth of a crop, and when dug down and eradicated upon a particular farm it is destroyed so far as that farm is concerned? Do they understand, as was intimated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], when he asked the Senator from North Dakota to accept an amendment to this amendment to eradicate tumble grass and cocklebur, that this is a mere excrescence produced by cultivation and infesting to some extent all the crops of the country? If they do, they are mistaken.

Sir, I propose to go into the history of this pest, not only for the purpose of my own vindication in this matter, but that the Senate may see if they vote this appropriation of $1,000,000 they not only do a constitutional thing, but they do a just and righteous thing. The weed is indigenous in the Russian Empire, and I will state the history of the pest as shown in the papers which I have before me. It has become so far the master of the owners of the land in the section in which it grows as to have compelled the abandonment by the farmer of large sections of the country. The people in Russia, where it started, used to toil, used to self-denial, used to labor without fair and just compensation, in the struggle with this pest were compelled to surrender their homes and their farms and flee to other sections of the country. The same is true of our own country, for the papers before me show that in very many places the farmers have been compelled to surrender to this enemy and abandon their homes.

How did the pest get here? This is a point which the Senate ought not to overlook. It was imported. That is the history. About fifteen years ago it came through United States ports and found its lodgment near Yankton, in the State of South Dakota. Is the State of South Dakota responsible for the introduction of this pest through the imports into her borders?

Sir, if you read the Constitution of the United States the first thing you see is that the regulation of imports is wholly a matter of national concern. So it was the fault of the United States in the administration of national laws that they allowed this pest to come within our borders and to afflict our fellow-citizens. Does that not impose a superadded moral obligation upon the same Government, which, through its negligence and the negligence of its citizens, introduced this pest to destroy, as I shall show before I get through, the farmers of the Northwest? Does not that increase an obligation of a moral character that the same Government should lend a helping hand to those who may have been thus afflicted?

But more than that. It is here through our fault; it is here through imports, which were solely under the regulation of the National Government, and over which the States of North and South Dakota and their sister States in that community had no control. What clearer point of constitutional law than that they not only had no power to keep this pest out of the borders of the American Union, when imported from abroad, but they had no power, if they knew it, to prevent it coming from one State to another.

Let us stop and reflect upon the condition of affairs. Here fifteen years ago was a new community, a Territory of the United States; its broad acres had been very lately taken or purchased from the Indian tribes, and for what purpose? For settlement and cultivation by the white man.

The United States through their laws invited immigration, invited the hardy sons of our land to leave the more settled portions of our Union, and to go into a bleak, hard climate, but upon a generous soil, to seek to rebuild their fortunes. We sold them the land, and at the same time that we gave them this invitation to go to these broad prairies and build again their fortunes, we, by our negligence, introduced this terrible pest. What was the result? It started in one place in South Dakota, and now, from the papers which are before me, it appears that over 40,000 square miles of American territory are infested by this pest, an area nearly as large as the State of Mississippi.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Senator will permit me, I think it is more nearly 75,000 square miles.

Mr. GEORGE. It is spreading with such terrible and tremendous rapidity that a statement made a year ago as to the area occupied would be incorrect to-day. The last investigation I made upon the subject put it at 40,000 square miles; but how does it spread? Let us see how these hardy sons of toil, whom we had invited to go into these far Western States for the purpose of extending American civilization and American institutions, were treated. They got there, they settled on the lands; we allowed the pest to get there, and what was the result? In fifteen years it has traveled into seven States, and it is extending year by year, and I warn Senators from my own section of the country that, unless its progress is stopped, it will know no boundary to its progress except the Gulf of Mexico. It has already got to Kansas, then it will go to the plains south of that State, and then to the plains of Texas. It is going with, I might almost say, a terrific rapidity.

What is the proposition of this amendment? It is said you are improving the farms of these people, and you have no right to do that. Sir, that man's farm upon which the destruction of this cactus may take place adjoins the public domain; he destroys every vestige of the cactus, and in the next season, with the wiods which prevail, it is reseeded, or in other words, without a destruction of this cactus the work of the farmer in those States in destroying it is but the rolling up of the ball of Sisyphus, and as soon as it gets to the top it rolls down again; and are we, with 125,000,000 acres of land to be the nursery, the reservoir of this infernal—I think I have a right to call it by that name—pest of the American farmer, are we to say that, to save our 125,000,000 acres, we will put the whole burden upon the pioneer who, at our invitation, left the Eastern portion of our country for the purpose of subduing the wilderness of the Western country? That is the question. I have shown that he can not do it.

Then, if we are not to be moved by the consideration which ought always to affect and move a statesman in a free country by the consideration of the hard destiny and lot of our fellow-citizens, and especially if we are to steel our bosoms against any cry of help from the helpless, let that be so, and we will discuss it upon the simple proposition of proprietorship.

One hundred and twenty-five million acres of land and $1,000,000; and what is that? Less than 1 cent an acre does this bill propose to give for the protection of this immense domain of Government land? Cut out the consideration to the farmer, though he is engaged in subduing that wilderness of the West to civilization and to prosperity and advancement, say we care nothing for him, I think we, as proprietors of this land, ought to care for the interests of the aggregate American people.

Mr. President, this pest does not spread on land which is uncultivated except in spots; I want to be fair about it, but wherever there is any disturbance of the soil, wherever there has been the feeding of cattle, by which the turf of the prairie is beaten down, there it comes. I have before me a statement, which is and ought to be conclusive that whilst the seeds do not germinate on the thick, untrodden, uncleared prairie soil, yet they nestle in the grass and at the very first time the plow of the farmer is introduced for the purpose of upturning this sod, then the seed come up. Are we not interested as proprietors in exterminating a pest which thus afflicts our property? It seems so to me.

What precedents have we for this action? What have we been doing from the very beginning of the Government down to the present time with reference to the public domain, except making appropriations in land or money for the purpose of improving and advancing the public domain? What mean all these railroad grants? I take not the extravagant and wasteful grants made by the Republican party after they came into power, but the grants made by the Democratic party to railroad companies of each alternate section for 6 miles. What did that mean except to devote a part of the national property for the purpose of benefiting the remainder?

But, Mr. President, as a Southern man I have a word to say about it in that aspect of the case. Allusion has been made to the fact that we are taxing people far distant from the denizens of the cold and bleak Northwest for the purpose of improving their farms. I deny that. First, I deny that such is the main purpose of the amendment. That the farmers in that section get an incidental benefit from an appropriation to protect the national property I rejoice.

I am always happy when, in pursuing a line of policy for the protection of the general, universal good, without reference to section, whether North or South, East or West, when pursuing that plain, constitutional, just policy, if it results that incidental benefits come to the citizens of the United States in any part of this great country. My own State has been the recipient of millions of dollars from the National Treasury, is receiving it now, and has been for years, coming from the principle I have just advocated. We build levees on the Mississippi River. Why and how? If I were to get up here and ask an appropriation to build levees on the Mississippi River for the sole purpose of protecting the land of the owners in the Mississippi delta, I should be met with the argument that the Government can not tax the people of the whole country for the purpose of benefiting the private owners of property who happen to live in that delta.

But see how the analogy is. The United States are the owners of the Mississippi River; it is a great public highway, and it is a part of the jurisdiction and the power of the United States to keep that river improved, and I am glad to say that, with all the conflict of sectional passion and sectional prejudice, I have not heard it suggested from the other side of the Chamber when an appropriation was asked for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the building of levees on the Mississippi River, in order to make that improvement, that it should not be done because that appropriation resulted also in benefit to the private owners of land. On the contrary, Mr. President, I thank God that I have lived to see the day after the civil war when I have discovered that this incidental benefit to the owners of land in Mississippi, in Arkansas, and in Louisiana but added zest to the action of Northern men in voting appropriations to build levees. Shall I proceed to read all the testimony I have here? I ought at least to read some of it, for I differ with my party upon this amendment. There are only about four of us who favor it. Right here I should remark—I do not know whether it is to the honor of the American Senate or not—that I have discovered in a service of about thirteen years in the Senate, that a vote on a question of order has always, without a single exception I believe, exhibited exactly the feeling of the Senate as to the measure involved. A vote taken on a point of order discloses how we stood on this amendment.

I do not claim any exemption from the rule I have stated, although I thought if there was anything that according to the rules of the Senate was in order on an appropriation bill, it was the amendment under consideration; and for this reason, unless the rule of the Senate means—and I state an argument now which can not be answered—that you can not add an appropriation to an appropriation bill, then this amendment is in order. It is nothing more than an additional appropriation, with provisions right and proper for its execution.

I want to read a letter to the Senate to show that I have not exaggerated in the statement which I have made about this subject. I read an extract from a letter written by the governor of North Dakota. He says:

> I can assure you that no effort will be spared on the part of North Dakota to eradicate the pest, by township, county, and State assistance; but we do not expect to accomplish the task without Government aid, as our people are poor, our farms are heavily mortgaged, and unless help can be had from the Government these farmers will become discouraged and abandon the land to Eastern mortgagees. Our State debt limit has been reached. Three years time will be required to change our constitution, and in the meantime the cactus will take our country. The counties that are suffering most from this pest have had but two good crops in the past five years. They are in bad condition financially, but will do all they can by individual, township, and county aid.

There is the testimony of the governor of North Dakota. Now, let me give you some testimony as to the nature of this pest from an official of the United States. This is no new thing with the Department of Agriculture, for it has been examining and investigating this subject for years. Here is the statement of the botanist of the Agricultural Department:

> A study of this question for the past two years by the Department of Agriculture shows conclusively that the progress of this weed can be stopped only by concerted action during the same season or seasons over the whole infected area. The facts at present in hand show also that the progress of the Russian thistle is rapid, and that if any determined action is to be taken against it, it may be done far more economically in the immediate future than after the expiration of a few years. It is undoubtedly true that if the progress of the weed is not stopped the damage caused by it in future years will annually reach $25,000,000.

There is another statement, made by the same gentleman, Mr. Coville, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. He says:

> The damage already done by the Russian thistle is without question slight in comparison with the damage which will be done by it if its progress is not soon checked. It is a weed peculiarly adapted to the great wheat-raising portions of the United States, and its advent is ominous of an overwhelming calamity to that region.

I have also another witness, going outside of the officials of the Government. I read now an extract from a letter from Prof. W. M. Hays, published in the Farm, Stock, and Home. I wish I could read the entire letter, because every word of it ought to be listened to by the Senate and well weighed before any Senator votes against this appropriation. Prof. Hays says of its rapid spread:

> Nearly two years ago the Department of Agriculture at Washington was advised, by the writer and others, of the desirability of its making a thorough study of this weed, and in the fall of 1892 Mr. L. H. Dewey was sent out by Secretary Rusk to investigate. He published a commendable bulletin on the subject, though did not suggest as heroic measures for its eradication as the present writer believes imperative.

> It is now spreading very rapidly in two ways. The great body of weeds extend annually 10 miles by the wind blowing the ripe weeds in the same way as the common tumble weeds are carried across the country. In grain, bedding in stock cars, and in other ways they are distributed along railways radiating from the infested district. These new centers serve to spread the weed far and wide. A band of them may be seen along many railroads, even as far as 300 miles from the great Dakota weed patch.

It has got across the Missouri River; it has got into Kansas; and, as I have before remarked, it is pressing with fearful rapidity upon the Southern section of this country.

I have not argued the constitutional question involved in this amendment. If I were to go into that I could cite statutes by the hundred showing the power of Congress to make appropriations of this kind. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the appropriations made for the Agricultural Department itself, from the Secretary of Agriculture down to the very lowest employé, stand upon the same constitutional authority as does this proposed appropriation.

The Agricultural Department exercises none of the functions of government. Take the whole list which I have in my hand of granted powers contained in the Constitution of the United States in all the clauses of section 8 of Article I, to levy taxes, to borrow money, to regulate commerce, to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies, to coin money, to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, to establish post-offices and post-roads, to promote the progress of science by granting letters-patent, to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a Navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to provide for calling forth militia, to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, to exercise exclusive power over the District of Columbia. When you read them all you will have every governmental function conferred upon the National Government; and in them you do not find any power to establish an Agricultural Department, to make inquiry as to the progress of the crops, to distribute seed among the American people, to suppress pleuro-pneumonia, and all that sort of thing. All these come outside of and under another authority in the Constitution, and that is the power of appropriation, when you have no power of jurisdiction, provided only the appropriation is made to general subjects, and does not amount to a mere gift to private individuals. The first law upon that subject was passed under the Administration of Gen. Washington. The statute books are from that day to this full of appropriations made outside of carrying out the specific powers granted to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I believe I have given fully the reasons which influence me in casting the vote which I shall cast in this matter; but, before I sit down, I suppose I might be indulged in making an additional remark not exactly pertinent to the amendment, but connected with the general duties of a Senator of the United States. In my youth, before I had a beard upon my face, it was my fortune to have assisted in planting the American standard upon the walls of Monterey.

Afterwards it was also my fortune to bear arms against the flag which I helped to plant upon the walls of Monterey. It was also my fortune, sad as it was, after the war was over, to undergo, in common with the people of the section from which I come, four or five years of the most infernal rule with which a civilized people were ever cursed. I lived through that. I lived to see civil disabilities removed from the Southern people. I have lived to see this side of the Chamber by a very large majority filled by men who have also borne arms against the Government. I have met, since I have been here, some instances of harsh, bitter, unjust sectional argumentation, crimination and recrimination, but I have lived to see, and I am very glad to be able to say it, that where once I heard criminations and recriminations I do not hear them now.

I have lived to see the time when a question comes up in the Senate which affects the section from which I come that I not only find Northern Democrats, God bless them, affiliating with me, sympathizing with me, but I find also that Northern Republicans are exhibiting a forgetfulness of the bitter animosities of the past and are joining with us in upbuilding our common country and the Southern part of it, when that part alone is in question.

It is a pleasure to me, and it is not, sir, the least of the pleasure either which I have to-day in performing the duty which I have performed that as a Southern man I have been able to stretch the hand of friendship and sympathy to the suffering farmers of the Northwest, who, with the other farmers of the country, have led the way in breaking down sectional animosities, and in restoring among our people the feeling of a common brotherhood.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, we are not without an experience in the country of the character of this pest. I doubt not that all the country is inflicted by what is known as the English or Canada thistle. It prevails to an unfortunate extent in my section of the country, and every farmer there knows how injurious it is to his land and how nearly impossible it is to eradicate it. The agricultural papers tell you that the Canada thistle, so called, can be destroyed by plowing the ground every month or so, thereby preventing the plant from showing its head above the ground. I have never known that to kill it, possibly because of the difficulty of having the work regularly performed. It is most easily extended. Your lands may be free from it to-day, and because of the carelessness of a neighbor you find it on your farm to-morrow; and when it is there it is there to stay. It is a small plant. It is nowhere so easy of propagation and extension as the Russian thistle. It does not grow so tall. The Russian thistle is large in its growth, and when it comes to maturity the wind takes it, and, rolling it over, it is spread rapidly in a continually extending area. But its power of propagation does not stop there.

As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] pointed out, this plant was brought from Russia to the United States, and to that part of the United States which constitutes the western extremity of our agricultural land east of the Rock Mountains, and that is the center of infection now for the country. As it was easy to be brought from Russia to the Dakotas, it can as easily be brought from the Dakotas to the East. We of the East need not felicitate ourselves that because it is so far it is not so near. I know that the farmers of my section to-day hesitate, if they do not refuse, to purchase bran and other feed for their cattle from the Minneapolis mills, because they are afraid that the seeds of the thistle might thereby be brought to this part of the country. It operates as a bar upon commerce, and a bar upon the sale of the products of the section of country which is infected. It is a threat of the first magnitude, and will bring upon us a disaster incalculable if it cannot be stopped.

Mr. President, the serious question is whether it is in the power of the United States Government, with all its resources put forth without stint and unremittingly, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, in coöperation with the States, to stamp it out. If a single thistle is allowed to remain on any farm in any part of the country it remains a continuing threat. That is the character of this weed, and in the light of such facts it is idle for Senators to hesitate a second as to what we should do. We not only should make the appropriation, but we should do it quickly and gladly.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, I shall undertake to answer the arguments which have been made by the Senators in the order in which they have spoken.

As to the point made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the General Government has appropriated money for the prevention of the spread of yellow fever and cholera, which are peculiarly diseases of the South, I desire to state, first, that when I entered the Senate I felt that while I was here to represent the interests of the State which sent me here, I should do it by legislating, so far as I took part in legislation, for the whole country. I entered the Senate with a patriotism which extended to every section of the United States, and I am not here speaking for Mississippi alone; I am speaking for the American people and for their Government.

But I can conceive that there is a vast difference between quarantining by the United States Government against the introduction of infectious diseases into the country and the appropriation of money by the Government out of the Treasury for the benefit of individuals in any section of the country for the improvement of the private property of individuals. I shall insist, before I shall have concluded, that notwithstanding the learned and able effort made by my colleague, this is an appropriation of public money for the improvement of private property. This disposes of the objection which was made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The point made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], as I understood it, is that it is not impossible for each individual State infested with this noxious weed to destroy it within its own borders, but that it is impossible to obtain the coöperation of the seven States which are so afflicted. Therefore, the argument is that there must be an appropriation by the General Government in order that it may extend over all the territory of these seven States and destroy this thistle at once. But let us examine the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. It says:

> For the destruction of the Russian cactus, $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by Russian cactus, said apportionment to be made in accordance with the necessities of the case, to be ascertained by the Secretary, and to be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

Now, in order to make this provision effective it is just as necessary that there should be coöperation on the part of the seven States affected as if there were no appropriation made by the Congress of the United States. It depends first upon the governor of the State executing an obligation for his State. If it is so that it may be put in the power of each governor to obligate his State government in the manner indicated by the amendment; and if one governor executes the obligation and the six others do not, or if six governors obligate their States to do so and one does not, it is equally ineffectual as if there were no appropriation made and the States were called upon to coöperate upon their own account by appropriations made by the States. So there is nothing in the point made by the Senator from Wyoming that the appropriation will enable the States to coöperate whereas they can not coöperate without it.

But again, how is the governor going to obligate his State to apply the fund in the manner required by the proposed amendment to the appropriation bill? It is said by the Senator from Wyoming that the Legislature will give him the power and enable him in some way to do so; but I am told by my colleague that the thistle is spreading so rapidly that in one year it has increased the area of its prevalence from 40,000 square miles to 75,000 square miles, nearly doubling in one year. Then how many years will it take before the Legislatures of the seven States infected by the Russian cactus can coöperate and enable their governors to execute obligations to the United States or to somebody, because the amendment does not state to whom, to the effect that they will apply the money as intended by the amendment? By the next year the area affected will be 150,000 or 140,000 square miles. So all this delay on the part of the States, allowing the thistle to spread, would be in contravention of the argument used by the Senator.

I take it that there is nothing in the proposition of the Senator from Wyoming that it is necessary that this appropriation should be made in order to enable the seven States infected with the Russian cactus to coöperate for its destruction.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question, if he will permit me?

Mr. MCLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Has the Senator confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. MCLAURIN. I have.

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator will read the bill he will see that if the Secretary finds that there is no necessity for the expenditure of this money it is not probable that any of it will be expended. He is a practical agriculturist himself, and the bill is very guarded in that respect. If the Secretary finds that there is no necessity for it he will not use a cent of the money, and he will not pay it out, anyway, until he gets the requisite bond from the several States.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for this legislation, or approves of it?

Mr. CAREY. I really do not know about that, but it is not likely that he will disburse any more of the money than is really necessary for the purpose. There is an emergency, and it must be met in some manner or other. I understand the amendment was put in this particular shape out of deference to the Senator from Mississippi, who raised objections to the form of the bill which had been prepared and introduced.

Mr. MCLAURIN. To which Senator from Mississippi does the Senator from Wyoming refer?

Mr. CAREY. I do not mean the Senator from Mississippi who now has the floor. I refer to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. He is a good lawyer. No doubt the Senator from Mississippi who now has the floor is also a good lawyer. But the senior Senator from Mississippi objected to the form of the bill then prepared, and suggested this form to obviate the difficulty. It leaves the first distribution in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. He will not permit any of this money to be paid out of the Treasury until he has a guarantee from the governor on behalf of the State that it will be expended wisely and judiciously for the purpose for which it is appropriated.

I do not myself believe that this is the best way to do it. I think it would be a great deal better to leave it to the Secretary of Agriculture and let him appoint agents to go out and see whether the weed can not be eradicated. There are great objections to the other plan, however, and this has been devised to overcome the objections. It is really a compromise measure, and we all hoped that it would be passed without objection even from the Democratic side.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I have confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not have confidence enough in him to put in his possession $1,000,000 and to allow him to construe the inapt language of the amendment which says that the money is—

> To be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied.

The amendment does not state to what State the money is to be given. It leaves it to the Secretary of Agriculture to select the State. It leaves it to the Secretary of Agriculture to say when the obligation is entered into by the governor of the State, and then it leaves it to the Secretary of Agriculture to say how much he will give to each governor. I have no doubt of the integrity of the Secretary; I have no doubt of his fidelity; I have no doubt of his patriotism; I have no doubt of his desire to execute properly the office confided to him, but I do not propose and I do not desire to confide to him $1,000,000 to be given to the governors of those States upon their entering into an obligation such as he will approve as being an obligation which binds their States respectively.

But suppose I had that amount of confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture; how would it help the position of the Senator from Wyoming? The position of the Senator to which I object is that he contends that the Russian cactus can not be stamped out by the States themselves for the reason that all the States must act conjointly; that they must operate in the destruction of the thistle, and if they do not do so it will not be destroyed, because if one State destroys the thistle and another leaves it, it will spread again to the State in which it had been destroyed.

How does the amendment help the matter in this respect? Does it provide that the governors of the seven States shall unite for the destruction of the thistle before they use the million dollars proposed to be appropriated? Not at all. There is nothing of the kind in the amendment. So that disposes, according to my judgment, of the position taken by the Senator from Wyoming, that the weed can not be destroyed by the States themselves unless the appropriation is made by the Congress of the United States.

Now, Senators will remember that the Senator argued that when the States themselves can not grapple with a thing, when it became too gigantic for them to contend with or to destroy, then it is that the United States ought to interpose and assist the States. The question was propounded to him whether the States had undertaken to destroy the weed, and the answer was that they have not undertaken to do it, because unless it is done in all the States at the same time, it is not effective. The amendment does not provide for the destruction of weed in all the States at the same time. It does not provide for the destruction of the weed in two of the States at the same time, much less in all the States. So money might be given to one governor, and he might proceed to the destruction of the thistle in his State and leave the weed in the other States as dangerous and as damaging as it was before.

I desire to address myself to the question of protecting the property of the United States in those States. We are told that there are 125,000,000 acres of public land in the States infested with the Russian cactus, and that it is a matter of honor and honesty that the Congress of the United States should appropriate money for the protection of this land in order that the occupants of the adjoining land may be protected in their property.

It is said by the same Senator who made that argument that this is not for the purpose of protecting private property; that it is not for the purpose of improving the farms of individuals, but that it is for a great public benefit, a great public work, and a great public purpose. Yet he tells us that this ought to be done because it is right, proper, and honorable for the United States Government to destroy the thistle in order that the adjoining farms may be of merit and of value to their occupants and to their owners.

He tells us that it would be dishonorable in us not to destroy it as an advantage to the owners of the adjoining lands and the adjoining farms. Yet in the breath just before that we are told that we are not called upon here to appropriate money to improve private farms, answering, as I suppose, the argument I tried to make before the Senate that it is not right, just, fair, nor equal to tax the farmers in one section—and I do not care whether it be in Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, New Jersey, New York, or any other portion of the country—to raise money for the purpose of improving the farm of another man.

What does the argument of the Senator mean when he says that our honor requires us to destroy the cactus on account of its being destructive to the farms and to the lands of the people who live in the Western section of the country and when in the next breath he tells us that we are not appropriating money for the purpose of improving private farms and private property? You see, Senators, that we are appropriating money for the purpose of improving the farms of one section of the country at the expense of the general public, and I do not care whether they be farmers or what class of people they be, they have put their money into the Treasury.

It is their money and not ours. We are the guardians and the trustees of it, and we have no right to apply it in any way except as provided by the Constitution and the laws of the country. I do not propose to enter into any constitutional argument to show that we have no power to do that. There is a broad and distinguishable difference between the question of power and the question of right. Is it right, is the proposition?

Now, let us see about our public domain and whether it is proper for us to make the appropriation on that ground. It is admitted by the Senators that we ought not to make the appropriation if it is for the purpose of improving the private farms of a portion of the citizens of the country at the expense of the farmers of other sections of the country, and at the expense of all classes, all vocations, and all professions in other portions of the country. At the same time it is said that we are in honor bound to destroy the thistle in order that the adjoining farms may be protected. But Senators contend that it is our duty to make this appropriation in order to protect the public domain.

We have 125,000,000 acres of public land in these States. To protect 125,000,000 acres of public domain against the Russian cactus we must appropriate $1,000,000. Are you going to improve the public domain? If you are, we have in Mississippi a considerable amount of public domain which ditching would improve; and not only would the ditching of that public domain improve the public domain itself, but it would improve the adjacent lands; the adjacent property would be improved by it. How are you going to start out and improve this public domain in one section of the country and not improve it in another?

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Is it unconstitutional for the United States to make appropriations to prevent the overflow of the Mississippi River and the Missouri River, and thereby protect the lands?

Mr. McLAURIN. There has never been an appropriation made to protect the lands on the Mississippi River. The protection of the lands is incidental. The Senator from Wyoming knows he would not vote for an appropriation to protect those lands. It is for the purpose of benefiting commerce that money is appropriated to improve the Mississippi River.

Mr. CAREY. I will vote for money for any purpose that will do good in the United States. If I am not interfering with the Senator, I wish he would take the agricultural appropriation bill, which is under consideration, and commence very early on its early pages and see what most of the purposes are in the bill for which money is appropriated. We are investigating the subject of chemistry; we are investigating the subject of forestry; we are purchasing specimens of various kinds; we are investigating "the nature of diseases injurious to fruits, fruit-trees, grain, cotton, vegetables, and other useful plants; experiments in the treatment of the same; chemicals and apparatus required in the field and laboratory," and——

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not yield to the Senator to inject a speech into mine, but only for a question. When that question has been propounded to me the Senator does not allow me to answer it before he puts a speech into mine.

Mr. CAREY. I am very sorry. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the floor. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly. I will let him put his speech in the body of my remarks.

Mr. CAREY. We appropriate in this bill (and the appropriation was agreed to, I think, without objection) $800,000 for the prevention of the spread of diseases among domestic animals. We authorize the Secretary of Agriculture "to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, sheep scab, and other diseases of animals, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, including $1,000 additional temporary compensation to the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals.

I will state that under this provision the Secretary of Agriculture employs men and stations them in the northern tier of counties in Texas to fix definite lines through the State, to fix definite lines in the State of Colorado, and all through that Southern country to prevent the spread of Texas fever. He is spending thousands of dollars each year to discover the causes of Texas fever. I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi it is too late in the day to claim that such appropriations as these are not constitutional. They are made in every appropriation bill; they have been made for a number of years; and they will probably continue to be made as long as the Government exists.

Mr. McLAURIN. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming is through, I will say, as I stated before, that I do not intend to be led off into a constitutional argument. I merely state the proposition that the Constitution never intended that an appropriation of this kind should be made for the improvement of private property. I assert that if we have improperly made appropriations, as the Senator seems to think we have done, it would not make this a proper appropriation. If we have appropriated money for the purpose of investigating the causes of diseases of animals, and such an appropriation is wrong, it certainly would not justify us in committing another wrong to the extent of a million dollars to the Treasury of the United States.

But I can see a difference between the appropriation of money out of the public Treasury for the protection of the public health and the appropriation of money out of the public Treasury for the improvement of private property. As to the question on the improvement of the Mississippi River, which the Senator did not allow me to answer before he had injected another speech into mine, I would say it has all the time been contended that there was no constitutional power to build levees for the purpose of protecting private property, and all the money that has been appropriated for the building of levees by the General Government has been for the purpose of benefiting commerce.

I say that money has been well expended, and if ten times the amount which has been expended in the building of levees on the Mississippi River had been expended the Government of the United States would be benefited thereby; it would be an advantage to the country because of the great advantage to commerce. Here is a river extending 4,100 miles, from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is a river that drains more than twenty States of the Union. It drains nearly one-half the territory of the country. It is a river that carries the commerce of more than half of the territory of the country.

The improvement of a great water way like that is far different from the appropriation of money for the purpose of improving private property. That the people who live along the great Mississippi River, and own that alluvial land are benefited by it, certainly can be no objection to the appropriation of money for the benefit of commerce and of navigation. I say, therefore, that the two propositions are not parallel.

I will say further to the Senator who argued this proposition that there has not been received by the State of Mississippi her share of the appropriations in proportion to the amounts received in other portions of the country so far as the advantages of navigation and commerce are concerned, so far as the improvement of her water ways are concerned, so far as the improvement of her navigation is concerned. I ask Senators to look at the river and harbor bill that passed the Senate last week, and compare the appropriations made in that bill for the State of Mississippi with the appropriations made for the other sections of the country.

Mr. President, I have an interest in all the sections of this country and I do not desire to be sectional, but take that appropriation bill and compare the items and you will see that Mississippi has not only not received any advantage, but that Mississippi has not received as much in proportion as the other States in the Union have received. Take the harbor of Vicksburg, one of the most important along the line of that great water way, and there was $40,000 appropriated. Take some of the other harbors which are not near so important as the port of Vicksburg in Mississippi and compare them with that appropriation and see that they get far more than twice as much appropriated for them.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator wishes to ask a question I will yield, but if he wishes to lead me off the line of my argument I do not yield.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not desire to enter into any argument, but speaking of the appropriations in which the State of Mississippi is interested, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he does not think the State of Mississippi is largely interested in the general improvement of the Lower Mississippi River under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission? I live in a State that is on the Mississippi River——

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not yield for an argument. If the Senator wants to ask a question I will yield.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the Senator whether he does not think the State of Mississippi is largely interested in the general improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. McLAURIN. I will answer the question. The State of Mississippi is interested in the improvement of the Lower Mississippi River, but the improvements in the Upper Mississippi River by the building of levees have so kept the water within the channel that owing to the failure to build levees in the State of Mississippi those improvements have been a detriment instead of an advantage to the State.

Such complaint was made to me, and it was made to the Committee on Commerce. A delegation came here from the State of Mississippi, and they came with facts and figures to show that their land and the crops on them had been damaged by improving the higher Mississippi River and neglecting to make improvements along the line of the Mississippi River in our State.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the Senator from Mississippi if he thinks the State of Mississippi would be willing to have that improvement stopped at this time.

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir; the Mississippi River ought to be improved, but the Government ought to go on and do justice to the State of Mississippi. The Government of the United States has for the Upper Mississippi River built large levees that have confined the water within the channel of the river. It has no outlet there, but when it comes on down and gets to our State, levees have not been built except those which have been constructed by taxation of the farmers along the line of the Mississippi bottoms. Levees have not been built there in the proportion in which they have been built above the State of Mississippi, and the water being confined within the channel above, when the water gets to us the channel is not sufficient to hold it, and it overflows the banks and not only destroys the crops then upon the land, but destroys the land itself for purposes of cultivation.

Does the Senator say that is right? Senators talk about justice; they talk about the honor of the American Congress compelling us to do an act; it is the duty of the American Congress to continue the improvement of the river by the building of levees until they make them come all the way down, so that the water which is confined in the channel of the Upper Mississippi may not overflow as soon as it reaches our borders, and we may not be made to suffer by the attempt to improve it above and neglecting to improve it proportionately in our State.

There ought to be a very large appropriation made for the improvement of the river. It ought to be made for the purpose of doing justice to the land owners in the Mississippi bottoms, whose lands are overflowed by the improvement of the Upper Mississippi owing to the neglect to improve the Mississippi proportionately along its banks in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. WASHBURN. As I understand the plan of the Mississippi River Commission, it can not be carried out except by building all the levees——

Mr. McLAURIN. I decline to yield for an argument. I am willing to answer any question the Senator may wish to ask me.

Mr. WASHBURN. I simply desire to state, in answer to what the Senator from Mississippi said, that the plan of the Mississippi River Commission can not be carried out except by the building of levees——

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator can make his statement after I get through. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi this question.

Mr. McLAURIN. I yield for a question but not for an argument. If the Senator from Washington wishes to make an argument he can make it after I conclude.

Mr. SQUIRE. I do not wish to make an argument; I simply want to ask one question. Is it not true that there has been provided a large amount of money for the improvement of the Mississippi River that is not shown in the river and harbor bill? Has it not been provided for in the legislation of previous years so that the actual appropriation will appear in another bill, for instance, in the sundry civil appropriation bill? Is it not true that an appropriation to the extent of $10,000,000 has been provided for, to be expended in subsequent years, and that the annual appropriation will appear in another bill?

Mr. McLAURIN. That does not touch my argument at all.

Mr. SQUIRE. What I mean to say is that it is hardly fair to refer to the present river and harbor bill to show the proportion of appropriations that the State of Mississippi enjoys, as the particular appropriation will appear in another bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from Washington is entirely mistaken. I was not referring to the present river and harbor bill to show that the State of Mississippi did not receive its proportionate share of the appropriations.

I referred to the river and harbor bill to show that the State of Mississippi received a very small share of the appropriations made in that bill in comparison with the other States of the Union. I did that to answer the point which had been made by the Senator from Minnesota just before, who asked me if I am willing that the improvement of the Mississippi River and the building of levees on the Lower Mississippi should stop. I am not willing, as I was going on to say, that it shall cease after the damage which has been done to the farmers along the Mississippi River in the State of Mississippi. I am not willing, then, that it shall cease until that damage is repaired by putting levees there that will protect them against the increased volume of water that flows down the channel of the Mississippi by reason of the levees which have been built along the Upper Mississippi River. And I say it is not honorable to the Government of the United States that the appropriations shall cease until that justice is done.

To return to the point made as to the necessity of the protection of the public domain, from which I was thrown off by the irrelevant questions, as I think, which have been propounded to me. I say there is no earthly use for the appropriation of this money for the purpose of protecting the public domain in the seven States mentioned in the amendment. There is no use for it, for several reasons. In the first place, if the statement of fact made by my colleague is correct, that if you destroy this noxious weed upon all the farms the seed will lodge in the turf in the prairies, and as soon as the plow is put to that turf the weed will spring up, I want to know how the thistle can ever be destroyed at all?

The plow is not going to be put to it until the land is settled, until some man goes and takes possession of it under the homestead laws, which now give it virtually to settlers. So it is only a question as to how long the land will remain a portion of the public domain. The seed will lie in the turf unfruitful, and when in the coming years, or ages it may be, some settler takes possession of the land under the preëmption law and puts his plow to it, the seed will immediately spring up and the Russian cactus is there again, and we have got to go a second time, a third time, or the hundredth time through the process of its destruction.

Mr. GEORGE. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir; not for an argument.

Mr. GEORGE. For a statement?

Mr. McLAURIN. My colleague has already made his statement.

Mr. GEORGE. I think my colleague should permit me to state the fact.

Mr. McLAURIN. I took my colleague's statement of fact.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I said the seed would lie there for a year and not perish.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the seed would lie there for a year and then perish, it would not be a fact as alleged that as soon as the plow was put to the turf the seed would spring up, because it would not fructify, but would perish after that time. There is no necessity to bring in an argument of that kind, because there is no force in it.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean to say, if my colleague will allow me——

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The seed falling on the land every year and not being destroyed, the seed would never be destroyed, although it could not fructify; but when it is destroyed on the plowed land, then it will perish with the other, and there will be no further trouble about it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I must confess I am not very familiar with this matter, but as I understood the statement of fact made by my colleague it is that the seed will not take root; that it will not fructify in soil that is untilled; that it will not grow in the open woods or on the prairie; that there must be some disturbance of the soil.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague does not exactly state what I said. My statement was that the seed would not fructify on the prairie clod, but it would sprout wherever there was any disturbance in the soil, or where the cattle had been fed so as to break the clods.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understand from my colleague that there is no danger that the seed falling in turf will take life unless it does so in a year.

Mr. GEORGE. In about a year. It will perish in about a year.

Mr. McLAURIN. Then the Government must go into the improvement of 125,000,000 acres of public domain in order that the seed shall not lie for a year on the turf or in any places which are not disturbed by the hoofs of animals or any other agency that would disturb the soil and make a bed for the seed. The Government must take possession of this great question to protect its domain. Now, we have agreed that the Government ought not to do this for the purpose of improving the farms of anybody.

Mr. GEORGE. For the sole purpose.

Mr. McLAURIN. For the sole purpose. My colleague says that the Government is in honor bound to improve this property to the extent of destroying the cactus, because the Government is bound to protect the people who would be damaged by its growth and spread. I take it that that could be nothing in the world except the improvement of the land of those people. But what use is it for the Government to expend millions of dollars for the improvement of its domain? Does the Government save anything by it? Does the Government get any return for it?

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to remark that the States have complete municipal jurisdiction of the public lands. The United States is simply a land owner like others, and it is entirely within the power of the States to protect themselves against any nuisance which may spring up on the public lands. Those lands are subject to the police powers of the States, and there is no occasion for any interference by the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. I thank the Senator from Illinois for the suggestion. Before I proceed with the argument on which I was about to enter, I wish to say with reference to the argument made by my colleague to the effect that we should not steel our hearts against these people, that I do not steel my heart or my breast against any section of my country, but I owe some duty to the other portions of the country.

I certainly owe a duty to the rest of the people of the country that I should not legislate to tax them in order to improve the private property of any section of the country. I am one of the trustees in charge of the public money. It does not belong to me. I have no right to take money by legislation from any citizen of this country except for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Government for the protection of all alike and to the advantage of all alike. I have no right to legislate to take money from any one citizen of this country and give it to another. I am not steeling my breast against any citizen of the country when I refuse to tax another citizen equally meritorious with him and give the money to him.

I have always been opposed to the doctrine of protection, which ought to be denominated extortion, because I do not believe it is right to extort money from one man by process of law, by process of violence, or in any other way and give it to another. For that reason I have always opposed the doctrine. So I oppose the proposition to give this money to these people. It would be only giving the money to them to improve their property at the expense of all the other people of the country. In my State, as the Senator very well knows, there is a grass that is as damaging to the land as the thistle can be to the people of the other part of the country, and that is the cocoa grass.

When it once gets possession of a farm the man has to abandon it. The Johnson grass is nearly as bad. When it once takes possession of the farm the man has to abandon it. I am not going on to state the manner of growth and spread or anything of that kind, but I will state as a fact (and an investigation by any Senator who desires to investigate the question will show it to be a fact) that while its spread is not as rapid as that of the Russian cactus has been represented to be, it is as dangerous, it is as certain, as sure, as the spread of the Russian cactus. It is far more destructive, because there is no use in talking about eradicating it from the land when it has once fastened itself upon the land. At least there has been no process so far discovered—there may be one hereafter—to eradicate it from the land. It is said to be so fast spreading that it threatens to take hold of every portion of the country.

When the question is propounded to Senators, how much has been appropriated by any of the seven States infested with the Russian cactus for the purpose of exterminating it, who answers? When that question is propounded it is answered by an echo. No Senator rises in his place and says that $100,000, or $10,000, or $1,000 has been appropriated by the States. When the question is pointedly put to a Senator, "Has there been an appropriation for the purpose of eradicating this thistle in your State, and if so, how much?" there never has been an answer to it by any Senator upon this floor. Here it is proposed to give a million dollars for the purpose of exterminating it in seven States. Will a million dollars eradicate it?

Mr. CALL. Give two million if a million will not do it.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Of whose money?

Mr. CALL. The people's money.

Mr. MCLAURIN. That is what I thought. If a million dollars will eradicate it in seven States that is less than $200,000 in a State. I have not made any calculation about it, but I would say it would be about $150,000 to a State. What State is there in the Union so poor that it could not appropriate $150,000 for the protection of its citizens, but would have to come to the General Government for protection?

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] says it is the duty of the Government to do this; that if it can not be done by the State then the General Government must intervene, but no State has made the effort. If this thistle, which is so damaging, so destructive, so disastrous, and so ruinous to the people, more than any other grass or more than any other weed in the land, is making such rapid spread at the rate which is described by Senators who are advocating this amendment, I say that it is a remarkably strange fact that no State has made any appropriation for the purpose of destroying it, or has made any effort so to do so far as is shown here.

But it is said by the Senator that this seed is indigenous to the soil of Russia, that it was imported here, and first appeared in the State of Iowa, which was not responsible for it and could not prohibit its importation; that the United States Government had the power to prohibit its importation, that it did not do so, and, therefore, the Government is in honor bound to destroy it.

Is it possible that the stringency of the case is such and that the amendment is such that it must be contended seriously here by a Senator upon this floor that if there accidentally creeps into this country by importation from any other country any noxious weed, any infectious disease, any calamity, because it is within the constitutional power of the United States to control importations into the country, that it devolves as a moral obligation and an equitable obligation upon the Government of the United States to exterminate it? If so, then if there is permitted to come into this country another great calamity from Russia, such, for instance, as la grippe, it is the duty of the American Government to make compensation to everybody who suffers from it, to pay his doctor's bill and the expenses of his recovery.

I beg pardon for having detained the Senate so long. I had hoped that some older Senator upon this floor would state the objections to this measure.

I should be glad if the people whose lands are infested with this thistle could obtain the money to destroy it. I do not think it is of that great danger to the country which has been depicted here by Senators; and I do not think that we need to give ourselves any great alarm about it. I think that the people who own farms which would be improved by the extermination of this thistle are the people who ought to destroy it. I believe, furthermore, that when you destroy cocoa grass, Johnson grass, Russian cactus, or anything else which deteriorates the price of a man's land, you are improving his private property.

I believe that, and I insist upon my original proposition that this is an amendment appropriating money for the improvement of private property. When you undertake to take money out of the Treasury of the United States to improve the private farm of one man in any section of this country, and thereby tax the other farmers, who are equally meritorious, who have as many claims upon the country to have their lands improved and protected against overflow, to have cocoa grass eradicated, Bermuda grass eradicated, or Johnson grass taken out, I believe it is unjust and unfair, and not within the scope or the intention of the Constitution, however much constitutional lawyers may contend that there is a constitutional power and right to do so.

I deprecate as much as any Senator upon this floor any feeling or any reference to any feeling of hostility or of animosity which ever existed between the sections of this country. I am as loyal to the American flag as any citizen who is protected by it, I do not care whether he be North or South or East or West, and I should be as ready to defend against invasion, I should be as ready to defend against foreign violence the most Northern, the most Western, or the most Eastern portion of this country, as I should be to defend my own section of the country.

I have no record to refer to of any service rendered to the country before the war. I might refer to an honorable ancestor away back in the eighteenth century, who took part on the side of the colonies in the first battle of the Revolutionary war at Lexington, then I might refer to the humble part I took in the "late unpleasantness;" but I do not see that such references are pertinent to this question. This is the American Senate, composed, as I understand, of men whose patriotism extends as completely over the whole country as I claim that mine does, where all questions ought to be argued upon principles of justice, upon principles of right, upon principles of equality, and Senators ought to consider well to what point this precedent may lead in the legislation of this country.

Senators talk about paternalism. Here is the variest type of paternalism. They talk about loaning money to the individual citizen of the country. Here it is proposed to give it to him for the purpose of improving his private property; aye, you undertake to give it to the governor of a State, not to the citizen. I should far prefer to give the money directly to the owner of the farm, and let him take his own course and his own plan and his own mode of exterminating this noxious weed. He is better capacitated to do it; he better understands the mode of accomplishing the object sought to be attained, and he can better do it. You do not give it to him; you offer it to the governor of the State; you offer to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to give it to such governors as he sees proper; you offer to allow him to give any such sums as he sees proper upon the execution of such obligation for his State; whatever obligation a governor may make for a State for this purpose.

I submit that this amendment ought not to be adopted. I have entered my solemn protest against it. I have no feeling in this matter against any American citizen, and more especially I have no feeling against the farmers, among which class I was raised, and one of whom I have been all my life, working on the farm, toiling on it from "early morn 'till dewy eve." I know their necessities; I know their wants; I know their privations, and I know their toil; but, Mr. President, I shall never be willing to tax one of them equally meritorious to give to another.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, very much time has been occupied by the discussion of this amendment. I shall be very brief in what I have to say. I have two objects in what I shall say. One of them is to show if I can that this amendment ought not to be adopted. First, I think it is beyond the constitutional power of Congress.

The present occupant of the chair [Mr. GALLINGER] made some allusion to the doctrine of State rights in the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. It is the misfortune of those who have never studied the relation of the States to the Union that they assert the doctrine of State's rights at the wrong time. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] referred to the fact that he had lived in a State which, in the application of the doctrine of State rights, thought that doctrine authorized the dissolution of the Union.

It has been said rather sarcastically of some of our Southern friends that some of them, after they discovered that there was nothing of secession in the Constitution, made up their minds that there was no Constitution left, that being all there was of it. I shall be no party to that aspersion, and do not indorse it.

But the true doctrine of State rights, briefly stated, is this: That the rights of the States not reserved to them merely for the sake of the State, but for the sake of popular government, for the sake of local, home government, are theoretically, at least, accurately defined by the Constitution, or, rather, I ought to state that the Federal Government has its own powers delegated, and all powers not granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. That I understand is State rights.

In no case within my knowledge have I found the principle of State rights so unnecessarily and foolishly conceded as in this case. What is it? I restate that the doctrine of the States' rights party is that the powers which are conferred upon the Government of the United States are complete powers, and that the United States has no occasion to consult the different States in the exercise of those powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.

States' rights men have always been jealous of these partnerships between States. They are generally mistaken in policy and almost always fallacious in their results. Take this case: It is argued by the senior Senator from Mississippi with great force, and by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], that here exists an evil which can not be remedied by separate State action, and they say because it can not be remedied by separate State action it properly devolves upon the General Government.

The powers of the State are one thing and the powers of the great Federal Government are another. When a power devolves upon the Federal Government it is a complete devolution. In this case an attempt has been made to devolve upon the States the very duty for which this amendment is intended to provide; and this appropriation is to be made, if it means anything at all, upon conditions that the seven States that are supposed to be infected by this noxious plant will unite, will meet, will concur, and then this money is to be distributed to them in proportion to their necessities. If it be true that this can not be done by separate State action, what is the use of this amendment, because it implies separate State action? The object sought can not be effected without separate State action or conjoint State action. It is said that these States, under the pressure of this great evil, can not be brought together, but that if the United States will give a million dollars they will come together; that is, we conjecture they will.

I insist that if it be true that these seven States can not concur in the eradication of this great evil, they will not concur even though we give them $1,000,000. It is a recognition of State rights at the wrong time. If the United States has power to extirpate the Russian cactus, then the United States has complete power to do so, and the United States ought to proceed in that way and avert the very difficulty that Senators insist stands in the way of success by separate State action.

Another thing I want to say. The Senator from Mississippi has spoken of 125,000,000 acres of public land in those States. He has spoken of those public lands as if they were under the separate jurisdiction of the United States. The true doctrine is that the United States is in those States as a mere landowner; it has no political jurisdiction over those public lands. Those lands are subject to the police authority of the States and of their general jurisdiction, always recognizing the right of the United States as the owner of the land, with paramount rights in respect to the disposition of those lands. But the idea that the State of South Dakota or the State of North Dakota must allow a nuisance on the lands of the United States and that it has no power to enter upon the lands and abate it, would be the most complete subversion of State authority.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Illinois is undertaking to state my position on that subject to the Senate, he has misconceived it. I spoke of the 125,000,000 acres of public land and the relation of the United States to it simply in reference to the proprietorship on the part of the United States. I never asserted, and could not assert, and endeavored in my speech to establish the fact, that it was not within the power of the States to go on the public land and exterminate this pest there. My idea was that, as we owned the land, there was an obligation on our part to protect it. That was all.

Mr. PALMER. The United States owes no moral duty. That may sound like a paradox; but the United States has only certain political powers. It owns lands in Montana or in Idaho; it exempts those lands from taxation by virtue of its own law. To that extent it is paramount. But it is impossible to conceive of a moral duty in the relations between the United States and the States. They are political entities, each having its appropriate sphere, the two systems moving in their orbits, never to be brought into collision when their powers are understood, but the United States, unless there is some public end to subserve which is within its express jurisdiction, unless in the discharge of some constitutional political duty, has no moral duty.

The Senator from Mississippi, however, with great ingenuity deduces an argument in respect to this amendment from the fact that the original seeds of this evil came into the United States with immigrants, and ergo, the United States must root it out.

Mr. President, I had occasion the other day, in a magazine, to read a very interesting history of rats. I understand that there were no rats in this country originally, but the rats came into the country, and escaped from ships, and have increased until they reach their present immense numbers; they came in from abroad, and as the Senator would argue, it was the duty of the authorities of the United States to see that no rats came into this country, as he said it was their duty to see that no seeds of the cactus came into the country—he says because the seeds of the cactus came into this country, therefore the United States should pursue the cactus and exterminate it—would not the same argument apply to rats?

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator misapprehends my position on this subject. I deduced the power and the duty of the United States to interfere in this matter from the proprietorship of the United States of the land. I mentioned the introduction of this pest through the custom-house as simply emphasizing our duty arising from the other source. I never meant to say, and I did not say, that for that reason only, because these seeds were introduced into the United States through the custom-houses of the United States, therefore the United States ought to exterminate the Rusian thistle. The Senator will see the difference, I hope, without any further explanation.

Mr. PALMER. But I understand the Senator to argue that whatever may enter the United States through the custom-house, whether the officers are aware of it or not, the United States thereby incurs a duty to pursue and exterminate such noxious thing.

Mr. GEORGE. I made no such statement as that.

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon, then.

Mr. GEORGE. I deduce, I will state to the Senator in very plain language, both the power and the duty of the United States to interfere on account of the proprietorship of the United States of the land, and I mentioned the other as simply increasing or intensifying the duty.

Mr. PALMER. It sometimes happens that in the baggage of immigrants there come in certain disagreeable vermin and they are diffused over the country in that way, and I inferred that if the Senator were logical, his argument would be open to the assumption that it would be the duty of the Government to pursue and extirpate them.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator intended me to hear the last remark he made, I confess I was so far off and there is so much noise in the Chamber, that I did not hear it. If it had any reference to my position, I should be glad to have the Senator repeat it, so that I may see whether he correctly states my position.

Mr. PALMER. I was trying to analyze and endeavoring to ascertain if I could, the argument which the Senator predicated upon the fact that the seeds of this weed were imported into the country through the custom-house. I am insisting that no such duty can be inferred, because it is much more comprehensive, and because if there should come over with the baggage of immigrants vermin, fleas, for example, there could be no duty upon the United States of pursuing and hunting them down. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not correct the Senator any more. I have stated to him twice that I deduce the power and the duty of the United States to interfere in this matter from their proprietorship of the land.

Mr. PALMER. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. I mentioned the other matters to which he referred simply as an inducement or as a reason why the United States should perform a duty already existing.

Mr. PALMER. I hope the Senator will pardon me for believing that that which he thought proper to mention as an argument, I might, without disrespect to him, answer that which he himself dignifies by presenting, and that I was fairly justified in doing so.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not object to the Senator answering my argument, but I do object to the Senator putting in my mouth an argument which I never made, and which I repudiate.

Mr. PALMER. Then, I take it for granted that the Senator in those respects meant merely to state nontraversible facts, those facts which are not to be disputed.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is very ingenious, very witty, and all that, but this is a very plain proposition. I deduce the power and duty of the United States to interfere from their proprietorship of the land. Then, I also added that which I had a right to do, and which was legitimate as an incentive to perform that duty, that the United States was in fault in another respect.

Mr. PALMER. I then understand the Senator to reach the point that Congress has the power to adopt this amendment because the United States owns certain lands within the States infected. If the Senator will bear with me, each argument must be tested by itself. There is no such thing in logic as a cumulative argument. The proposition of the Senator—I wish to do him perfect justice—is that because the United States owns certain land within these States Congress is authorized to appropriate a million of money for the extirpation of the Russian cactus. It seems to me a very striking stretch of the Constitution.

Congress, as I understand, is in these States in every constitutional sense as a mere proprietor of land, and it has no other powers than such as belong to a proprietor. A proprietor, a large landholder, may voluntarily give of his substance in aid of the general effort to get rid of this pest, and the value of his land will be increased by such donation. I maintain that Congress has no such power. There the man has control over all his own property; here Congress has just such control over the public property as the Constitution confers upon it. Therefore I see no soundness or force in the assumption of the Senator.

I regard this amendment as meaning one of two things. It either means a useless appropriation of money offered to an end which can not be accomplished by the means proposed, or it is an appeal to State rights, which the present occupant of the chair seems to have thought was so obnoxious. We have been talking about noxious weeds and he was speaking of obnoxious doctrines. This is an offer to the governors of seven States of a million dollars to unite. It is understood that unless they do unite nothing can be done. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] spoke of a contribution, of doing something to that end.

This thing must be ended; it can not be temporized with; you have to eradicate it. Recollect in the first instance these seeds were brought over by immigrants and they have spread, like the grain of mustard, which is the smallest of all seed, but which grew into a great tree. If a grain of the Russian cactus seed is left over, there is the germ of future trouble. That which is done must be done thoroughly and radically. It is expected that the seven governors under the influence of a million dollars will unite. It is a waste of money. The end will not be accomplished by that means.

I would propose, if the Secretary of Agriculture is to be intrusted with this power to enter into these States in the discharge of a Federal duty, that he should have the right to enter into any man's home, any man's yard or barnyard, or enter on the public lands, and proceed with this war of extermination. Nothing less than that, I suppose, will ever accomplish the end desired.

I will say to my friend, the Senator from North Dakota, that he need not entertain the belief for a moment that this million dollars will be of any value to his people other than that which may result from the approbation of his constituents for himself, which he so well deserves.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to offer an amendment, and to add a word or two in reference to it. The amendment is to be added at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of Mr. HANSBROUGH insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no greater amount shall be paid over to the governor of any State out of the sum apportioned to such State hereunder than such State shall have raised and appropriated to the same purpose, which shall, before payment, be certified by the governor and secretary of the State to the Secretary of Agriculture to his satisfaction.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the scheme proposed in this measure, which is to be added, according to the desires of its proponents, to the appropriation bill, is that the United States shall pay $1,000,000 to the governors of seven States, or to so many as shall be found subject to the infliction of this noxious weed, as a contribution toward the removal of the difficulty. This proposition is supported upon the ground that the United States owes a duty to contribute to the removal of the noxious weed because the Government of the United States is itself a landed proprietor in those several States and its lands are not taxed for the support of the governments of those States.

There is a certain force in that reasoning. I am not debating the question from the constitutional standpoint, but assuming that there exists the right in Congress to make such contribution, there is a certain force in the United States sharing with the other landed proprietors of the State the burden and duty of eradicating a pest of this description. But it would be unreasonable that the United States should assume the entire burden because it happens to be a landed proprietor in the States, not owning at this time in any one State probably anything like a half of the territorial area of the State. It occurs to me, therefore, that upon that ground alone it is but a just and proper thing that the contribution of the General Government should be limited and that the States in question ought at least to raise an amount equal to that which the Federal Government contributes.

There is another reason that grows out of what has been said on the floor to-day which I wish to urge for a moment. It is said by the propponents of this measure that if the Federal Government does not interfere, the States will not coöperate and that cooperation among the several States is a necessity to the effectual eradication of this noxious weed. I can see much probability in the latter statement. This measure does not propose any coöperation at all. It does not propose to substitute the unified action of the Federal Government in place of the separate action of the several States, and it proposes no means by which the several States shall coöperate. As it stands now it simply contributes to the governers of the several States a sum of money to be used as each governor may see fit or, perhaps, under the direction of the Legislature of the State, as each Legislature may see fit to direct.

I believe that it will contribute essentially to the coöperation between the States which, according to the friends of this measure, is necessary to its being of any practicable value, to require the States themselves to provide by taxation a sum of money which shall be expended under the direction of the governor or a State board, or any instrumentality it may provide, and that it will be far more efficacious as a public measure if the contribution of the United States takes its place in connection with some effort at least on the part of the beneficiaries.

If, therefore, this is to be treated as a public measure of sufficient value to enlist the coöperation of the Federal Government, let us place it upon a substantial basis, in which the several States are not mere gratuitants or beneficiaries of a bounty, but whereby they themselves will exert their rightful powers to effect their own deliverance from the evil which they seek aid from us to suppress.

Mr. President, let me remark one thing further in respect to that matter. This is an idea which, in the State in which I have the honor to live, prevails most beneficially in reference to public education. The State of Wisconsin has a considerable school fund, from which is raised every year several hundred thousand dollars by way of interest.

In addition to that, and because the State was generous in its disposition toward public education, there is raised everywhere in the State a tax of 1 mill on the dollar as a State tax, which amounts to between $300,000 and $700,000 a year. Thus a very large amount, some twelve or thirteen hundred thousand dollars, I think it now aggregates, is annually distributed by the State to the several school districts in the State, with a view to establishing and maintaining public schools in the several districts. But it is provided in every case that the district itself shall, as a condition of receiving any aid whatever, raise an amount equal to that which is apportioned to it by the State.

It is a helpful public contribution, but upon the best foundation for every such thing—the condition that the beneficiary shall do his best to help himself—a measure as useful in public as it is in private and personal affairs. I believe an amendment of this kind would greatly contribute to the value of the object which the friends of this measure propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that when his amendment was offered the Chair was not aware of the fact that there were then two amendments pending. Under the rule of the Senate the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin can not be now received. It can be offered, however, after the amendment to the amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. What amendment to the amendment is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Mississippi offered an amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is as far as under the rule of the Senate amendments can be received.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, although I confess that I do not like its form. I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and I do not like to interfere with the Senators who have put the amendment in shape and who are advocating it. I should be much better pleased, however, if the money to be appropriated was to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture under Federal authority, or if the method in which it was to be expended by the States was more carefully guarded.

So far as concerns the constitutional power to appropriate money for this purpose, I will state that I have not a particle of doubt about the power. If the General Government did not own an acre of land in any one of those States, the appropriation, if made, would be quite as defensible as nine out of every ten dollars appropriated in the agricultural appropriation bill, and quite as defensible as millions of dollars appropriated by Congress. I shall not stop to recapitulate such appropriations. Some of the cases in which money have been appropriated for similar purposes have been enumerated by Senators to-day, and others might be added.

But when we come to consider that the United States is a large owner of land in those States, that fact raises an equitable obligation on the part of the Government to help exterminate this pest. I think I am not mistaken in supposing that in some States of the Union the owners of land are not only required to exterminate and destroy certain noxious weeds upon their own farms and their own land, but upon the highways adjoining their land to the center of the highway. Such a provision might, of course, be adopted in the States where the cactus is growing and spreading. But every State when admitted into the Union is bound to agree, and does agree, that the State shall not interfere with the control or disposal of the public lands in the State by the General Government, and that it will never tax the lands of the General Government.

Therefore, if any one of those States should assume to deal alone with this question, it would either have to raise a tax for the purpose of destroying the thistle upon the lands of its citizens and upon the public highways, or by legislation require its own citizens to destroy this noxious weed upon their own land and upon the highways, and would have to raise a tax to destroy the thistle upon the lands of the United States. It would have no power to tax the lands of the United States and to require the United States as a landowner in the State to destroy the thistle upon its own land. For that reason it appears to me that not only does the constitutional right on the part of Congress exist to appropriate money for this purpose, but that there is an equity which requires the United States to bear its share of the burden of exterminating this weed.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, there is one suggestion which I omitted to make that I beg the patience of the Senate to hear. It is in reference to destroying the thistle because the land is the property of the United States. If Congress proposes to invest this money for that reason, that is a business transaction, and the Government ought to get some return for the money that is invested. If the land will bring any more to the United States than it would if the cactus was not destroyed, then there might be some reason for making the investment, but if the land will not return any more to the United States after the thistle is destroyed by the Government, I can not see as a business transaction where there is any benefit to the country in the investment.

As to the inability of the States to tax the land and make the Government bear its proportionate part of the expenses of destroying this weed, I wish to say that the Government gives the land to actual settlers, who thereafter become citizens or thereby become citizens or therefore are citizens of the State in which the land is located, so that the citizens of the State where the land is located get the land and the Government receives nothing for it. The Government would not receive a dollar more for the lands after the thistle was destroyed in it that they would before its destruction. Therefore it is not a good investment on account of the proprietorship of the United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment by inserting in line 3, before the word "one," the words "and cocoa grass;" so as to read:

For the destruction of the Russian cactus and cocoa grass, $1,000,000.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 3, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. With the permission of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is absent without a pair, leaving him to stand paired with the Senator from Alabama, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PUGH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], with the right to vote to make a quorum. I understand that a quorum has voted and I withhold my vote. I will state that if the Senator from Massachusetts were present I should vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER, after having voted in the negative). The present occupant of the chair announces his pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and will withdraw his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Blackburn,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Turpie.
Blanchard,	Harris,	McLaurin,
Brice,	Hunton,	Quay,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Smith,

NAYS—42.

Cullom,	Irby,	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew.
Frye,	Lodge,	Pugh,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VILAS. I now submit my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That no greater amount shall be paid over to the governor of any State out of the sum apportioned to such State hereafter than such State shall have raised and appropriated to the same purpose, which shall before payment be certified by the governor and secretary of the State to the Secretary of Agriculture to his satisfaction.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to my amendment. The people of the Western States infested with the Russian cactus would gladly join the Federal Government in suppressing it, but as a matter of fact several of those States are now bonded clear up to the constitutional limit, and they are financially unable to do so. I know the Senator from Wisconsin will not ask the people of any of those new States to levy a direct tax for the purpose of suppressing a noxious weed in order to keep it out of their State and the adjoining States when most of the weed is on public land, as has been stated here during the day.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there seems on the face of the amendment to the amendment to be an equity in its favor, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, who I know is a fair man, as well as the attention of the Senate, to a consideration which he has wholly overlooked in the amendment which he has offered.

It appears by the reports of the Agricultural Department in relation to this thistle that a good way, and probably the best way, to destroy it so far as that particular land is concerned is by plowing the land at a particular season of the year. My understanding is (and I have given a good deal of attention to this matter) that so far as the arable land is concerned, the farmers themselves will extirpate the weed by plowing, and plowing at a particular season.

Each farmer will have the assurance now that the cactus will be destroyed on the adjoining land, and he will go to work and plow his land at the proper season and thereby destroy it for that season. It seems to me unjust when the farmer can contribute his labor in destroying the pest that he should be taxed, and that tax be put into a public treasury, and somebody else hired to do the work.

It is shown by the reports that one of the best methods to destroy it is to plow the land. Another is the scraper used in road working. It appears to me but fair and just that men who have the opportunity of doing this work either with the plow or with the scraper should be allowed to do it and not pay taxes in money. Those farmers have not a great deal of money any way. If the amendment to the amendment could be so framed that the farmers would be allowed a credit for the work which they do in extirpating the pest I think it would be fair to do so, but to require as a condition precedent to the payment of this money by the Government that an equivalent sum of money shall be raised and then it shall be paid back to the farmers seems to me to be a little unjust.

Whilst I support this amendment, and have done so all along, upon the idea contained in one phrase of the amendment, that the amount "shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in the State for the destruction of said cactus," I have always thought that with the contribution made by the United States as a proprietor and then the certain taxation of persons who do not have farms, there would be a stimulus given to the work to destroy the pest by the labor of the farmers on their farms. For that reason I think the amendment to the amendment, though apparently just and fair, when properly understood would be unjust and unfair and burdensome to the people.

Mr. VILAS. The suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi it appears to me adds force to the reasons why the amendment I offer should be adopted. This subject will be left by the general amendment to the action of the several States themselves. All that is proposed on the part of Congress is to appropriate a million dollars to be apportioned among the several States, and the expenditure of it will be left to the several States, while it is suggested, and only suggested in the proposed measure, that the sum so paid by the United States shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in the States. I propose to add a requirement that the State shall raise a sum.

I apprehend that it will be perfectly easy for the State Legislature in making provision for a tax to exterminate the cactus, to provide that an amount not exceeding, if you please, or exceeding, if they choose, but, as I would suppose, not exceeding the tax which should be laid upon a particular farm, might be paid to the farmer himself if he expends it under the direction of the proper officers in exterminating the thistles upon his own farm.

But let me say to the Senator from Mississippi and to the Senate that besides the lands of the United States in each one of these States and besides the farms which are actually worked by farmers in each of the States there are many other lands to which it will be necessary that the same measure of extermination shall be applied as shall be applied to the public lands of the United States and to the individual farms.

There are the highways of the State along which it has been depicted that the globules of cactus roll with such fearful effect, distributing and scattering seed. I believe we ought to require the State to do something in addition to merely suggesting that whatever money we give them shall be used in connection with the sum they may raise. There is not a particle of difficulty in the legislation of the State making provision for the application of any necessary amount to whatever labor the farmer expends, for the purpose of destroying the thistle or cactus upon his own land.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, not wishing to prolong the discussion at all, but being a member of the Agricultural Committee, I wish to state that I oppose this proposition as I did in that committee. I do not propose to adduce an argument or make a suggestion in addition to what has been already offered. I shall not detain the Senate for that purpose. I wish simply to show what some of the States which are troubled with this noxious weed have done in the way of destroying it. I think that is a better argument in itself than any I have yet heard in the Senate.

The course here marked out is that which ought to be pursued. It is the only true remedy. The thistle can be better destroyed by municipal regulation. Let the State, county, and township regulate this matter. I beg in this connection—and that is the purpose for which I rose—to read from the statutes of one of the States so infected. I read from a late statute of South Dakota, passed in 1890, upon this very question. Chapter 116, page 271 provides that—

> Every person and every corporation shall destroy on all lands which he or it may own or occupy, all weeds of the kind known as Russian thistle, Canada thistle, and cockle burr, at such time as the township board of supervisors, or the board of county commissioners, in counties which have not been organized into townships, may direct; and notice shall be published in one or more county papers for a time not less than three weeks before the time fixed upon for the destruction of said noxious weeds: Provided, That if there be no newspaper published in the county, then the said notice in lieu of such publication shall be posted the same as election notices are posted.
> It shall be the duty of the township supervisors, or the board of county commissioners, to fix the time for the destruction of all noxious weeds, and to provide for their destruction in such manner as to prevent their bearing seed.
> Every overseer of highways—

This is pertinent to the point which was just made by the Senator from Wisconsin—

> Every overseer of highways of every township or county shall also, at the same time and in like manner, destroy all such noxious weeds, either on the highways of his road district or on any unoccupied land therein upon which the owner or lessee thereof shall neglect or refuse so to do; and for which service such overseer of highways shall receive as compensation a sum to be fixed by the board of county commissioners to be paid out of the general county fund: Provided, however, That the compensation for the said services shall not be less than $2 per day.

Then the act goes on to show how that money shall be raised. The county commissioners shall state an account in each county. They shall ascertain where this work was done and the particular township or district. The overseer is paid; and then they tax the land where the thistle was exterminated. That is the true system by which this noxious weed can be exterminated, and I believe it is the only practical way by which it can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. VILAS and Mr. HANSBROUGH asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. With the consent of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], I will transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and I vote "nay." This arrangement will continue during the voting on the amendment and the amendments to the amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has not voted.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is absent.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	Harris,	McLaurin,
Blanchard,	Daniel,	Hunton,	Palmer,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Ransom,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Jones, Ark.	Smith,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Lindsay,	Vilas.

NAYS—30.

Aldrich,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Squire,
Allen,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Stewart,
Call,	Kyle,	Platt,	Vest,
Carey,	McMillan,	Power,	Walsh,
Dolph,	Martin,	Proctor,	Washburn.
Dubois,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,	White.
George,	Pasco,	Roach,
Hale.	Patton,	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—35.

Allison,	Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,
Berry,	Frye,	Lodge,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	McPherson,	Sherman,

Cameron,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Hill,	Morgan,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Irby,	Murphy,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "one," in line 3, the words "and Johnson grass and cocklebur."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. COCKRELL. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. GALLINGER'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). By an agreement with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], who is absent, and will record my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire of the Chair if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. PUGH. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Allen,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Roach,
Allison,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Shoup,

Davis,	Hoar,	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	Irby,	Pettigrew,
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to ask, before the bill is finally disposed of, whether the provision was stricken out of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, on page 13, line 21, which is as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further experiment and continue the investigation of flax and hemp culture for fiber purposes in the State of Washington, $800.

I wish to know whether that was stricken out because of the increase of the amount of the appropriation, as shown on page 24, for fiber investigation from the sum of $4,200 to $5,000, making an addition of $800, which is exactly the amount that is stricken out in the paragraph to which I have referred on page 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee to please answer the question whether the amendment on page 13 was agreed to?

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendments to which the Senator has referred are the same. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the paragraph from line 21 to line 24, inclusive, on page 13, as a separate appropriation, and increased the appropriation for fiber investigation, on page 24, which includes the same thing.

Mr. SQUIRE. For the same purposes?

Mr. COCKRELL. It includes the same thing.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to have the people of my State understand that. The explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the amendment in relation to the Russian cactus which was offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota will be reserved for a separate vote, on the request of the Senator from Missouri. The question is on concurring in the remaining amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the reserved amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not call for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment, because the vote upon it has just been taken; and as a matter of course if the yeas and nays were called there would be simply a repetition of the same vote.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BRICE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 18, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 17, 1894.

BREVET APPOINTMENTS IN UNITED STATES ARMY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 17, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee).

Prayer by the Rev. J. H. MCCARTY, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

ENTRIES UNDER THE PREËMPTION ACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following House bill with a Senate amendment:

A bill (H. R. 3458) extending the time for final proof and payment on land claims under the public land laws of the United States.

The following amendment of the Senate was read:

After line 8 insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the time of making final payments on entries under the preemption act is hereby extended for one year from the date when the same becomes due in all cases where preëmption entrymen are unable to make final payments from causes which they can not control, evidence of such inability to be subject to the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. MCRAE. I am not prepared to say that the House should concur in this amendment. I had supposed that all preëmption claims had expired. I had just risen to make a motion to nonconcur and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to concur will take precedence over the motion to nonconcur.

Mr. MCRAE. I should like to know what the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SWEET] has to say as to the necessity for any such legislation. I can not understand the necessity for an amendment of this sort.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I will ask to have read certain correspondence from the Department relative to this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SWEET] asks to have certain letters read, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, for report in duplicate, of Senate bill No. 1822, Fifty-third Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to extend the time for making final payments on entries under the preëmption act."

This bill provides for an extension of one year from the date when payment shall become due, in all cases where preëmption entry-men are unable to make final payments from causes which they can not control, and I see no objection to the bill becoming a law. The bill is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 26, 1894.

SIR: I transmit herewith report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on Senate bill No. 1822, entitled "A bill to extend the time for making final payments on entries under the preëmption act."

I know of no objection to urge against the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

HON. J. H. BERRY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Idaho how it happens that, after the repeal in 1891 of the preëmption act, we are to take these claims up again?

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, the preëmptioner had thirty-three months in which to prove up. Now, during the last year of that thirty-three months it was almost impossible for settlers in the West to make the payment required under the law. We have extended the benefits of this act, as it originally passed the House, to all settlers on the public lands except preëmptioners. When that bill went to the Senate they noticed that we had not included in the beneficiaries of the act the preëmption settlers. Notwithstanding, therefore, that the law has been repealed, and that settlers can no longer take lands under the preëmption act, it was thought to be but just and fair to give those whose time had not expired the benefit of this act.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho whether the House bill with the Senate amendment becomes identical with the Senate bill to which the Commissioner refers in his letter.

Mr. SWEET. I think that is an error. There is no Senate bill. This is simply an amendment to the House bill.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, as I stated a while ago, the preemption act was repealed in March 3, 1891, and only thirty-three months could be allowed for making proof under that act. Since it is perfectly clear that no new entry would have been made since March 3, 1891, it is also equally clear that there can be no subsisting preëmption entry at this time. They all expired either in December, 1893, or January, 1894.

The effect of this legislation will be, as I understand it, to revive the preëmption law as to many claims that are now barred by the laws. That is, it extends for another year those claims that have been abandoned. Now, with that understanding the House can do what it sees fit. I had supposed there was no necessity for any legislation of this character; and I desire to make the motion to nonconcur and ask for a conference.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, the statement that these lands have been abandoned is unfair.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go to a conference.

Mr. SWEET. These claims have not been abandoned, and it is hardly fair to make that statement. The preëmptioner abandoned the preëmption location simply because, owing to the stringent times, he was unable to prove up. Now, even if it be true that under this law no entry can be made, and that is the fact, yet there is no reason why the preëmptioner who was so unfortunate as to have his time expire at such a time and under such conditions, should be deprived of the benefits of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho, to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCRAE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 68.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SWEET, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6518) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, that the conference asked be granted, the conferees appointed, and the Senate amendments to the bill be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the bill, the title of which has just been read, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, that the conferees be appointed, and that the bill, with Senate amendments, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the conferees shortly.

CHANGE OF CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

Resolved, That Mr. TELLER be excused as one of the conferees on the bill of the House, 6373, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, and that Mr. ALLISON be appointed in his place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

BRIDGE OVER THE MONONGAHELA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 2208) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River at the foot of Maine street in the borough of Bellevernon, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical in terms with one that has already been passed by the House and by the Senate; but, subsequent to the passage of that bill it was discovered that there was a defect in the charter of the Pennsylvania corporation and therefore it was deemed necessary to repass the bill. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFEREES ON THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment as House conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the river and harbor bill, Mr. CATCHINGS, Mr. LESTER, and Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that to-day has been assigned to a committee, I feel it my duty to demand the regular order.

THE DONATION ACT.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 59) "prescribing limitations of time for completion of titles to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto and commonly known as the 'Donation Act' and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree thereto with the following amendments:

After the word "claimant," in lines 15 and 16, page 2, insert the words "their heirs, devisees and grantees."

Strike out the word "four," in line 31, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Strike out the words "at least three newspapers," in line 32, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one newspaper."

After the word "district," in line 33, page 2, insert the words "in a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

Strike out the words "describing such claims," in line 35, page 2.

After the word "abandoned," in line 38, page 2, insert the words "and the lands embraced therein."

Strike out the entire lines 1 and 2 and the words "before provided" in line 3 of page 3.

After the word "be," in line 3, page 3, insert the words "and are hereby."

After the word "provided," in line 5, page 3, insert the word "further."

After the word "claimant," in line 20, page 3, insert the words "or his heirs, devisees, or grantees, as aforesaid."

Strike out the figure 3, in line 1, section 3, page 4, and insert the figure 2 in lieu thereof.

Strike out the figure 4 in line 1, section 4, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the figure 3.

After the word "act" in line 4, section 4, page 4, insert the words "nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair or affect any adverse claims arising under any law of the United States other than said donation act to or in respect of the lands in this act referred to."

THOMAS C. McRAE,
D. D. HARE,
JOHN F. LACEY,
Conferees on the part of the House.

J. N. DOLPH,
S. PASCO,
WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The several changes in phraseology proposed in the Senate amendment are found to be well conceived, and the adoption thereof is deemed advisable, except the proviso proposed to be added to the first section, embraced in lines from 25 to 38 of the accompanying printed copy, and reading as follows, viz:

"Provided, That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act notices shall be mailed to all such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, where their names and residences are known or by reasonable diligence can be ascertained by the register and receiver of the land office for the district in which the donation claims are situated, and shall be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in at least three newspapers of general circulation published in the land district, requiring such donation claimants, their heirs, devisees, and grantees, and all persons making claim to such donation claims, describing such claims, to appear and make final proof for such claims within the time herein provided, and that in default of such final proof such donation claims will be held to have been abandoned."

The claims in question are estimated by the Interior Department as several thousands in number, the exact number not having been ascertained. They originated a long time ago, some thirty or forty years. The claimants have failed up to this time to take any action for perfecting their claims by the proper proof. They have neglected to put on record in the local land offices, or the General Land Office, any sufficient data by which their residences, or those of their proper legal representatives, may be ascertained. They have apparently abandoned their claims and disappeared from the vicinity of the land. The land itself is imperfectly described in the notices, filed at a time when for the greater part the land was unsurveyed, and only indicated by metes and bounds, not connected with the lines of the public survey, or other easily ascertainable landmarks.

Most of the original claimants have died. It would seem to be altogether impracticable, with any possible diligence, for the registers and receivers of the district land offices to determine the proper description of the tracts, with reference to the lines of survey or otherwise, ascertain the residences of the claimants, their heirs, devisees and grantees, in the individual cases, and send notices to them, by mail and by publication, as contemplated by the proposed change in the Senate amendment to the bill. The attempt to do so would require a long time, much laborious investigation on the part of the district land officers, and considerable expense, calling for a liberal appropriation of the public money. The duty properly devolved on the claimants to take the initiative in the necessary steps for perfecting their claims. They have already had ample time in which to do so.

The purpose of the present bill is to prescribe a time certain within which this shall be done and the rights of the parties finally determined. It is a question how far the Government is bound to go in the way of giving notice. It is thought that if notice is to be given, it should not extend beyond general publication of the provisions of the proposed law within the districts, in the newspapers, and for the period named in the proposed amendment. And so the amendment as modified will provide only for the publication of a general notice, at least once a week for six weeks, in a newspaper of general circulation published in the land district, in a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The new paragraph added to section 4 is intended to save any adverse claims arising under any law of the United States other than said "donation act" in respect to the lands in question.

THO. C. McRAE.
D. D. HARE.
J. F. LACEY.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Before that is done I would like to ask a question for information. These Senate amendments seem to prescribe certain limitations as to making proof, etc., under what is known as the donation act, passed, I believe, in 1850. I am not familiar with that act, and I wish that the gentleman, without going too much into detail, would tell us what it is all about.

Mr. McRAE. An old law passed in 1850, applying to Oregon and Washington, and afterward extended, I believe, to Idaho—an act supposed at that time to be necessary for the development of that new country—and in some respects was loosely drawn. It fixed no limitation of time for making final proof of what was required. It was intended as in lieu of the old preëmption law of 1841, and the homestead law which was passed afterward. The act fixed no time within which settlers to whom these donations were made should be required to file their final proof of settlement. Entries were made forty years ago which are now uncanceled and yet so far as the Department knows, there are no actual claimants to them. This bill is intended to fix a time within which final proof in all such cases must be filed. It provides for contests so that other settlers may take the lands unless those who heretofore entered shall comply with the old law within a given time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The original act required settlement?

Mr. McRAE. I am not very familiar with the requirements of that act; but I feel pretty sure it did. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLIS], or the Representatives from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE and Mr. WILSON], ought to be able to state what was required. But whatever may have been required to be done, if done at all, there is no proof of it. There are settlers who will be glad to enter these lands; and the Department wants to get the records cleared of them. There is now no way of getting them off the records, there being no provison for initiating contests. The courts have held that there is no limitation in the original act as to when proof shall be filed. We now propose to fix a limitation by this act.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Most of these filings were made thirty or forty years ago.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, the act was passed in 1850.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then the object of this bill is to dispose of entries made under the act of 1850—to fix a time when they shall be perfected—to dispose of them and wind them up?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The bill gives no new right?

Mr. McRAE. No new right at all.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Its object is only to ascertain what the rights of settlers are under that act—rights which have accrued by virtue of settlement.

Mr. McRAE. That is it. The bill provides for publishing at the land office of the district within which the lands may lie a general notice of the time when proof must be presented, the purpose being that if parties do not appear within that time and make proof the land shall then be open to settlers, and in any event to enable the Department to decide who should have the land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question on agreeing to this report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ERNEST C. EMERSON.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana submitted a conference report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Ernest C. Emerson, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agrees to said amendment amended by adding to the part proposed to be inserted the following, viz: "at the rate of $10 per month," so that said amendment shall read as follows:

"Subject to the limitations and provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, at the rate of $10 per month."

And the House of Representatives agrees to the same.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
WM. F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

By the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 307) to pension Ernest Emerson, the amount of the beneficiary's pension was practically reduced from $12 per month to $10 per month, under the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890.

The amendment to the amendment, recommended by the conferees, simply puts into words the monthly amount of the pension fixed by the House amendment by construction.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers for the House of Representatives.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARY BROWN.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana submitted a conference report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 920) granting a pension to Mary Brown, of Vermont, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recedes from its amendment to said bill and the House agrees to the same.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
WM. F. VILAS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Concerning the facts in the bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, the effect of the Senate bill was to accept the proofs on file as evidence that the death of the soldier was the result of his army service, and the effect of the House amendment would have been to compel the beneficiary to prove, after the passage of the bill, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, that the soldier's death was the result of his army service. By receding from the House amendment the passage of the bill will result in accepting the soldier's death as due to the military service.

A. N. MARTIN,
D. D. HARE,
Managers for the House of Representatives.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 4209) for the relief of the securities of John S. Bradford; and

A bill (H. R. 7498) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River from a point within the limits of the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, known as Eagle Point, to the opposite bank of said river, in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2015) granting to the Columbia Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian Reservation, in Washington.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. CORNISH, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ROBBINS, indefinitely.

CONSIDERATION OF BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the further continuation of the special order, the bill H. R. 4609, the bankruptcy bill, which comes over from yesterday, the previous question having been ordered, and the yeas and nays ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. Is not the regular order the call of committees for reports?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. Where the previous question has been ordered on a measure which was up for consideration and not concluded at the time of adjournment, the Chair thinks the further consideration of that matter is the first question in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the gentleman from Texas also to the terms of the special order, and suggest that the previous question has not been ordered upon the passage of the bill, and therefore the rule which the Chair cites—and which is the general rule—is not applicable in the present instance. The order provides:

That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to consider House bill 4609, "a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy," in the House, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That after an hour of general debate there shall be two hours' debate under the five-minute rule. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendments, if any, and, without intervening motion, the vote shall then be taken, etc.

I have examined the original order, and there is nothing in the order which authorizes the previous question on the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Michigan——

Mr. BURROWS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I hope I may be permitted to finish my sentence.

The order simply provides that the previous question shall be ordered on the amendments, if any, and nothing else. There is no provision for ordering it on the bill. So the previous question was not ordered on yesterday except on the amendments. Therefore the bill does not come up to-day under the proposition stated by the Chair that a measure on which the previous question has been ordered comes over and is the first business in order on the next day.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the rule expressly provides that "the vote shall then be taken." That fixes absolutely the order which shall be pursued by the House, even if the rule does not provide for ordering the previous question on the bill as well as the amendments. The provision that "the vote shall then be taken" is tantamount to ordering the previous question.

Besides that, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and that of itself would make it in order the first thing on the assembling of the House to-day.

Mr. BURROWS. In the first portion of the reply, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman suggests——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. I have been trying for sometime to make myself heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the last statement of the gentleman. The Chair heard the preceding statement.

Mr. BURROWS. I had scarcely begun to make my statement, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. The statement of the gentleman from Texas that because this order provides that "the vote shall then be taken" on the bill is equivalent to ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill seems to me needs no argument to refute; for if that be true, if the order was entirely silent as to the previous question, but simply provided that the Committee of the Whole should consider the bill and at a certain time vote upon it, and that the vote would necessarily be then taken under such an order, or if an adjournment took place it would be before the House until disposed of, is a proposition in which I concur. Certainly there could not be such a construction of the rule as would give it such an interpretation as the gentleman suggests.

Now, upon the other point, that the yeas and nays have been ordered—for I take it the Chair will not hold that the previous question had been ordered—on the final passage of the bill, and that brings the matter up to-day as unfinished business, I do not believe to be correct, but I contend this bill will come up when the House shall give to the consideration of this bankruptcy bill another day. At that time the question before the House would be that upon which the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Texas—the general proposition—that where the yeas and nays have been ordered and the House adjourns for want of a quorum, the pending question comes up the first thing the next day. But if the Chair will turn to the Digest he will find that after a statement of that principle, on page 567, another statement is made:

But if the proposition on which the yeas and nays were ordered was being considered on a day assigned the committee—

And this day was assigned for the consideration of this particular matter from the Committee on the Judiciary—it would go over as unfinished business and be first in order ,when such committee again had a day.

And it cites, for instance, the Committee on the District of Columbia. Suppose on Monday, when that committee has a day for consideration of its bills under the rules, the previous question is ordered on any proposition while that committee has the floor, and before concluding its consideration the House adjourns for want of a quorum or for any other reason. Then the order for the yeas and nays will remain—but the matter does not come up on the Tuesday following, but only when that committee has the floor again under the rule.

Now, the House made a special rule that this particular bill should be assigned a particular day for its consideration, to-wit, yesterday. The House adjourned after the yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill, for want of a quorum. The principle involved is precisely the same whether a day is assigned by the settled rules of the House or a special rule.

Under that rule, about which there can be no controversy, I hold that this bill is not before the House as the regular order until the House shall again assign a day for the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the yeas and nays have been ordered. Should the House appoint another day for the consideration of this bill, the first question would be the execution of the order of the House for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

That is all I desired to say.

Mr. REED. It ought to be added, Mr. Speaker—I do not know but that it was stated by the gentleman from Michigan before I came in—that this order expressly confines the bankruptcy bill to a single day, expressly so, for it says "the rest of the day shall go to the Committee on the Judiciary," together with Tuesday. That is, this day goes to the Judiciary Committee for the consideration of its business, and can not be trenched upon.

Mr. BAILEY. The answer to that suggestion of the gentleman from Maine is obvious, that there was no "rest of the day," and therefore the order must be construed as if there was no rest of the day, because there was none.

Mr. REED. That ends that, but it shows plainly that the order only contemplated yesterday for the bankruptcy bill, because it says the rest of the day and Tuesday shall be given to the Judiciary Committee. Of course, if there was no rest of the day, why, then the Judiciary Committee did not get that; but I am not citing that upon that point. I am citing it to show what the intention of the rule was. The rule contemplated nothing but that particular day, and the ruling by Mr. Carlisle in the Forty-ninth Congress is very distinct on the subject, that where a day is given to a measure—although it says "to a committee," but there is no distinction in principle between the two—and that measure is not finished on that day, that ends the control of the House upon it without a new order. If the previous question had been ordered, then, under other rulings, the question would come over, upon familiar principles of parliamentary law; but in this case the previous question was only ordered on the amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the language of this rule when strictly interpreted means precisely the same as the previous question. The previous question is a motion to bring the House to a direct vote upon the pending question, and that is the only object of the previous question, to cut off all debate and all amendments and bring the House to that direct vote. This rule provides for that very thing, by saying that the previous question is ordered on the amendments, which cuts off debate upon them, and amendments of those amendments, or further amendments, and then it provides that the vote shall then be taken on the bill and the amendments to the final passage of the bill. You could not have made it more specific, so far as the order was concerned, as to what the House should do.

But, following that up, Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to decide it upon that point. The next day, which is to-day, having been set apart for business reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, it is now in order, even if that bill had passed from the Calendar. It is in order for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to call the bill up now as a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, and when called up it stands before the House with the previous question on the amendments, and the direction that the vote be taken upon its passage and the yeas and nays ordered upon that question.

Mr. TERRY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that in the Judiciary Committee it has been determined in what order bills should be called up, and this bill is not included.

Mr. BAILEY. This bill is not called up by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a bill reported by that committee, and it is now before the House. This second part of the order is the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, so that this being reported from the Committee on the Judiciary would be in order, even if the other order had expired, but having come over, it is the remainder of the unfinished order, and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the final passage of the bill. It had been engrossed and read a third time, and the rule provided that a vote should be taken upon its passage. Upon that there was a yea-and-nay vote ordered, and a quorum failed to appear, so that we are now precisely in the place where we were when the House adjourned last night, namely, the vote to be taken by yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill. A quorum failing to appear last night, the House adjourned, and we have resumed precisely at the point where we were then.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman from Illinois lay that down as a general proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do, and as a special one in this case.

Mr. REED. I supposed it was a general proposition as a matter of parliamentary law, but it has been so repeatedly overruled in this House, before the adoption of the quorum counting by means of tellers, that I supposed it was banished from the present House.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that does not hold where the previous question has been ordered, and I hold that by this rule the previous question is ordered on the passage of this bill.

Mr. REED. That is, on account of the resolution not holding it.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, the resolution says the vote shall then be taken. That is the effect of the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? Suppose this order had not provided that the previous question should be ordered on the amendment, and had been entirely silent about that, but had simply said that the vote should be taken at 4 o'clock. If the House adjourned for the want of a quorum, does the gentleman hold that the matter would now come up to-day?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would have the same effect as if the previous question had been ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the gentleman hold it as coming up to-day?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do.

Mr. REED. It does not matter whether the previous question is ordered. It is the previous question when left out just the same as when put in.

Mr. SPRINGER. If you put in language equivalent to the previous question. The declaration that the vote shall then be taken has always been considered to have the same effect as the previous question.

Mr. REED. What opportunities have you had to construe it except in the Fifty-first Congress and in this?

Mr. SPRINGER. The language of the rule, that the vote shall then be taken is much more specific than the previous question.

Mr. REED. Then it is not the previous question?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is more than that. It is the previous question plus the direction of the House that nothing else shall be done.

Mr. REED. It is the previous question plus the previous question left out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will cease conversation or retire to the cloak room. The Chair can not hear this debate on the question.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I assume the Chair desires to hear no further discussion; and if I am correct in that, I will refrain from saying anything further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide; but the Chair will hear any gentleman who wishes to be heard.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire to detain the House or the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the special order is equivalent to or has the same effect as the order for the previous question. The Chair will read the rule:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to consider House bill 4609, "a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy," in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That after an hour of general debate there shall be two hours' debate under the five-minute rule.

Now, leaving out the words relating to "previous question." Leaving that language out entirely, the rule provides that after "two hours of debate under the five-minute rule, without intervening motion, the vote shall be taken on the amendments and the bill to its final passage." A rule of the House can not be made more emphatic. After two hours of debate under the five-minute rule, the vote shall be taken on the amendments and on the bill to its final passage. The Chair thinks that is certainly equivalent to the previous question. And in addition to that, the House treated "the previous question" as ordered on yesterday.

On yesterday the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. DOCKERY], who was then occupying the Chair, after the two hours' debate, announced after the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] had been voted down, that that amendment was rejected and that "the previous question now operates on the bill and on all amendments to its passage." See page 8940 of the RECORD. The Speaker pro tempore announced then that the previous question was ordered on the bill to its passage and on the amendments, and so treated the bill at the time, and there was no question made about it.

Under the facts, the Chair holds that this is the regular order. The yeas and nays had been ordered on the passage of the bill, and tellers had been appointed.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, from that decision of the Chair I desire most respectfully to take an appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal, as we are proceeding under the resolution from the Committee on Rules. Gentlemen will please take their places as tellers, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask to be excused from acting as teller, as I have received notice of a meeting of a committee of conference that was appointed several weeks ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] will act as teller.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 81, answered "present" 5, not voting 136; as follows:

The following on this vote:

Mr. COOPER of Indiana with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 128, the nays are 81, answering present 4. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I have voted, but I find that I am paired with my colleague from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], so I desire to withdraw my vote and to be recorded as present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, does not the special order displace the call of committees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the call of committees is in order.

LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment a bill (H. R. 5217) to regulate and discharge the payment of contracts in any money made a legal tender by law for the payment of debts; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHTS ON FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. ROBBINS, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 7383) relating to lights on fishing vessels; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4136, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 7045) to amend section 4136 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEDALS OF HONOR, ETC.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported in lieu of House joint resolution a joint resolution (H. Res. 205) to provide for the presentation of medals of honor to the militia and volunteer troops of the several States who volunteered their services for the defense of the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania in the year 1863, prior to and after the battle of Gettysburg, Pa.; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 4793) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for improvements thereon and the erection of additions thereto," approved March 1, 1888; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WOONSOCKET, R. I.

Mr. CADMUS also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 219) for the erection of a public building in the city of Woonsocket, R. I.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FITCHBURG, MASS.

Mr. CADMUS also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment a bill (H. R. 8) to erect a public building at Fitchburg, in the State of Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6657) to prohibit the sale of intoxicants to Indians, and it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Clerk completed the call of committees.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This completes the call. Under the special order the remainder of this day is assigned to the consideration of business presented by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 1690) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighht judicial district.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I desire to raise a point of order. I have no desire at all to interfere with the consideration of the bills that the committee have agreed to call up, but I desire to present this point and have it settled. House bill 3290 was called up by the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration on the 30th and 31st days of October, 1893. It is a bill to amend the naturalization laws of the United States. It was considered for two days and was not disposed of, and is pending as unfinished business. Now, my question is, whether that bill does not take precedence of all other matters, unless some action to the contrary be taken by the House?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, my recollection of the special order under which we are operating is that it provides that this day shall be devoted to the consideration of such bills as the Committee on the Judiciary may call up. The committee has designated a number of bills that it desires to have taken up, and it occurs to me that even if there was anything otherwise in the gentleman's point, the decision of the committee to call up certain bills would overrule it.

Mr. RAY. The question I raise is this. Can the Committee on the Judiciary, of itself and without any action of the House, change the order of business as it is presented on the Calendar? Must we not take up these bills in the order in which they appear on the Calendar?

Mr. TERRY. The special order adopted by the House is in itself a change in the order of business.

Mr. RAY. Well, I do not want to have my position misunderstood. I do not desire to get in the way of the bills that the Committee on the Judiciary have agreed to call up, but I bring this point up now so that if we should get into a tangle here over any bill, we might have this question out of the way.

Mr. TERRY. The bill to which the gentleman refers was called up, I think, by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] on a suspension day.

Mr. RAY. No, sir; my recollection is that there was a special order reported from the Committee on Rules assigning two days for the consideration of the bill, and it was considered, as will be seen by reference to the Calendar, on October 30 and 31, 1893.

Mr. TERRY. What stage did it reach?

Mr. RAY. It was considered under a special order, according to my recollection. Nothing was done with the bill except to debate it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the question. There is no claim that the previous question was ordered upon that bill, or that any step was taken which would bring it up on the next day when business from the Committee on the Judiciary was in order.

Now, where a day has been assigned to a committee and the committee allowed to present business, it has always been the custom to leave it optional with the committee to call up such measures as it might see fit to designate. The language of the special rule in the present case is that "the remainder of this day (yesterday) and Tuesday the 17th instant, after the morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported by the Committee on the Judiciary." The Chair is clearly of the opinion that any measure reported by the committee may be called up by the committee.

Mr. RAY. But here is one point that the Chair has not decided, I think. Suppose some member of the committee should desire to interpose an objection to the consideration of a particular bill, and should make the point that these bills must be taken up in the order in which they appear on the Calendar. Would that be a good point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair as at present advised would overrule the point of order, and would permit the committee to call up such bills as it might see fit.

Mr. RAY. My object is to get a clear field.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee may designate the measures which it desires to have considered. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] has called up the bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this bill is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. That the bill involves an expenditure of public money.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the eighth judicial circuit an additional circuit judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I desire to yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], for such time as he may want.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I do not suppose there will be any considerable opposition to it. It is a bill that is urgently demanded in the eighth judicial circuit. That is the largest circuit in the United States. It has more business, more cases, than any other circuit in the country. Each of the judicial circuits of the United States has two circuit judges, except the second, which has three; that is the great eastern circuit. The eighth is the great western circuit.

The eastern circuit (the second) embraces the States of New York, Vermont, and Connecticut. It had last year in its court of appeals 196 cases. The eighth judicial circuit contains within its boundaries the States and Territories of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah, embracing a population of 10,894,843. The population of the great eastern circuit, the second, is 7,076,553. And against 196 cases in the second circuit there were 207 in the eighth. Considering the amount of revenue turned into the Treasury of the Government, the second circuit in 1892, from its court of appeals, turned in $1,456.75; the eighth, $6,668.51.

Now, the urgent necessity for this bill arises from the fact that where you have only two circuit judges the circuit court of appeals has to be held by the two circuit judges and one district judge, unless the circuit justice from the Supreme bench happens to be there. Judge Brewer is the circuit justice for the eighth circuit; and it is almost impossible for him to be there. The result is that the district judge in St. Louis has to sit with the circuit judges to hold a court of appeals, in consequence of which much of the business in the district and circuit court has to go unattended to, largely increasing the expense to the Government for jurors and witness fees and being a practical denial of justice to the litigants.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this bill should pass without any considerable opposition. I understand my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], when this bill was called up before, made the objection that we are having too much Federal jurisdiction. That may be true, sir, but if you want to remedy that difficulty bring in a bill to limit the jurisdiction. But whatever jurisdiction the United States courts have, by all means give them sufficient force to carry out that jurisdiction and enforce the laws of the United States.

Mr. TARSNEY. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, in addition to the difficulty he has already stated, on account of Judge Thayer's time being entirely occupied with the court of appeals, it may be said that the whole State of Kansas, comprising one district, has no judge at all on account of the illness and incompetency of the present judge.

Mr. TERRY. Undoubtedly that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to yield a few minutes first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COBB], who introduced the House bill on this subject.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this bill, its passage is not only desirable as a matter of public necessity, but as a matter of economy, for the reason that it costs the Government more now by the detail of judges to the court of appeals than this additional salary would amount to. At present it is the custom to detail judges from other districts to fill vacancies on the court of appeals that necessarily occur by reason of the limited number of judges or from other causes.

I have at hand a letter from the district attorney of St. Louis, and also one from Judge Thayer, of that district, showing that the Government loses absolutely, by reason of these details, from two to three thousand dollars a year; because when judges are detailed they have a per diem of $10 per day, and the Government would save from two to three thousand dollars a year by having this additional judge. I have these letters in my hand from Judge Thayer and the district attorney, and these show conclusively the absolute necessity for this increase in the judiciary, and I am confident that if the members present understood the necessity there would be no objection to the action proposed here.

St. Louis, by reason of the detail of Judge Thayer on the court of appeals, has not had a judge for two years, and he has been recently detailed for another year, so that necessarily during that length of time the court business there will be obstructed, and litigants will be compelled to wait and suffer all the inconveniences of delay.

I trust there will be no further opposition to the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that as a resident of this circuit and a practicing lawyer, I have some familiarity with the necessities which exist in that district for this additional judge. We can hardly realize the rapid growth of that region of country.

The territory embraced in this judicial circuit is a vast empire in itself, and there has been a wonderful growth of business interests of all kinds. I want to bear testimony as to the absolute necessity of the passage of this bill.

That is all I rose to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House, with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, judging from past experience, I take it for granted that this bill will pass the House, and of course will become a law, so that what I say here will be simply to enter my protest against this increase of the Federal judiciary.

We are gradually, and at nearly every session of Congress, increasing the scope of the Federal courts, their powers, and the number of the Federal judges, and to that extent we are dwarfing the States of the Federal Union.

There has been until recently in my own State an attempt to enlarge the Federal judiciary by dividing the State into two districts

The fact is that at no time has there been an excuse or justification for the increase of the Federal judicial authority in Indiana.

We have a State covering a large area and with very diversified interests. We have a great harbor on Lake Michigan; a vast boundary on the Ohio River, and border on an extended portion of the navigable waters of the Wabash River in the State, which produce a very large amount comparatively of maritime business, that is thrown into the Federal courts by reason of our geographical situation.

The State has within its limits four Federal courts—at Fort Wayne, Evansville, New Albany, and at Indianapolis—with one district judge; and for twenty years past, until recently, there has been a persistent effort to divide that State into two districts; and yet, sir, the members of Congress from Indiana have during the whole period in the main protested against it, and an honest, upright, and competent judge, such as Judge Gresham, when he was the judge of that district, gave aid to the opposition which sought to divide the State into two districts, on the ground that one district judge could attend to the Federal judicial business of the district. The measure up to this time has been defeated.

I am expecting, though, almost every day, to see such a bill coming in proposing to create a new Federal judge in the district of Indiana, because the case is a plausible one, more plausible, indeed, than the case now presented for a new Federal judge in the St. Louis circuit.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. The gentleman from Indiana, as I understand him, tries to impress upon the House the conviction that the action proposed by the pending bill is one which gives additional jurisdiction and power to the Federal courts and judges. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the simple question presented here is whether the courts of the country shall have an opportunity to attend to their business, in the order in which cases arise in them, or whether Congress will permit them to lag behind year after year, keeping litigants and men of business tied up before the courts without any hope of relief because Congress refuses to pass a bill of this character, which alone can afford the remedy?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will listen to what I have to say on that point, and then I hope he will be satisfied. I am not insisting that this legislation is to increase the jurisdiction of Federal courts, but the effect is to prevent a reduction in the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

This is the vital issue. I have mentioned my experience in regard to my own State for a single purpose, and that is to justify myself in saying that I have never opposed in other sections of the Union the increase in the Federal judiciary without bearing in mind at the same time that I have through many years steadily resisted the various attempts to increase the Federal judicial system in my own State for which, as in the pending bill, there is no excuse.

But, Mr. Chairman, the remedy is a very clear one, and no persons know it better, or so well, perhaps, as the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House. The remedy is to reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. But you will never do that, gentlemen, while you continue to increase the number of the judges. No member of Congress can deny this. As you increase the Federal judges you increase the Federal power.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what is the number of his district?

Mr. HOLMAN. The district of Indiana.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. But the number.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was speaking of the district of Indiana, not the circuit court.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I mean the judicial district—is it not the fourth?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been speaking of the United States district court for the district of Indiana.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Well, that is the fourth, I think. According to the report of the Attorney-General you have thirty-eight cases before the judge there on appeal, while in the eighth district the same report shows two hundred and seven. That is the difference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is speaking of the circuit courts. I had referred only to the United States district court of my State, not to the circuit courts of the United States. The remedy is an easy one. It is simply to pass a bill reducing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and incidentally increasing the jurisdiction of the State courts. Gentlemen, we are inflicting a great wrong year after year upon our people in permititng foreign corporations, having all the benefits of the legislation of our several States, to drag our citizens into the Federal courts, remote from their counties and homes; and you will keep that up, gentlemen, until you reduce rather than increase the number of Federal judges. No one can deny this.

Mr. TERRY. This bill does not provide for any increase in the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know it does not. My argument is the jurisdiction of the Federal courts ought to be decreased, and no one understands it so well as the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts should be reduced rather than to increase the number of Federal judges.

Why, gentlemen, it requires no statesmanship at all, looking out from the point which we have now reached in our history, to see that the real centralizing power that is being developed in the current progress of our country is the Federal judiciary; and statesmen will stand here on this floor within the next forty years, perhaps within the next twenty-five years, and denounce the policy of this period by which a centralization of the power of this Government has been brought about by the desire to create patronage and to increase the number of Federal judges.

The peril of the future is in your Federal judiciary, and I am not uttering an original sentiment. Of the aristocratic tendencies in our Government the Federal judiciary is the most to be apprehended, next the Army and Navy. The old Democratic doctrine was that more was to be apprehended from the extension of the jurisdiction of the Federal judiciary than from any other cause; and no class of men stood up so manfully in former years against the enlargement of the Federal judicial system as gentlemen from the South; but of late years members from the Southern States have led off in the legislation that proposes to enlarge the number of Federal judges, and to perpetuate the indefensible extent of the jurisdiction of the Federal court which the Republican policy had created. The remedy is very easy and simple for the impending evil.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. Is not the gentleman aware that we have largely reduced the jurisdiction of the Federal courts?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, some, I admit, and the effect has been in a degree beneficial, but why not confine the Federal courts to the class of cases of which they have fair and legitimate jurisdiction? Why allow foreign corporations doing business in other States to monopolize our Federal courts and drag our citizens from every section of our States into the remote Federal tribunals?

Mr. BOATNER. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in large commercial centers like St. Louis there is an immense mass of business which, under the intendment of the Constitution, ought to come within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and if the jurisdiction is confined to the proper limits there will necessarily always be a very large volume of business in those centers which ought to go into the Federal courts; and that is the case in St. Louis.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly; but you underestimate the State courts, if you confine the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to the extent that was contemplated by the Federal Constitution, you will still have a large jurisdiction. But our fathers never could have contemplated that corporate power might enter your State and enjoy all the benefits of the local laws of the States and yet have it in their power to drag the citizen into a remote Federal tribunal. Why, gentlemen, you are simply dwarfing your State courts and steadily enlarging the Federal judiciary.

Mr. TERRY. We have bills here to remedy that sort of thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know, and when you pass them you will not want to pass this bill. Why do you put this bill in front? The other day when I heard that this bill was coming up, I spoke to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and a very able and accomplished lawyer, on this subject, and he promptly said, "If the Senate will pass the bill regulating the jurisdiction of Federal courts, there will be no excuse or justification whatever of increasing the number of Federal judges."

As a citizen of the State of Indiana I protest against this legislation, this remorseless and steady enlargement of Federal judicial power. You are steadily increasing the Federal power and dwarfing the States.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] was present in the committee when this bill was considered, and he voted for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. He may have voted for it upon the ground that he could not get his bill through the Senate reducing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, but only on that ground. Just as long as the House and Senate refuse to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts as it should be limited, this everlasting increase of patronage, in the number of judges with great salaries, will go on, dwarfing your States and our State judiciary as I have already said.

Another fact, gentlemen. See how readily the House Committee on the Judiciary comes forward to increase the salaries of your Federal judges. The Committee on the Judiciary is a very able committee, and always has been, so far as my experience has extended in the House; and yet see how readily it has favored the increasing of the salaries of Federal judges. What effect does that have?

Their salaries are generally more than twice as large as the salaries of your State judges. Am I wrong, gentlemen, then, in saying that this procedure is steadily dwarfing your State courts and dwarfing your States, and enlarging the sentiment of the Federal power as against the States, creating in the public mind the sentiment that the State judges are an inferior class of judges, when as a matter of fact there is no State of the Union whose supreme court and circuit court judges do not rank well with the judges on the Federal bench, from the Supreme Court down to the district judges.

I say this with all respect to the Federal judges. They are able men, and so are the State judges.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that nothing that can be said can arrest this progress. The motives here are strong. Party motives for enlarging the number of judges, and influence is always at work for additional judges and officers to be appointed under every Administration. There are other bills behind this of the same class.

The great corporate interests of this country, Mr. Chairman, are behind this movement also. It is beneficial to them. They know very well if Congress should set its face against increasing the number of Federal judges the jurisdiction of the Federal courts would be reduced, and that is not what your corporate interests require and demand. These foreign corporations do in each State largely employ our Federal courts. I do not know of any moment more unfortunate than this to enlarge the Federal jurisdiction, for that is what this bill means. There is no public sentiment in favor of enlarging the Federal judiciary.

The tendency to exercise arbitrary power has already made its appearance to the very verge of the possible powers of the Federal judges. It is the most aristocratic feature in your system, not excepting Army and Navy officers, officers for life with ample salaries. Every session of Congress increases the number of judges, with salaries twice as large as your State judges receive. But all I am doing and hoping to do is simply to enter my protest as one member of this House against this policy of enlarging the Federal judiciary beyond the limits contemplated by our fathers.

The day will come, and it will not be a remote day either, when the injurious policy of enlarging the Federal judiciary to the institutions of our country will be apparent to all men, and this policy will be denounced as having brought upon this country incalculable evils, both in the enlargement of the Federal power and the dwarfing of our States, sapping the foundation of free institutions. I simply make my protest against the measure, not hoping that any word can be uttered that will defeat this bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not my friend conclude, from the use which the Administration has recently been making of the Federal courts to put down lawlessness and in the course adopted by the courts in enforcing process by the aid of the Federal troops of the country, that there has been a little change of base in the Democratic party upon the question of the danger of extending the power of the Federal courts?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there has been any change of opinion among the people of the country. I think the sentiment is that State rights, as contemplated by the Constitution, ought to be somewhat considered and maintained.

My friend will excuse me, until I say that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts should be maintained and that the Federal tribunal should have all the jurisdiction which our fathers contemplated when the Federal Constitution was formed. But the condition of things that now exist is entirely different from what our fathers could have expected.

This extraordinary power of foreign corporations, carrying our citizens into Federal courts from remote tribunals, remote sections of the States where the supposed foreign corporation is in fact a local corporation instead of foreign, for all practical purposes, doing business in the State as a citizen, such a case as that could not have been anticipated by our fathers. I have nothing to say in censure of the exercise by Federal tribunals of all power that was intended to be conferred on them by the Federal Constitution; and in very rare instances, I am glad to say, has the Federal courts gone beyond the jurisdiction which was intended to be conferred. But Congress invites the Federal courts to an aggressive policy.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If my friend will allow me——

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a moment, for I have promised my time. The country, however, would scarcely consent, on the spur of the moment, that a line of policy should be adopted, in even a moment of peril, to such an enlargement of the number of Federal judges as to create a bad precedent for the future.

There is always a plausible argument for creating new offices, but no gentleman seems to be willing, I regret, to recognize the fact that under the Federal Constitution and in the spirit of the instrument the jurisdiction of the Federal courts ought to be reduced instead of the number of judges being increased. Every session of Congress we are enlarging the multitude of people who are commissioned by Congress to live off of the labor of other men.

Mr. TERRY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the argument of my friend from Indiana, his objection to this bill proceeds upon the ground that it is dangerous to increase the Federal jurisdiction. Now, I think my friend has been too long in Congress and too long in logic to reason that because you have ten or any other number of judges in a particular territory, you thereby touch the question of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The question of the jurisdiction of those courts depends not upon the number of judges, but rather upon the law that is in force fixing that jurisdiction; so that if you had a hundred circuit judges the jurisdiction of the courts would be precisely the same as if you had only five, the law being the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the law fixing the jurisdiction that I was referring to.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid of extending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It is limited by the laws that we pass here, and so long as Congress keeps its finger upon the subject of the Federal jurisdiction there is no danger that the number of Federal judges can affect it in the least. Now, here is a case where the business of the territory concerned actually demands the appointment of an additional judge. It has been shown by the statistics furnished by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] that the population of the district is larger than that of the eastern district embracing the great State of New York, as well as the smaller States of Vermont and Connecticut, and that the number of cases pending in the circuit is larger than in the eastern circuit.

Such being the case, the very mischief which my friend from Indiana complains of, namely, the taking of people for long distances to try their causes is enhanced by the fact that we have an insufficient judicial force in this vast territory to dispose of the business that arises there. If it was a compact territory like the State of New York, then it might reasonably be contended that a less number of judges could do the business, but when you compel your judges to travel almost over an entire continent it is obvious that much of their time will necessarily be lost in passing from point to point.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the gentleman's State I presume, as in most of the States of the Union, the citizen is entitled to answer in a civil suit in the county in which he lives, and can not be taken to another county except by a change of venue. That is the law of the Western States generally, and it has been the law of my State for forty or fifty years. Now, is it not a fact that a reduction of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, treating corporations like other citizens of the State, would do much to remedy the evil of having citizens dragged to remote points to answer in civil cases?

Mr. POWERS. In reply to the gentleman's suggestion, I will say that it is true, no doubt, in his State, as it is in mine, that a plaintiff living in one county in the State may compel the defendant to go to that county whether it is near or remote, and in the circuit the same rule prevails. But, in my apprehension, that point does not reach this case at all. The work of this circuit actually demands the services of another judge. My friend is entirely mistaken in his view of this matter. The policy of our law for the last fifty years has been in the direction of reducing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, by requiring the cause of action to be larger, so that it is more difficult now for a plaintiff to get into the Federal courts than it was formerly.

In the early history of the Government a party could get into the Federal courts where the amount involved was quite limited, but as population and the business of the country increased the standard has been raised, until now it is quite difficult for a person to get into the Federal courts at all, and the whole policy of our legislation has been in the direction of making it so.

My friend from Indiana is unfortunate in one respect. He ought to have lived in the early days of this Republic, when things were done on a more economical scale than now, when prices were lower, when litigation was smaller. He forgets that this country has grown from 3,000,000 of people to 70,000,000, and that the business of the country has grown from a small fraction of its present volume to a great mass of business which in the near future will require not only an increase of the judicial force, but a subdivision of judicial administration such as has taken place in England. They have had the same experience there that we are having.

In the early days in England they had but few courts to transact their business, but the growth of that nation in population and commerce has been such as to compel them to subdivide their judicial business by the creation of special courts for special kinds of work. That day is coming in this country, but it has not yet come, and it will be time enough to meet the emergency when it arises. Here, however, is a case where the Judiciary Committee have investigated the question with the utmost care, and have unanimously agreed that the demand for an additional judge in the eighth circuit is one that can no longer be reasonably resisted.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had some time left, I believe, which I reserved. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to detain the Committee of the Whole on this question. If I am correctly informed, there are bills behind this looking to a curtailment of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and I hope this bill may be laid aside until those other bills looking in a different direction shall be considered.

We are all aware of the growth of the country and its necessities, and that there must be ample provision made for litigation and adjudication. But in my opinion we shall never have a reduction of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts until we cease to increase the number of the Federal judges. We are constantly reminded that the Senate of the United States is opposed to a reduction of Federal jurisdiction, and that for this reason it is difficult to pass legislation looking in that direction. But the House, in order to enforce its opinions, if it has such, in favor of reducing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, can not do better than by a counter refusal on its part to increase the number of judges, thus bringing the question between the two Houses to an issue. The crying evil in this country, so far as the Federal judiciary is concerned, is the conferring of jurisdiction upon the Federal courts with reference to corporations located within the different States.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I would remind the gentleman that in some parts of the country there is not a sufficient judicial force to transact the business coming before the Federal courts. Now, if we adopt the policy of depriving certain localities of sufficient facilities for the transaction of their business, do we not inflict an injury and injustice upon them?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, we are inflicting an injury upon the whole people of this country by increasing the number of these judges. This injury falls not upon any particular section or any particular State, but upon all. In the contention between the House and the Senate on this proposition, I think the House can well afford to say, "We will no longer increase the Federal judiciary until the demand for a reduction of jurisdiction has been recognized." In that way we may meet the difficulty.

Especially is it true that corporations doing business within the different States ought to be compelled to abide by the laws of those States and the judicature of those States as do other citizens. It ought to be provided that every corporation doing business within a State shall be considered a citizen of that State so far as the jurisdiction of a State court is concerned; and we should not allow suits in which these corporations are parties to be transferred to the Federal courts. This would be just to the corporations as well as to the citizens; and if this were done it would very much reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and would open the way for a reduction instead of an increase in the number of Federal judges.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend from Missouri be kind enough to state why that should be done—what good would come from it?

Mr. BLAND. In the first place a corporation doing business within a State ought to be compelled to abide by the laws of that State like any other citizen—should be allowed the rights of an ordinary citizen but no more. It ought not to have the privilege of dragging the citizen of the State away from his home judicature into a foreign one. The corporation ought to be compelled to submit its controversies to the judicature of the State in which it does business. I repeat that if such an amendment of our statutes were made, it would largely reduce jurisdiction of the Federal courts and would promote justice to litigants who are citizens of various States.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman will allow me to remind him that our committee has agreed upon a bill providing that corporations shall be regarded as citizens of the State in which they do business. That bill will come up presently, if we do not consume too much time on this.

Mr. BLAND. As I have stated, I would be glad if we could have that bill first——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We can not.

Mr. BLAND. And then we will consider afterward whether this bill is necessary.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE and others. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising the terms of this bill. I do not know that there is any particular objection to the measure, except as to the principle involved. My point is that the Judiciary Committee should first give us a bill looking to the reduction of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts instead of a bill providing ways and means for increasing that jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE], that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit, had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLMAN) there were—ayes 116, noes 23.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that there ought to be a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I do not think the point of no quorum was made. The gentleman expressed the opinion that there ought to be a quorum. I think so, too.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. STOCKDALE and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. TERRY and Mr. BRYAN as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 25, answered "present" 3, not voting 146; as follows:

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The following additional pair was announced for this day:

Mr. BRANCH with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, on account of the illness of my colleague, Mr. HALL, I ask that he be excused for to-day.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, and withdraw my vote. I desire to be marked "present."

Mr. KYLE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, be excused on account of illness, indefinitely.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was accordingly read the third time; the question recurring on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLMAN) there were—ayes 182, noes 12.

So the bill was passed. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the legislative bill with the Senate amendments be ordered printed, that the amendments of the Senate may be numbered, and the bill and amendments referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

UNITED STATES RAILROAD CORPORATIONS.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 1939) to provide that United States railroad corporations shall, for purposes of jurisdiction, be deemed citizens of the respective States into which their line of railway may extend.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all United States railroad corporations, or railroad corporations or companies organized or incorporated under or by virtue of any law or laws of the United States, shall, for all purposes of jurisdiction, be held and deemed to be citizens and corporations of the respective States into which their line of railway, or any branch or spur thereof, may extend, or in which any such corporation may conduct or carry on any business; and service of process upon such corporations may be made according to the laws of the respective States in which suits shall be brought.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, and all acts or parts thereof in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STOCKDALE. This bill makes no appropriation, and I ask a vote upon its passage.

Mr. RAY. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Very well; send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words:

"Or in which any such corporation may conduct or carry on any business."

Mr. RAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas, and the chairman of the committee, to this proposition. It seems to me that this is going a little farther than we should to provide that these corporations and companies shall be deemed, for the purpose of jurisdiction, citizens of any State in which they may happen to carry on any business whatever. If you restrict it to the principal business office, or something of that kind, it would be better; but when you make it as broad as this it is objectionable.

If the company should happen to do business in a State where their line does not run at all, where they have no spur extending and still have an agent representing them who goes there to do any business, however slight or for however short a time, you make them, for the purposes of jurisdiction, a citizen of that State, and take away the jurisdiction of the United States courts. My objection, therefore, is that it is much broader than it ought to be. If the jurisdiction extends to a State where they do business, or where they have a principal office, a regular or permanent place of business or a business office, it would be less objectionable. With that limitation I would be content. It seems to me that it is too broad and goes too far when you say:

Or carry on any business.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand your amendment it still leaves in the bill the language:

Into which their line of railway, or any branch or spur thereof, may extend.

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And then you strike out the words:

Or in which any such corporation may conduct or carry on any business.

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That would still leave the railroad which enters a State with its tracks, a citizen of the State, but it would not be a citizen of the State unless some particular part of its line of road extended into the State.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest to the gentleman that a railroad ought not to be doing any business in a State unless it is railroad business.

Mr. RAY. That is true.

Mr. TERRY. The reason for inserting this clause which you wish to strike out is this, that, for instance, in the great Northwest there is a road which runs up to a lake or other large body of water and does not go beyond that, but the transportation is taken up there by a steamboat company. Now, if we do not provide for that here, the very thing that we are trying to correct, the very evil which we would seek to remedy, would still exist with regard to that particular point.

Mr. RAY. I am willing to provide for that; but my objection goes to the words:

Or in which any such corporation may conduct or carry on any business.

Now, take this instance, if the gentleman will permit me: A railroad does not extend its tracks into the State of Virginia at all. There is no spur of its road extending into that State. It does no business in that State, except that it has a ticket agent somewhere in that State who sells tickets. Now, under this bill, with this language left in, it would be a citizen of that State.

Mr. TERRY. Take the case the gentleman supposes. Suppose a railroad corporation, in another State, sells a ticket there or takes freight there, and suppose that freight is damaged or lost. There is no reason why a suit brought on account of that damage or loss should not go into the State courts.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It would make railroad companies keep lawyers in every county in every State in the Union.

Mr. TERRY. If they are going to carry their cases into the United States courts they ought to. If they will insist on inflicting unnecessary hardships upon the people they ought not to complain if they are burdened a little themselves.

Mr. RAY. Take almost any large railroad company, and it undoubtedly has a ticket office in almost every State in the Union, a mere subagent who does not look out for the interest of the road at all, or represent the road at all except in the mere item of selling tickets. Now you make the railroad company a citizen of that State for the purposes of jurisdiction.

Mr. TERRY. Yes. For the purposes of jurisdiction only.

Mr. RAY. Now, that being true, it seems to me that if I should sustain any damage by reason of a railroad accident, or something of that kind, I could sue that company in a State court a thousand miles, perhaps, from the point where the accident occurred, a thousand miles from a place where they had any track, or did any real business, simply upon the ground that they had a little ticket office where they sold tickets in that State. Now, that does not seem to be just or right or proper.

Mr. TERRY. The very argument the gentleman makes shows the necessity of accomplishing what we are after in this bill. That is this: that when these national corporations, so to speak, go into any State and transact any business with any citizen thereof, and injure him in his person or property, or his rights, he ought to be able to try that question where he had his contract with them, where the wrong was done, and not leave it in the power of the railroad company to drag the citizen a thousand miles away to a Federal court.

Mr. RAY. Permit me to ask you right there, would you really contend, as a lawyer, that if I buy a ticket in the city of New Orleans of a subticket agent representing the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the agent having authority simply to sell that ticket and nothing else, and I come up in the State of Pennsylvania and am injured while in Pennsylvania while riding on the road, through the negligence of the company, that negligence occurring in the State of Pennsylvania, I ought to be permitted to sue the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in the State courts of Louisiana and try that question of negligence there, simply because I bought a ticket there?

Mr. TERRY. No; and the Louisiana courts would not have jurisdiction, because the right of action accrued in Pennsylvania, and not where the ticket was bought.

Mr. RAY. There I disagree with the gentleman, because you say here that this Pennsylvania Railroad Company shall, for the purposes of jurisdiction, be regarded as a citizen of any State in which it may conduct or carry on any business.

Now, it has carried on a little business, the selling of tickets, in Louisiana——

Mr. TERRY. I know; but that does not affect the question of jurisdiction, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. RAY. And it seems to me that it is very dangerous; and I think this goes too far.

Mr. TERRY. This bill only applies to a certain class of corporations, in which the Pennsylvania Railroad is not included.

Mr. RAY. I used that as an illustration, supposing the Pennsylvania Company to be incorporated by the United States.

Mr. TERRY. This simply applies to those railroads that have received their charters from Congress.

Mr. RAY. I know it does.

Mr. TERRY. And this bill in its present form was submitted to one of the ablest United States circuit judges in the country, and I will say that the first suggestion in regard to legislation of this kind came from that gentleman. He is a member of your party, and a very distinguished one. He called my attention to the evil that he had observed growing out of this thing, and in order to show how carefully the bill has been guarded in connection with the judicial opinions that have already been rendered on this question, I submitted the bill to him, and he thought it was in proper shape. Now, if the gentleman had wished to offer an amendment, I think he ought to have submitted it to the committee of which he is a member and where it could have been carefully considered.

Mr. RAY. I admit that.

Mr. TERRY. But inasmuch as he offers it now, I shall object to the amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. RAY. I have the floor, and will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill applies to corporations created by Federal legislation.

Mr. RAY. It does.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, by this bill railroad corporations created by Federal legislation will be confined to State courts while corporations created by State legislation will go into the Federal courts.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he is mistaken, and that this bill does not discriminate in the direction that the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to believe.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It says all United States corporations.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Very well. A corporation created by Congress; by virtue of that fact all suits heretofore had by it or against it go into the United States courts.

Mr. DALZELL. What is that?

Mr. STOCKDALE. I say when a corporation is created by the United States you can not sue it in the State courts at all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Why not?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Because it is a United States corporation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That does not deprive the State courts of jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I never saw a suit brought in a State against a railroad corporation created by Congress, but I have not practiced where such a corporation exists.

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the books are full of such cases.

Mr. STOCKDALE. What I mean is, the railroad corporation can remove a suit from a State court to the United States court for that reason alone, simply alleging that it is a United States corporation, so that the State courts are practically without jurisdiction, except by caveat.

Mr. DALZELL. If that bill passes a corporation created by the Federal Government can not be heard except in a State court, whereas a corporation created by a State may be heard in the Federal courts.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I think the gentleman misapprehends the bill. This bill simply applies to railroads or other corporations which are created or chartered by the Government of the United States, and puts them in the same attitude with other roads that are chartered by State legislation. It makes no difference save that they may be sued in a State court. They are made citizens of a State in which they do business, and nothing more; and, of course, if a railroad company in any State can remove its case to the United States courts, why, then they can still do so.

Mr. DALZELL. That is the very right you take away from them.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I think the gentleman misapprehends the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. You draw a distinction between a Federal corporation and a State corporation of the same kind in favor of the State corporation.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The State corporation is already a citizen of the State; and now we want to make the Federal corporation a citizen of the State.

Mr. DALZELL. That is putting them under two jurisdictions, State and Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. STOCKDALE. It would have the same right to bring its cases in a Federal court as any other corporation.

Mr. BOATNER. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in after the word "business," in line 10, "and in which the cause of action may have arisen."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has an amendment pending.

Mr. RAY. Perhaps I will agree to the substitute.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Line 10, page 1, after the word "business," insert, "and in which the cause of action may have arisen."

Mr. TERRY. I will accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Louisiana to offer that as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the amendment read again.

The amendment was again read as above.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That does not help the matter at all. That is simply an additional clause added to the bill without meeting the objection raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. The first part of the bill clearly takes away the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and makes the railroad company a citizen of the State.

Mr. DALZELL. It may be in half a dozen States.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes. The bill absolutely wipes out the Federal jurisdiction, and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Lousiana does not help the matter at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lousiana.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, on reflection I do not think that the amendment I have offered exactly covers the point which the gentleman from New York made and which I agree with him ought to be covered, and I therefore withdraw the amendment and offer in lieu of it the one which I send to the desk.

The amendment offered by Mr. BOATNER was read, as follows:

Line 10, after the word "business," insert "as to all causes which may arise in said States and Territories against said corporations."

Mr. BOATNER. The object of this amendment is to limit the jurisdiction of the State courts to suits which may arise in the States and Territories where the railroad may run, and in order to avoid the contingency which the gentleman from New York thinks might arise of a suit being instituted in one State against a corporation for a cause of action originating in another State. As, for instance, in the case of an accident or damage occurring in the State of Pennsylvania, a suit might be brought against the company in another and distant State if its line extended into that State. This amendment is intended to limit the State jurisdiction to the extent indicated, and I think it fully meets the objection of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has moved to strike out certain words. The gentleman from Louisiana now proposes an amendment which, as the Chair understands, he desires to offer as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from New York, but the difficulty is in offering additional words as a substitute for a motion to strike out. If the gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment——

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, as far as that point is concerned, I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana would meet the objection I had in mind, and, therefore, for the purpose of permitting him to offer it, I will withdraw my motion to strike out.

The amendment of Mr. BOATNER was adopted.

Mr. RAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill:

"Provided that nothing herein contained shall affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I came into the Hall only a few moments ago, and if there has been any general debate on this bill I did not hear it; but I am informed by my colleague from Illinois on the Judiciary Committee that there has not been general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is being considered in the House, not in committee.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, what I insist is that no more radical measure than this has ever been presented to this House as affecting these railroad corporations, and it seems to me that before we attempt to make any amendments at all the mover of the bill ought to state the reasons that have prompted him to propose this marvellous innovation upon the legislative procedure which has heretofore prevailed with regard to corporations of this character. If any reasons exist why such a change should be made it appears to me that the House should be put in possession of those reasons. So far as the section of country is concerned from which I hail there is no clashing whatever between the State and the Federal judiciary, and if there is in other sections I think the facts should be brought out, and the whole subject should be calmly and dispassionately considered, and such legislation as this should not be rushed through here without full discussion and consideration.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I think the proposition embodied in this bill is very simple, and I did not want to insult the intelligence of the House by entering into a lengthy discussion of the reasons why legislation of this kind was desirable. It applies only to such railroads as have received charters from Congress. This legislation is not so necessary in my section of the country. Where it is most needed, where the evils which it is intended to remedy are found existing to the greatest extent, is the great Northwest. In that part of the country, when a man has a cow or a hog killed by the railroad, or some damage done to his property, he may be dragged hundreds of miles from his home by these corporations which have received their charters from the Federal Congress, and this bill is intended to remedy that evil.

The other roads are generally treated as citizens of the States in which they operate; it is only this class of corporations, doing business especially in the great Northwest, who are inflicting this great hardship upon citizens. The evil has no special existence in my own State, but in that Northwest section of country it exists and ought to be corrected.

Mr. WEADOCK. The act of March 3, 1893, prevents the removal of any case where the amount in dispute is less than $2,000; so that the "horse cases" and the "cow cases," of which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] has spoken, could not go to the United States courts.

Mr. BOATNER. That act does not apply to these Federal corporations; the law the gentleman speaks of has no application whatever to a corporation chartered by the United States.

Mr. WEADOCK. But, as I understand, that act fixes a limitation as to the amount in controversy.

Mr. BOATNER. But it does not apply where the corporation is a Federal corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

The question being taken——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. RAY. I call for a division; and pending that, as some gentlemen do not appear to understand the amendment, I ask that it be again read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 12, page 1, insert:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

Mr. TERRY. That proviso simply nullifies the bill; if it be inserted there is no use in passing the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before the vote is taken I would like to occupy a couple of minutes. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] represents one extreme on this question, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] another. This bill is defective so far as the jurisdiction of Federal courts is concerned, as is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York; and it seems to me that if the gentleman from Arkansas had in view the object that he suggests, he could have found clearer and more felicitous language in which to embody the provision than we have in the bill before us—a bill which absolutely wipes out the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOATNER. Is the gentleman able to give this House any reason why a railroad company incorporated by the Federal Government, and therefore having no particular State citizenship, should not be subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States through which its lines run? Why should such a corporation have the privilege of removing every suit from the State courts to the Federal courts? To meet that evil is all this bill does.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. My point is that you have here a bill that goes to the full extreme of depriving the Federal courts of all jurisdiction.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is totally mistaken. The object and purpose of the bill——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I have heard the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas as to the object of the bill; but he has presented here the most marvelous bill for carrying out that object that was ever presented to Congress.

Mr. BOATNER. The bill simply provides that a railroad company shall, for jurisdictional purposes, be considered a citizen of the States through which its lines run.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And that wipes out the Federal judiciary.

Mr. BOATNER. No; it does not.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the corporation for all jurisdictional purposes is a citizen of a State, then it is limited to the State courts in its litigation, instead of being allowed to resort to the Federal courts.

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all. Why should not the company be limited to the State courts so far as the limitation of this bill extends? Is not the gentleman himself limited in the same way to the State courts?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi says that while I am a citizen of the State I can sue in a Federal court. But if the cause of action arises between myself and a citizen of the same State I can not sue in a Federal court; I must go into the State courts. The point I am making is that this bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, if it goes through, deprives these corporations of the right of going into the Federal courts. If the corporation is a citizen of the State it can not go into the Federal court, whatever the subject of litigation may be.

Now, if the gentleman desires that in the settlement of small claims of the character which he speaks of these corporations shall be limited to the jurisdiction of the State courts, that can be provided for without striking a deadly blow at the Federal courts of this country.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should like to put a question to the gentleman in charge of this bill. Suppose an individual traveling on the Northern Pacific Railroad—a corporation chartered by Congress, as I understand—should be injured in the State of Washington, must he, under this bill, bring his action for damages in the State of Washington, or can he sue, for instance, in the United States court at Chicago?

Mr. TERRY. Under the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], which was adopted, he would sue in the State where the cause of action originated.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Can he sue in any United States court just as anybody else would sue?

Mr. TERRY. Of course; that does not interfere with the right of the citizen. His right is not hampered in any way by the bill. This simply says that these corporations, for purposes of jurisdiction, shall be deemed citizens of the State in which they are transacting business.

Now, if your man, in the case you suppose, lived in Pennsylvania and was injured in the State of Washington, he could sue in the State courts of Washington or the United States court sitting in the State of Washington, because being a citizen of Pennsylvania and the railroad corporation being a citizen of Washington, he could sue there and the court would have jurisdiction.

Mr. NORTHWAY. On the other hand, if he was to sue in the State of Washington, under this bill can the railroad corporation transfer its cause to the United States court, as other roads have the right to do?

Mr. TERRY. It could not.

Mr. BOATNER. Not if this bill passes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Should it not be within the power of the corporation to exercise the same rights that the law allows to others? If not, why?

Mr. TERRY. Because, I will answer the gentleman, we do not like to have our citizens dragged around to out-of-the-way places at the will of these corporations, some of which extend many hundreds of miles in length and pass through different States.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if the addition of the word "concurrent," before "jurisdiction," would not answer the purpose that he indicated he had in view?

Mr. RAY. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I would say this: I have offered this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I have understood the gentleman from Louisiana to say, and I think I so understood the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], if I am correct in my understanding, that they did not purpose, by this bill, to interfere at all with the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

Now, if they do not intend to interfere with the jurisdiction of the courts, if that is the purpose of gentlemen having the bill in charge, this proposed amendment of mine should be assented to by them at once, because the amendment is in exact accord with what I understand both gentlemen to say is the purpose of the bill.

I do not see, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the amendment would be made either stronger or weaker by the addition of the word "concurrent" before "jurisdiction." I do not know, however, that I would have any objection to the word being added; though it seems to me it would be entirely unnecessary.

But I want to say right here, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield long enough——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. With the assent of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, I want to say that I am opposed to the citizens of any State being compelled to travel hundreds of miles to enforce their claims against railroads incorporated by laws of the United States, where the demand is for a cow or a pig killed, or some trifling loss of that kind. I would be perfectly willing to have a law passed to enable that class of claimants to sue in the State courts to enforce their rights against these companies. But in doing that—trying to provide for justice to the small claimants in these matters—I desire to be particularly careful lest we do a very great injustice to the railroad corporations themselves.

I am not a defender of any of the wrongs of these corporations, wherever they commit them. I am not a champion of corporations or of railroads; but I do desire that they shall have their rights of property protected, and their rights in the courts the same as individuals or citizens. I want them to be in a position to secure their just rights, and to have fair play and justice in the courts of the United States, both State and Federal. But I do not desire that they shall be put at a disadvantage in gaining or protecting their rights. Neither do I desire by any act of mine or any assent of mine to interfere in these matters with the jurisdiction that properly or constitutionally belongs to the courts of the United States. I am opposed to any legislation which will strike out or strike down or interfere with the necessary and proper jurisdiction of the United States courts.

Mr. TERRY. Right on that point, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RAY. Certainly.

Mr. TERRY. Suppose you are living in the State of New York and go to live in Pennsylvania, you do not lose thereby any rights you possessed as a citizen of the United States. But if you become a citizen of Pennsylvania, then you sue in the State courts of that State, and are liable to be sued in said courts by a citizen of that State, or in the Federal courts by a citizen of some other State. If you are a citizen of Pennsylvania there is nothing to prevent your bringing a suit in the courts of New York or the United States court there to enforce a claim against a citizen of that State.

This bill does not in any way interfere with the rights of the citizens. It simply provides that this particular class of railroads shall, for purposes of jurisdiction, be deemed citizens of the States. Outside of that the argument of the gentleman has no possible force.

Mr. RAY. Do you contend, and I ask the question in all fairness, that this bill, as now framed, does not deprive the United States courts of the jurisdiction which they now possess under the law?

Mr. TERRY. It does not, sir, except in this respect, that if any of these railroads that come within the purview of this bill inflict damage on any citizen of any one of the sovereign States of this Union, then under this bill that citizen would have the right to sue them in the State where they inflict the damage, to sue them in the State courts, and they would have no right to transfer that case to the Federal courts.

Mr. RAY. Let me ask you fairly, is it your purpose to compel the citizen to sue in the State courts and the company to be sued there?

Mr. TERRY. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. RAY. Very good. Then I can not see that you should have any objection whatever to this amendment. Under your theory, and under your claim, this amendment of mine would be simply declaratory of the situation as it would be without the amendment. Then the amendment does no harm, because I simply provide by the proposed amendment——

Mr. TERRY. Right there, if the gentleman will permit me, he says this does no harm. Yet if, according to the language of the act as it now stands, a case should arise of the kind the gentleman thinks is covered without this proviso, then when this language is added, the court will say, you could not have meant what would naurally be implied by the law, and therefore you meant something else; and the proviso would virtually destroy the bill.

Mr. RAY. No, because the provisio simply makes it clear that the purpose of the bill is what you declare to be your purpose, to grant concurrent jurisdiction in these matters to the State courts. Now, if that be your purpose, it is all right to say so after you have conferred the jurisdiction on the State courts, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, to say "provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive the courts of the United States of their jurisdiction." Or have it read "concurrent jurisdiction." Then you have it as you say you purpose to have it, and confer concurrent jurisdiction in these matters upon the State courts, but you leave concurrent jurisdiction in all these matters in the United States courts.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAY. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman says he is not a champion of the railroads or of corporations. And yet, I want to remind the gentleman, he is asking that these corporations which were chartered by the Federal Government be allowed to retain a privilege that is not possessed by any citizen of the United States, namely, the right of not being the citizens of any State, and therefore of removing any suit that may be brought against them anywhere into the Federal courts, and of bringing any suit they desire to bring in the Federal courts, they being the only persons, real or intellectual; within the United States who possess any such privilege; and the gentleman opposes a measure which simply reduces them to the level of other citizens, that is, of being citizens of the several States in which their business is conducted, for jurisdictional purposes. That is what this bill proposes to do, nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. RAY. Now, the gentleman from Louisiana is a good lawyer, and a fair man, and I respect him.

Mr. BOATNER. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. RAY. If you will permit me I will put the question directly to you. Do you believe in a policy which will first grant life and property rights to a corporation organized under the laws of the United States and then turn around and deprive it of the rights and privileges which it takes under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or by the very act of Congress which brings it into life?

Mr. BOATNER. Why, Mr. Speaker, certainly I would not, nor does this bill propose to do it.

Mr. BRYAN. You could not take away a constitutional right.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman knows that if any right or immunity claimed by any of these corporations under any statute or law of the United States should come in question in a State court, and the decision of the State court should be adverse to the company on that question, it may take its writ of error to the court of appeals, or to the Supreme Court of the United States, as the case may be. The gentleman knows perfectly well that the sole object of this bill is to give to the State courts jurisdiction in ordinary controversies which arise between railway corporations incorporated by the United States and citizens, just the same as railroad corporations incorporated by the States.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman says "ordinary controversies." Would it not cover all controversies?

Mr. BOATNER. For the determination of any controversies which may arise between them, of course if it is a mere question of debt or a mere question of damage, or if it is a mere question of business, the decision of the State court would be final, but if any right or privilege which the company claimed to hold on account of an act of Congress is brought into question, the gentleman certainly must know that we could not take away from the Federal court the right to determine such a question. Why that jurisdiction is constitutional. It does not arise from the act of Congress; and so, if the gentleman is not a special advocate and champion of corporations, if he is willing that these corporations shall remain upon the same level as other corporations and other citizens, why certainly he will not object to an act which merely declares them for purposes of jurisdiction to be citizens of the several States in which they operate and conduct their roads.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman I am perfectly willing to make these corporations organized under the laws of the United States for certain purposes and to a certain extent citizens of the States in which and through which their roads run, and in which they have a principal office where they do business; but in doing that I do not wish to deprive them of the rights and privileges which were conferred upon them by the laws of the United States when brought into existence.

I do not believe it is the right of a man to bring a child into existence and then cut off its ears, pluck out its eyes, cut off its hands, and take off its feet, and render it absolutely imbecile and helpless as a human being. I am perfectly willing to give concurrent jurisdiction to the State courts, to enable these corporations to be sued and prosecuted in the State courts in which and through which they run their roads; but I am not willing to go to the extent of depriving the United States courts of concurrent jurisdiction in these matters.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] say that it is not their purpose at all, and that this bill does not deprive the United States courts of the jurisdiction that they now have. If that be true, my proposed amendment will do no harm whatever. It seems to me that the bill must go a great deal further and have a broader sweep and accomplish more than I had suspected was in it. I think this because the gentlemen who advocate it are adhering with great tenacity and determination to the proposition that the amendment shall not go into the bill. I suspect they desire to deprive the United States courts of all jurisdiction in these cases.

Mr. TERRY. I demand the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. RAY. I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TERRY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman from New York got the floor by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] yielding to him.

Mr. RAY. Then I yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Have I the floor, Mr. Speaker? How much time does the gentleman from Vermont want?

Mr. POWERS. Five minutes.

Mr. TERRY. I have demanded the previous question, and I object to gentlemen swopping time after I have demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania now yields five minutes of his time to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman is giving away his time after it is all consumed.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, suppose a railroad runs from Washington to New York through the States of Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. If a train of that railroad happens to run over a man's horse up in Maryland, it is within the power of that company to take that man into the Federal court, increasing the expense of that litigation fourfold; and the object of this bill is to say to that railroad company you shall answer in the court of Maryland for that accident. [Cries of "That is right!"]

If, Mr. Speaker, any question arises in that suit which draws any question of Federal law, under the Constitution of the United States the jurisdiction of the Federal court is not disturbed.

Mr. COX and others. That is all right.

Mr. POWERS. If no such law or no provision of the Constitution is drawn in question, then the jurisdiction of the State court is complete and final in this case. That being so, the amendment of the gentleman from New York takes the bowels out of the bill. There is no such thing as retaining the jurisdiction of the Federal court and at the same time giving the State court full and plenary jurisdiction.

Mr. RAY. Does the gentleman hold that it is impossible to provide for a concurrent jurisdiction?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will read.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 105.

Mr. RAY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SNODGRASS and Mr. TERRY. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] to act as tellers.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 44, nays 136, answered "present" 4, not voting 171; as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY (pending the second call). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, and ask for a conference, and also that the bill and amendments be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

UNITED STATES RAILWAY CORPORATIONS.

The Clerk resumed and completed the roll call, as above.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. DUNPHY with Mr. WALKER.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have voted in the affirmative, but being paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK, I desire to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Still, Mr. Speaker, I must withdraw my vote, because my colleague has been very kind in pairing with me for ten days past, when I have been compelled to be out of the House on public business, and I do not wish to take advantage of his absence on this occasion, for I suppose he is absent under the impression that I could not be here, and that therefore he could not vote even if he were present. I ask to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the names of gentlemen who have been noted as present but have not responded.

The names were called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 157 and the nays 12, answering present 7, and noted as present, but declining to answer, 3. The ayes have it, and the bill is ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN KENTUCKY.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I call up the bill (H. R. 5598) to divide Kentucky into two judicial districts and fix the times and places of holding court therein.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that this bill must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARUTH. I object.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CARUTH. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4867) for the relief of David C. Dane. (Report No. 1259.)

A bill (H, R. 4874) for the relief of Susan Baker. (Report No. 1260.)

By Mr. McETTRICK, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 1229) granting a pension to Bridget Devine. (Report No. 1261.)

By Mr. PICKLER, from the same committee:

A bill (H. R. 6974) to pension Mrs. John H. Clark. (Report No. 1262.)

A bill (S. 1490) to pension Mollie Crandall. (Report No. 1263.)

By Mr. STRONG, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 5336) granting a penson to Ellen Day, stepmother of Albert L. Day. (Report No. 1264.)

By Mr. McNAGNY, from the Committee on War Claims:

A resolution to refer to the Court of Claims the bill (H. R. 7427) for the relief of J. R. Wasson. (Report No. 1265.)

A bill (H. R. 6696) for the relief of Frank S. Sowers. (Report No. 1266.)

A bill (H. R. 950) for the relief of Sarah A. Clapp. (Report No. 1267.)

By Mr. BOWERS of California, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of George B. Crosby. (Report No. 1268.)

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 4941) for the relief of Don Carlos Buell. (Report No. 1269.)

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. COX, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 3280) for the relief of the German Bank of Memphis, Tenn., and the Chemical National Bank of New York City; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1258), was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SOMERS: A bill (H. R. 7738) to appropriate a certain sum for the purchase of 8 acres for the benefit of Portage Lake harbor of refuge, Manistee County, Mich.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DURBOROW: A bill (H. R. 7739) to declare letters patent null and void when used, operated, or controlled by any trust, monopoly, corporation, combination, or other conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. STRAUS: A bill (H. R. 7740) to regulate railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BUNDY (by request): A bill (H. R. 7741) for the relief of James Forgey, of Lawrence, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7742) for the relief of Henry E. Saunders, administrator of Edwin E. Saunders, of Proctorville, Lawrence County, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7743) for the relief of Deitreck Glander—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7744) for the relief of Theodore J. Gillett, Lawrence County, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7745) for the relief of the heirs of Nathan C. and Hezekiah J. Winslow, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7746) for the relief of W. T. Scoville and John Kouns, surviving partners of George L. Kouns, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7747) for relief of heirs of Henry A. Shadel, of Ohio and Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7748) for the relief of Ammon McLaughlin, of Sciotoville, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COVERT: A bill (H. R. 7749) for the relief of Alexander Stoddart, of New York—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 7750) granting a pension to Eliza F. Tucker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPRINGER: A bill (H. R. 7751) for the relief of John A. McClernand—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 7752) for the relief of John C. Thomas, Madison County, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of sundry citizens of Pittsburg, Pa., against an income tax as affecting fraternal beneficial societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DURBORO'W: Petition of James Muntan and others, employés of the Chicago Tire and Spring Company, against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Clifford J. Ellis and others, of Chicago, Ill., against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of John M. Mott and others, of Chicago, Ill., for a national alphabet—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Remonstrance of the Knights of Labor of Philadelphia, Pa., against the interference of the Federal Government between the employés of railroad corporations and those corporations—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LAYTON: Resolution of the council of the city of Greenville, Ohio, praying Congress to make an appropriation for a monument in honor of Gen. Anthony Wayne—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. RICHARDS: Petition of C. H. Mathews and others, citizens of New Philadelphia, Ohio, against an income tax on fraternal and beneficial orders—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 18, 1894.

Prayer by Rev. ISAAC W. CANTER, of the city of Washington.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress of February 16, 1889, information that there is in the War Department an accumulation of files of papers which are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of the Department and have no permanent value or historical interest; which, on motion of Mr. COCKRELL, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the several Departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, and for prior years, amounting to $10,076.31, and for the Postal Service, payable from the postal revenues, $57,985.54; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a memorial of citizens of Chicago and Cook County, Ill., remonstrating "against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and State which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education," etc. The memorial is extensively signed. As the appropriation bill referred to is now before the Senate, I ask that the memorial be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of the Miami and Erie Canal Association, of Dayton, Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made for a canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio River.

As the petition relates to an item of appropriation in the river and harbor bill, and that bill is now in conference, I ask that the petition be referred to the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present a petition of Typographical Union No. 97, of Peru, Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislatation providing for arbitration of the labor troubles. I do not know which committee has charge of the question of arbitration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Education and Labor, the Chair is inclined to think.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a joint resolution on the subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that that is the proper committee to have charge of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What committee does the Senator from Ohio suggest?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the petition of L. C. Butler and sundry other citizens of Bay City, Mich., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of Rev. W. D. Cole and sundry other citizens of Popple; of H. M. Post and sundry other citizens of Owosso; of Rev. H. H. Andrews and sundry other citizens of Deckerville; of W. E. Holt and sundry other citizens of Bellevue, and of John Brett and sundry other citizens of Millington, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANIEL presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Norfolk, Va., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5293) concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1262) for the relief of Paul McCormick, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1718) for the relief of Theodore Teed, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, and the bill (S. 709) for the relief of Theodore Teed, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, to report them adversely. It seems that the last-named bill was introduced during the first session of the present Congress, in August last, and Senate bill 1718, being the same bill substantially, was introduced during the present session. Both bills are reported adversely, and I move that they be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1069) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Sherwin, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLISON on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRICE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLISON on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1313) to increase the pension of John Scott, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLANCHARD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLISON on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2003) to provide for the erection of a United States bonded warehouse in the city of Atlanta, State of Georgia; and

A bill (S. 2033) to provide for the erection of a United States bonded warehouse in the town of Bonners Ferry, State of Idaho.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 91) to provide for the printing of a digest of the laws and decisions relating to the appointment, salary, and compensation of officials of the United States courts, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Printing; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself March 12, 1894, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 886) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased, to report it with amendments, and submit a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS. On behalf of the minority of the committee, I beg leave to submit the views of the minority on the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. I ask that the views of the minority may be printed, to accompany the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the majority and the views of the minority will be received and printed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2214) authorizing the purchase of sites for public buildings in the city of Spokane, Wash.; in the city of Cheyenne, Wyo.; in Boise City, Idaho, and in the city of Helena, Mont., reported it with amendments.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2203) for the relief of Arthur Connell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MEDALS OF HONOR, DECORATIONS, ETC.

Mr. TURPIE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. 5525) authorizing John E. Johnson and others to accept medals of honor and diplomas from the Government of Spain; the bill (H. R. 6424) to authorize Rear-Admiral John G. Walker and Surg. Gen. J. Rufus Tryon, of the United States Navy, to accept the decorations of the "Busto del Libertador" of the third class from the President of Venezuela, and the bill (H. R. 7475) authorizing Commander C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of Spain, to report them favorably without amendment.

I ask for the present consideration of the House bills just reported. The Senate has already passed bills which are identically the same. Those bills have gone to the other House, and it is not likely that they will be reached in that body for action. I therefore ask for the present consideration of these bills. There is no legislation in them. They simply give consent to members of the Life Saving Service to accept medals of honor and officers of the Navy to accept the decorations named. It will take but three minutes to dispose of all of them. I ask that the bills may be considered collectively.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The three separate bills?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read by title the first bill reported by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5525) authorizing John E. Johnson and others to accept medals of honor and diplomas from the Government of Spain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana also asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6424) to authorize Rear-Admiral John G. Walker and Surg. Gen. J. Rufus Tryon, of the United States Navy, to accept the decorations of the "Busto del Libertador" of the third class from the President of Venezuela.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana also asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7475) authorizing Commander C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of Spain.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL GEODETIC ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GRAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the meetings of the International Geodetic Association, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WATTS'S PAINTING OF "LOVE AND LIFE."

Mr. GRAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4734) to authorize the Secretary of State to accept for the United States of America a painting by G. F. Watts, Royal Academician, entitled "Love and Life," to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2233) to authorize the construction of certain dams across the St. Louis and Cloquet Rivers, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VILAS introduced a bill (S. 2234) to further amend section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2235) prescribing the conditions under which cases at law or in equity which have been before the Supreme Court and are afterwards proceeding in a circuit court may be again appealed to the Supreme Court; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2236) for the relief of Julia A. Lewis, executrix of James Lewis, deceased, late of Frederick County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

J. E. JOHNSON.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Mr. J. E. Johnson be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $37.50 for services rendered as stenographer during the special proceedings of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. PASCO submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. Pruden, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1860) to authorize Prof. Asaph Hall, of the United States Navy, to accept a gold medal from the Academy of Science of France.

An act (S. R. 72) to permit Capt. T. O. Selfridge, jr., United States Navy, to receive a decoration conferred upon him by the President of the Republic of France.

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PLATT. On the 13th instant the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] submitted a resolution providing that the Committee on Indian Affairs might visit the Lower Brule Agency in the recess, and on the 14th instant the chairman of the committee [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution as proposed by the Senator from South Dakota. I ask that both be laid before the Senate, that they may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or otherwise, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate the removal of the Lower Brule Indians.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, the chairman of the committee, may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the resolution after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee to continue during the recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolutions, and in pursuance of such investigations to visit the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, and the five nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

Second. That said committee or subcommittee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place or places as they may determine; and the necessary and proper expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. PLATT. I ask, in behalf of the chairman of the committee, that the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I now move that the resolution as amended be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

STATE RESERVATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is concluded. The Calender under Rule VIII being in order, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1591) to provide for the reservation, sale, and settlement of certain lands in several of the States and Territories.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, before the word "years," to strike out "three," and insert "ten;" so as to read:

That to encourage the reclamation of arid lands, and the cultivation and sale thereof in small tracts to actual settlers, there is hereby reserved, for the purposes and upon the conditions provided in this act, in each of the States to which the desert-land law of the United States is applicable, 1,000,000 acres of the surveyed public arid lands in said States, respectively, to be selected by each of said States within ten years after the passage of this act, and from the date of such selection to be thereafter withheld from other disposal, except as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill as to the propriety of now reserving 1,000,000 acres of land in each of these States for ten years, without the lands being designated or selected, or anything of the kind, without their being known, and giving the State ten years within which to select them.

Mr. CAREY. For the simple reason that the lands are not reserved for ten years. It is simply to enable the State, if the State sees there is an opportunity to cause a piece of land to be reclaimed, for instance, by a colony, that it can then go and make the selection of the land; but the minute the land is selected the time runs against the State, and then there is only five years for their reclamation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that; but here is the point: A man wants to go and locate upon such lands as arid lands. There are a million acres already reserved.

Mr. DOLPH. He can do that at any time. The lands are not reserved until selected by the State. The bill does not prevent anybody from going and taking the lands until selected by the State, and then five years are given.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first section reads:

That to encourage the reclamation of arid lands, and the cultivation and sale thereof in small tracts to actual settlers, there is hereby reserved——

Mr. CAREY. At what point does the Senator propose to amend the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to call the Senator's attention to the language, because I know he does not want it the way it is now, for it would work a wrong. It continues:

There is hereby reserved for the purpose and upon the conditions provided in this act, in each of the States to which the desert-land law of the United States is applicable, 1,000,000 acres of the surveyed public arid lands in said States, respectively.

I suggest that there should be inserted there "said reservation to take effect when such lands are selected by said States."

Mr. CAREY. There is no objection whatever to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some such provision as I have suggested should be inserted at that point.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that be the intention, then let that provision be inserted in the bill.

Mr. CAREY. The lands will not be tied up until the State does select them; so that the amendment may be put in at that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Missouri indicate the exact point where he desires the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall do so later when the amendments of the committee have been acted upon.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 13, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Provided, That any lands so reserved which shall not be reclaimed within five years from the date of their selection, as aforesaid, or as to which the State has not expended or caused to be expended the sum of $3 per acre in works intended for the reclamation of such lands, as now required by the United States desert-land law from claimants thereunder, shall be released from such reservation and become subject to disposal as other public lands of the United States, after proclamation by the President so declaring.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 7, after the word "provided," to insert:

And where there is no adverse claimant the decision of the register and receiver as to what are arid lands shall be final.

So as to read:

SEC. 3. That all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed arid lands within the meaning of this act, which fact shall be ascertained by affidavit of two or more credible witnesses, filed in the land office of the district in which such land may be situated at the time of the selection thereof, as herein provided, and where there is no adverse claimant the decision of the register and receiver as to what are arid lands shall be final.

Mr. COCKRELL. As to that amendment, I will suggest that it would hardly be proper to let the register and receiver approve the selection, without communicating with the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I think the selection ought to be approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of keeping the records straight in the Department. As a matter of course, if there be no contest about the matter, it ought to be subject to the final approval of the Department.

Mr. CAREY. The trouble about it is that the committee considered the fact that the five years commences to run against the State that undertakes this work immediately on the selection of the land. The difficulty is to get anything approved in the General Land Office. For instance, in the selection of State lands it takes from one to five years.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that difficulty will be obviated in the near future and the work will be brought up to current date. I do not think there will be any trouble about that.

Mr. CAREY. Very well, then; let the amendment go out, though I think it is all right as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CAREY. It is a committee amendment, and I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is reversing the general policy of having everything in relation to the public lands approved in the General Land Office.

Mr. CAREY. If it were not for the two or three States that have arid lands it would be all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there will be found no trouble about it. If there should be found to be any difficulty, we can remedy it by immediate legislation.

Mr. CAREY. Very well; let the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the words "act, and," in line 10 of section 1, I move to insert the words "such reservation."

Mr. CAREY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest to the Senator that he also insert the words "and approval."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; so as to read: "from the date of such selection and approval."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, before the word "from," it is proposed to insert "such reservation to take effect;" and after the word "selection," in line 11, to insert "and approval;" so as to read:

To be selected by each of said States within ten years after the passage of this act, and such reservation to take effect from the date of such selection and approval, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAREY subsequently said: I move that the votes by which the bill (S. 1591) to provide for the reservation, sale, and settlement of certain lands in several of the States and Territories, was ordered to a third reading and passed, be reconsidered simply for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in the print of the bill.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. I move to amend the bill in section 4, line 2, before the words "and Kansas," by striking out "Montana," and inserting "Nebraska," so as to read:

That this act shall also apply to the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and to the States that may be formed out of the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah, when admitted, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company.

I will state that this is a very important bill for the District of Columbia. The Metropolitan Railway Company has great difficulty, owing to the failure on their part to comply with the provisions of the law. The House of Representatives has already favorably acted upon this bill, and it seems to be very necessary that the question which has arisen in regard to the charter and to the propulsion of the cars should be settled immediately.

Therefore, I ask that the bill may be read; and as the reading proceeds, I will answer any questions that may be asked in regard to it. It is a short bill, merely amending their charter and arranging for the company to use underground power and put on new cars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "hereby," to insert:

Required to cease to use on its lines running east and west each and every closed car that has been in use on any of its lines for three years or more, and shall substitute therefor new cars of the most approved pattern. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section within ninety days from the approval of this act shall subject the said company to a fine of $25 for each and every day during which the company neglects or refuses to make the substitution of new cars as herein specified, which fine may be recovered by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in any court of competent jurisdiction.

So as to make the section read:

That the Metropolitan Railroad Company, incorporated under the act of Congress approved the 1st day of July, anno Domini 1864, be, and the same is hereby, required to cease to use on its lines running east and west each and every closed car that has been in use on any of its lines for three years or more, and shall substitute therefor new cars of the most approved pattern. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section within ninety days from the approval of this act shall subject the said company to a fine of $25 for each and every day during which the company neglects or refuses to make the substitution of new cars as herein specified, which fine may be recovered by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 1, to insert:

SEC. 2. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be and the same is hereby.

In line 3 of the same section, before the word "cars," to strike out "their" and insert "its;" and in line 6, before the word "road," to strike out "their" and insert "its;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and the same is hereby, authorized, empowered, and required to equip and operate the lines of its cars upon and along all the streets and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, within the District of Columbia, where the lines of its road or any part thereof are now laid and operated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 8, before the words "an underground," to insert "a pneumatic or with;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and the same is hereby, authorized, empowered, and required to equip and operate the lines of its cars upon and along all the streets and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, within the District of Columbia, where the lines of its road or any part thereof are now laid and operated, and as hereinafter provided, with a pneumatic or with an underground electric system for propulsion of such cars.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether there are any cars being run in this country by pneumatic power?

Mr. McMILLAN. There have been attempts to run cars by pneumatic power, and there are experiments occasionally in the use of that system. But the bill does not provide that the company shall apply pneumatic power. It simply gives them authority to use the pneumatic system.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that, but is it not a fact that all the experiments in the use of that power, so far as this country is concerned, have been failures? Is it worth while to designate in an act a system which is a failure?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not strenuous about the amendment. The bill only gives the railway company authority to use that power.

Mr. STEWART. It seems to me that it would be subject to criticism in that connection to require the road to adopt the pneumatic system, when there is no such power in use.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to striking out the provision in regard to pneumatic power. I think it is covered by the bill.

Mr. STEWART. The insertion of those words can not do any good. It is not a power which is used in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan consent that the amendment may be disagreed to?

Mr. McMILLAN. I consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 2, line 8, before the word "system," to strike out "electric;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and the same is hereby, authorized, empowered, and required to equip and operate the lines of its cars upon and along all the streets and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, within the District of Columbia, where the lines of its road or any part thereof are now laid and operated, and as hereinafter provided, with an underground system for propulsion of such cars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 10, after the word "completed," to insert "upon its north and south line;" in line 11, after the word "year," to insert "and upon its east and west line within two years," and in line 12, before the word "approval," to strike out the words "date of the;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the change to an underground system shall be completed upon its north and south line within one year, and upon its east and west line within two years after the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "Square," to insert:

And also an extension from Ninth street west northwesterly on Florida avenue to Tenth street west: Provided, That on the completion of the extension from Ninth street to Tenth street on Florida avenue, as herein provided for, the said company shall cease to operate that portion of its present lines which extends from Ninth street west to Seventh street west on Florida avenue, and also that portion on Seventh street west north of Florida avenue.

And in line 23, after the word "such," to strike out "completion" and insert "completions;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided, There shall be completed an extension thereof on East Capitol street from Ninth street east to Fifteenth street east, around both sides of Lincoln Square, and also an extension from Ninth street west northwesterly on Florida avenue to Tenth street west: Provided, That on the completion of the extension from Ninth street to Tenth street on Florida avenue, as herein provided for, the said company shall cease to operate that portion of its present lines which extends from Ninth street west to Seventh street west on Florida avenue, and also that portion on Seventh street west north of Florida avenue. And in default of such completions all acts or parts of acts chartering or extending the said road are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (4) 5, line 2, after the word "power," to insert:

In all cases where the lines of one or more companies coincide under routes authorized by Congress, with the route of the Metropolitan Railway Company, and where the nature of the mechanical power used by said company will allow;

So as to read:

That the District Commissioners shall have the power in all cases where the lines of one or more companies coincide under routes authorized by Congress, with the route of the Metropolitan Railway Company, and where the nature of the mechanical power used by said company will allow, to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad Company by other railroad companies in the said District upon such terms and conditions as said Commissioners shall deem just.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That on and after one year from the approval of this act the Metropolitan Railway Company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $600 for each and every car operated by horses on that portion of its lines known as the Ninth Street line; and on and after two years from the approval of this act the said railway company shall pay, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $500 for each and every car operated by horses on any line owned or controlled by the said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan, in charge of the bill, as to the nature of the case pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia which the bill proposes to transfer to the court of appeals. What is the case and what is it about?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is an old claim for paving, running back a great many years, which has already been settled by the courts in favor of the company because of the statute of limitations. Now the company has given way on that, and has agreed to what is virtually an arbitration of the whole matter. That is to say, the District Commissioners and the company got together on the proposition to refer the case to the court of appeals for the District of Columbia, the decision of which court should be final. No appeal is to be taken by either side.

This is the provision in the bill as it comes from the House; and the Senate committee has made no change in it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The judgment was rendered for a very large amount.

Mr. MCMILLAN. About $160,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It was a judgment rendered against the company?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was a judgment rendered in favor of the District against the company in the District courts, but on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, judgment was rendered in favor the company, by reason of the statute of limitations. This provision opens up the whole case again, and the railway company is willing to give way and allow the court of appeals finally to settle the controversy.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Was there any appeal?

Mr. MCMILLAN. There was, and it was decided in favor of the company by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On the ground of the statute of limitations?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is the purpose of transferring the case now by law from one court to another?

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Michigan permit me for one moment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. The statute of limitations was pleaded and sustained. Then, in a subsequent act, we put in a provision forfeiting the charter if the company did not pay the judgment.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Why do we not stand by that action and compel the company to pay the judgment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait a moment. The company claim that if the case had been tried upon the facts at issue the amount claimed would not have been given against them.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is a correct statement.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the situation.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the rights of the District, I will say to the Senator from Oregon, are fully protected by the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wish to ask another question in relation to the bill. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is usual in chartering a company to give them authority to issue bonds without any limit?

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is a limit here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is very indefinite. It is a limit fixed by the cost of the work, that is all. There is no limit to the bonds either in the aggregate or per mile. There is nothing of the kind.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will read the language of the section.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have it here in section 3.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It says:

That the said company is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its bonds, secured by a mortgage on its franchises and other property, to such amount as may be necessary to pay the cost of the work to be done and of the materials required, and the expenses incident to the change to be made as provided in this act—

This is done as to almost all these charters—but not in excess of such cost.

That is the usual form.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is there no amount fixed in any of these bills?

Mr. MCMILLAN. There sometimes is a rough estimate. You can not tell the amount in this case. You can not tell whether the road will cost $20,000 a mile, or $60,000 a mile, or $100,000 a mile. It is utterly impossible to tell, because it all depends on the character of the power used, and the expense of the conduit, and of the changes to water pipes, etc.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is all left to the company.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It has to be left to the stockholders. This is the same clause which is put in all such acts. The stockholders are not likely to issue any more bonds than they are compelled to issue.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Now, another question. I wish to understand the amendment of the Senate committee to section 5 on page 5. The section as the other House passed the bill read as follows:

That the District Commissioners shall have the power to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad Company by other railroad companies in the said District upon such terms and conditions as said Commissioners shall deem just, etc.

Now, the amendment reported by the Senate committee, and adopted by the Senate, makes it read as follows:

That the District Commissioners shall have the power in all cases where the lines of one or more companies coincide under routes authorized by Congress, with the route of the Metropolitan Railway Company, and where the nature of the mechanical power used by said company will allow, to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad Company by other railroad companies in the said District upon such terms and conditions as said Commissioners shall deem just.

What is a man to understand by that language? What lines does the word "coincide" comprehend?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is intended to apply to the roads which may be authorized by Congress to reach the same points that are now reached by the Metropolitan Company's tracks. There are several roads which might be brought in over the Metropolitan Company's tracks, roads which connect with it. The Senate committee has repeatedly reported in favor of allowing one to run over the tracks already laid by another company. There are three other roads which are run partially over the Metropolitan tracks at the present time, and the object of putting in the last clause——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Why not leave it as provided by the other House? The House provision gives the Commissioners the power to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Company by other railroad companies of the District on such terms and conditions as they deem just. Why is not that sufficient?

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is a new provision. Such provisions are generally objected to by railroad companies. They do not think it desirable to have other companies running cars over their tracks. The power to make such requirements should remain in Congress and be exercised with due discretion to the interests involved.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. This amendment is to limit the power of the Commissioners, and yet it does not limit it after all. The word employed may be susceptible of one construction or another.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that this covers all the cases that will be applicable to the Metropolitan Company. We intended to protect this company, while opening the way for other companies to use streets already used for street railways. I think the provision is just and ample.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is it intended to give authority to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Company by the cars of other roads which connect with it?

Mr. MCMILLAN. This matter has been gone over very carefully in the interest of the District, and I do not quite see the point the Senator is trying to make. The intention is to allow railroads which can not now enter into the heart of the city to use the tracks of the Metropolitan Company to a certain extent under proper restrictions to be imposed by Congress as need arises. It is to prevent the use of other streets that are being demanded by different new companies here which eventually, unless we do something of this kind, will gridiron all the principal streets and avenues of the city of Washington.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is it not a fact that the bill as it came from the other House gave the Commissioners full power to compel the company to permit the use of its tracks by any other railway company in the District? Is not that the effect of the House provision?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think that is not a fair thing to do to the company.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Why not?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Because, for instance, the Metropolitan Company may adopt a certain kind of mechanical power, and they would not then want horses to be run over their line. If we want rapid transit we can not have it with horses and electricity applied to the same line. Therefore we put in the amendment "where the nature of the mechanical power used by said company will allow," which I think is a very proper amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It occurs to me that the word "coincide" will not serve the purpose sought to be accomplished.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What would the Senator suggest "to connect?"

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should strike out the whole provision, if I had my way about it, and give the Commissioners the precise power that the other House gave them, and no more and no less.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is drawn with a great deal of care, and I think it is in the real interest of the public.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I fail to see the exact purpose of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that "district court" is wrong in line 15 of section 5. It is the supreme court of the District that has jurisdiction.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection to the change, if it is a mistake.

Mr. STEWART. We should have a better court.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is no objection to that change.

Mr. HUNTON. It ought to be the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection to that amendment. It ought to be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, line 15, after the word "the," strike out "District" and insert "supreme," and after the word "court" in the same line strike out "of the United States for the District of Columbia" and insert "of the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

If either party is dissatisfied with the compensation for such use so fixed by the Commissioners, the compensation may be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President to return the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana;

A bill (S. 322) to place Dunbar R. Ransom on the retired list of the Army; and

A bill (S. 1513) for the relief of Maj. Gen. George S. Greene.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4600) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the Secretary of War to furnish the House with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18, 27, 28, 29, 36, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 35, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "That all officers who have been appointed to any corps of the Navy after service in a different branch of the Navy, shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reentry into the Navy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, and down to and including the word "treatment," in line 5 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after the word "Navy," insert the words "in his discretion;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For paying Justin McCarthy, contractor for building the dry dock at Port Royal, S. C., in full for loss and damage caused by the cyclone of August 27 and 28, 1893, as ascertained by the Navy Department, $18,521.42."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Dry dock at Algiers, La.: For the purpose of completing the purchase of additional lands necessary for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, La., cost of advertising, plans and specifications for said dry dock, and expenses of judicial proceedings instituted for the condemnation of such additional lands, $23,025.03."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "namely," insert the following: "For sealing all the walls to remove existing disease germs and for antiseptically finishing and painting them, removing rotten wooden floors and replacing them by tile with slate sidings impervious to moisture, scraping and painting all doors and woodwork, refitting windows so as to be utilized in ventilation, remodelling cased wooden stairways and renewing them with iron or other suitable material, $15,000; for construction of one ward of modern design of sufficient size and cubic air space to accommodate at least fifty sick and wounded men, to be one story high with suitable elevation and to be constructed of the same material used for present hospital, $25,000;" and in line 14 of said amendment strike out "forty-four" and insert "sixty-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8, page 24 of the bill, after the word "laboratory," insert the words "and department of instruction;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of said amendment strike out the word "temporarily;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following as a separate paragraph:

"That every Member or Delegate of Congress whose district or Territory is now unrepresented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who is not an actual resident of the district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of September, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy, and the Secretary of the Navy shall nominate such candidate for appointment to the Academy, subject to qualifications now prescribed by law. Such cadets, when appointed, to be in addition to the number of cadets now allowed, and the sum of $5,500, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated for the additional number of cadets herein authorized."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Construction and steam machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore or herein authorized, $6,955,025 and from this amount there shall be paid all speed premiums upon new naval vessels earned previous to January 1, 1894, and which remain unpaid at this date, the amount of such speed premium in each case being according to the official report in the trial of each vessel approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. P. GORMAN,
JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
J. A. GEISSENHAINER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANDERSON. There were a great many points of disagreement between the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill. That is evident not only from the RECORD but from the conference report. Under the custom which obtains with reference to conference reports, they might as well be written in Sanscrit as in the form which they assume when they come to the two Houses of Congress. It is utterly impossible to ascertain from the reading of a conference report, or even from its examination after it has been printed, what have been the agreements or the disagreements between the two Houses.

I hope the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who of course is entirely familiar with the bill, will explain to the Senate what has been given away of the Senate's action in conference and what has been held to, and the main points of the conference report, so that they may be understood. I know particularly a matter that one of my colleagues in the House of Representatives was particularly interested in, who came to me about it this morning, that is in reference to the appointment of cadets to the Naval Academy where there has been a failure to appoint from the Congressional district or someone has been appointed from outside of the district. I am unable to ascertain from hearing that report read what has been done in that behalf. There are other matters of interest which I think ought to be explained, and I hope the Senator from Maryland will give us an explanation.

Mr. GORMAN. I can go over all the amendments in the bill if the Senator desires; but I will answer the Senator in the matter to which he has just alluded as to the appointment of cadets to the Naval Academy. The provision stands substantially as the bill came from the House in that respect, the Senate receding from the amendment offered by the Senator's colleague [Mr. ALLEN] requiring actual residence of two years in the district. Otherwise the provision stands substantially as it came from the House.

As to the remainder of the disagreements, the first amendment was on page 2, which provided for the appointment of officers who had been appointed to any corps of the Navy after serving in a different branch of the Navy, should have the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if they had reëntered the Navy. That provision the conferees of the Senate receded from, as it only embraced eighteen officers.

The remainder of the bill is substantially as it passed the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAUGATUCK HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan, under the project of 1867, as modified in 1869, 1870, 1875, 1882, and the improvements recommended in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1893.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. FORMAN, and Mr. WAUGH managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and accede to the request of the House for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CALL, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. CULLOM were appointed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6913, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the formal reading will be dispensed with and the bill will be read for action upon the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations as they may be reached in the reading.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 9, before the word "agents," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "fifty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of fifty-seven agents of Indian affairs at the following-named agencies, at the rate respectively indicated

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, after the word "agents," to strike out:

And also provided, That the Pueblo and Jicarilla Agency, New Mexico, is hereby abolished and consolidated with the Southern Ute Agency, Colorado.

And in line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

And all provisions of law fixing compensation for Indian agents in excess of that herein provided are hereby repealed, and all offices in the Indian service not herein provided for are hereby abolished.

So as to make the clause read:

Provided, That the foregoing appropriations shall not take effect nor become available in any case for or during the time in which any officer of the Army of the United States shall be engaged in performance of the duties of Indian agent at any of the agencies above named: Provided, further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may devolve the duties of any Indian agency upon the superintendent of the Indian training school located at such agency, whenever in his judgment such superintendent can properly perform the duties of such agency. And the superintendent upon whom such duties devolve shall give bond as other Indian agents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert "but no person employed by the United States and paid for any other service shall be paid for interpreting;" so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of necessary interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000; but no person employed by the United States and paid for any other service shall be paid for interpreting.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to insert:

For pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 2, to insert:

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,500: Provided, That he shall be allowed $3 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare: And provided, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 24, to insert:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens, serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 15, after the words "for purposes of," to strike out "erection" and insert "education;" so as to make the clause read:

For 5 per cent interest on $200,000, for purposes of education, per sixth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 23, after the word "authorize," to strike out "in his discretion;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay per capita in cash to the Iowa Indians in Oklahoma the sum of $24,000, appropriated by the act of February 13, 1891, as a partial payment to them for certain lands in Oklahoma ceded to the United States, in lieu of expending the same for their benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 17, after the word "ninety-three," to strike out "and;" in line 18, after the word "ninety-four," to insert "and June thirtieth, 1895;" and on page 26, line 3, before the word "cents," to strike out "four thousand one hundred and sixty-two dollars and sixty" and insert "six thousand two hundred and forty-three dollars and ninety;" so as to make the clause read:

POTTAWATOMIES OF INDIANA AND MICHIGAN.

For this amount due certain Pottawatomie Indians of Indiana and Michigan, being their proportion ($2,081.30) of the perpetual annuities ($22,300) due the Pottawatomie Nation under various treaties, for the years ending June 30, 1893, June 30, 1894, and June 30, 1895, as ascertained by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States pronounced in the case of the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana against the United States, on the 17th day of April, 1893, and which annuities were not embraced in the judgment aforesaid, $6,243.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 13, after the word "ninety-one," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the restrictions in patents issued to the Citizens' Band of Pottawatomies and Absentee Shawnee Indians over 21 years of age, are hereby waived subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President of the United States, as to lands owned by them in severalty in Oklahoma, it being understood that they shall only dispose of lands which they hold in excess of 80 acres each; except where said Indians are nonresidents of Oklahoma, they shall have the power to sell all of said lands.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have some explanation as to why the provision inserted by the other House is to be stricken out. I understand that it has the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not have the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I will send to the desk, however, a substitute which the committee proposes in lieu of the words striken out, which is in the exact language of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. If the Senator from Connecticut will turn to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the substitute as it is read, he will see that it is an exact copy of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the part proposed to be stricken out, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any member of the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians and of the Absentee Shawnee Indians of Oklahoma, to whom a trust patent has been issued under the provisions of the act approved February 8, 1887 (24 Stats., 388), and being over 21 years of age, may sell and convey any portion of the land covered by such patent in excess of 80 acres, the deed of conveyance to be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and that any Citizen Pottawatomie not residing upon his allotment, but being a legal resident of another State or Territory, may in like manner sell and convey all the land covered by said patent, and that upon the approval of such deed by the Secretary of the Interior the title to the land thereby conveyed shall vest in the grantee therein named, and the land sold and conveyed under the provisions of this act shall upon proper recording of the deeds therefor, be subject to taxation as other lands in said Territory, but neither the lands covered by such patents not sold and conveyed under the provisions of this act, or any improvements made thereon, shall be subject to taxation in any manner by the Territorial or local authorities during the period in which said lands shall be held in trust by the United States.

Mr. PLATT. Since the Senator from Missouri answered me, as I thought, somewhat curtly——

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. If I said anything that was not in the most kindly manner I beg pardon, for I certainly meant nothing curt.

Mr. PLATT. The proposition of the committee as it stood in the bill was to strike out the entire provision and allowing the lands to be sold, and I knew that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had recommended a sale of the lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. We struck it out because we did not have the substitute. We wanted to get the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and we also desired to report the bill at once.

Mr. PLATT. This is entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out and inserting.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is the Senate entertaining amendments, or are we to go through with the committee amendments first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is acting upon the amendments of the committee as they are reached in the reading.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 30, after line 15, to strike out:

For permanent annuity, for educational purposes, per fourth article of treaty of August 3, 1795, and third article of treaty of May 10, 1854, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 19, to strike out:

For permanent annuity, in specie, for educational purposes, per fourth article of treaty of September 29, 1817, and third article of treaty of May 10, 1854, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 24, to strike out:

For interest, at 5 per cent, on $ 0,000, for educational purposes, per third article of last named treaty, $2,000; in all, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on the books of the Treasury Department, to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, the sum of $100,000, being the value of annuities of the Shawnee Indians arising under their treaties of August 3, 1795, and May 10, 1854, transferred to the Cherokees by an agreement between the said tribes, dated June 7, 1869, under the provisions of article 16 of the treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokees, the said sum to be apportioned as follows, namely: Cherokee national fund, $50,000; Cherokee school fund, $35,000; Cherokee orphan fund, $15,000; interest on these several sums at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1894, to be paid under the provisions of the act of April 1, 1880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 5, after the word "that," to strike out "this sum" and insert "the foregoing sum of $1,000,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,000,000: Provided, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be used in completing three artesian wells at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Agencies, this amount in addition to the sum appropriated for that purpose by act of March 3, 1893: Provided, That the foregoing sum of $1,000,000 shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed whenever practicable: And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 25, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That when in pursuance of any treaty an appropriation has been heretofore made to erect schoolhouses for the accommodation of the children of any tribe of Sioux Indians out of any fund belonging to said Indians which appropriation is still in force, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed as early as practicable to erect such school buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 4, before the word "machines," to strike out "thrashing" and insert "threshing;" in line 12, before the word "appropriated," to strike out "to be;" in line 14, after the word "extended," to insert "to:" and in the same line, after the word "expended," to strike out "to" and insert "for;" so as to make the clause read:

For third of ten installments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the removal of the Spokane Indians to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation, in erecting suitable houses, in assisting them in breaking lands, in furnishing them with cattle, seeds, agricultural implements, saw and grist mills, threshing machines, mowers, clothing, and provisions; in taking care of the old, sick, and infirm; in affording educational facilities, and in any other manner tending to their civilization and self-support, as per article 5 of agreement with said Indians, dated March 18, 1887, ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892, $8,000: Provided, That any moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the removal of said Spokane Indians to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation shall be extended to, or expended for, such members of the tribe who have removed or shall remove to the Colville, Spokane, or Jocko Reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate and effect, if practicable, an agreement with the Ogden Land Company, its successors or assigns, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of all such right, title, and interest as it may be found to have in and to any and all of the lands occupied by the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York, if any right is found to exist. Any agreement made hereunder to be subject to ratification by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. After line 2, page 40, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to make a thorough investigation of the facts touching the so-called Ogden Land Company, its organization, when and by whom formed, its continued existence or organization to this date, its capital stock, number of shares, amount or face value, where and by whom held, its liabilities and assets, and the original history of the alleged claim of said company to any of the lands of the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York, and any and all evidences of title, and also the condition of said Indians, their progress in civilization, and fitness for citizenship, their number, and system of government, and the propriety of allotting their lands in severalty, and to make to Congress a full report of such suggestions and recommendations as he may deem proper in view of all the facts ascertained.

Mr. PLATT. It was impossible to catch the meaning of the amendment from the reading of it. Will the Senator in charge of the bill please explain what is proposed by the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was the following provision inserted by the House of Representatives:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate and effect, if practicable, an agreement with the Ogden Land Company, its successors or assigns, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of all such right, title, and interest as it may be found to have in and to any and all of the lands occupied by the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York.

Mr. PLATT. I am familiar with that matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Ogden Land Company dates its existence back prior to the Revolutionary war, or about that time.

Mr. PLATT. I understand all about the Ogden Land Company; but what is it that the amendment proposes to do?

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment directs the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the whole question as to the origin and the continued existence of the Ogden Land Company, its membership, its capital in bonds and in stock, and its contracts and rights, if any, to this land, and then whether the land should be allotted to the Indians in severalty, and to report the facts with such recommendations as he may make, doing nothing that binds Congress.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, line 7, before the word "thousand," to insert "and ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas, and affiliated bands who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 8, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase land and subsistence and other necessaries for the support of the Digger Indians, Central California, and for such other purposes as may be deemed necessary for the civilization of said Indians, $10,000. A primary day school may be established and maintained out of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 6, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may deem proper and necessary to protect the interests of the Indians and of the United States, to sell or otherwise dispose of a quantity of timber from time to time on the Jicarilla Apache Indian Reservation, the proceeds to be used by him in the purchase of such stock or other articles for the benefit of the Indians belonging thereto as will best tend to promote their welfare and advance them in civilization.

So as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona, $185,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 15, after the word "employés," to insert "and purchase of farming implements and seed;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Navajo Indians, New Mexico Territory, including pay of employés and purchase of farming implements and seed, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert "one-half of which sum shall be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in procuring permanent homes for said Indians;" so as to make the clause read:

For support, civilization, and instruction of the Seminoles in Florida, $6,000, one-half of which sum shall be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in procuring permanent homes for said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 19, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to remove and rebuild the bridge across the Big Wind River on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "at least one-half of this amount shall be expended for Indian employés;" so as to make the clause read:

Utah: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents in Utah, support and civilization of Indians at Uintah Valley and Ouray Agencies, $3,000, and pay of employés at said agencies, $5,000; in all, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 20, after the word "Arizona," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "two thousand four hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For operating and repairing the flour mill at Pima Agency, Arizona, $2,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 49, to insert:

For the erection of a flour and saw mill at Shoshone Agency, Wyoming, and to purchase machinery therefor, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 14, to insert:

That all persons who are in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent who are entitled to an allotment of land upon any Indian reservation under any law of Congress, or who claim to be so entitled to land under any allotment act or under any grant made by Congress, or who claim to have been unlawfully denied or excluded from any allotment or any parcel of land to which he, she, or they claim to be lawfully entitled by virtue of any act of Congress, may commence and prosecute or defend any action, suit, or proceeding in relation to their right thereto in the same manner as may be done by citizens of the United States.

Mr. CALL. I move to insert as a substitute for the amendment which has just been read, the clause which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the committee amendment from line 15 to line 25, inclusive, on page 49, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That all persons who are in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent who are entitled to an allotment of land under any law of Congress, or who claim to be so entitled to land under any allotment act or under any grant made by Congress, or who claim to have been unlawfully denied or excluded from any allotment or any parcel of land to which they claim to be lawfully entitled by virtue of any act of Congress, may commence and prosecute or defend any action, suit, or proceeding in relation to their right thereto, in proper district courts of the United States; and said district courts are hereby given jurisdiction to try and determine any action, suit, or proceeding arising within their respective jurisdictions, involving the rights of any person, in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent, to any allotment of land under any law or treaty, and the judgment or decree of any such court in favor of any claimant to an allotment of land shall have the same effect when properly certified to the Secretary of the Interior, as if such allotment had been allowed and approved by him.

Mr. PLATT. It is very difficult to get at the exact meaning of the amendment as it was read at the desk, owing to the confusion in the Chamber; but I am afraid that, unless an exception be made, the Cherokee Indians will think that in some way or other it affects or may affect the question of what is called the intruders in the Indian country. If they should think that this provision in any way relates to the lands there upon which the intruders have settled in the past or may settle in the future, it would utterly prevent any negotiations on their part with what is called the Dawes Commission. I suggest that there be added to the amendment these words:

But this provision shall not apply to any lands now held by either of the five civilized tribes.

Mr. CALL. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

But this provision shall not apply to any lands now held by either of the five civilized tribes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. This is an amendment to the amendment offerred by the Senator from Florida, and I should like to have that amendment again stated at the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is just the same as the amendment reported by the committee, which is printed in the bill, except that it provides for the proceeding in the proper district court of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. I think there is an omission before the words "district court." Let the amendment be again stated as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all persons who are in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent, who are entitled to an allotment of land under any law of Congress, or who claim to be so entitled to land under any allotment act, or under any grant made by Congress, or who claim to have been unlawfully denied or excluded from any allotment, or any parcel of land to which they claim to be lawfully entitled by virtue of any act of Congress, may commence and prosecute or defend any action, suit, or proceeding in relation to their right thereto in proper district courts of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. There is an omission there.

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "the" should be inserted before the word "proper."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made, in the absence of objection. The reading of the amendment will be continued.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

In the proper district courts of the United States, and said district courts are hereby given jurisdiction to try and determine any action, suit, or proceeding arising within their respective jurisdictions, involving the rights of any person, in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent, to any allotment of land under any law or treaty; and the judgment or decree of any such court in favor of any claimant to an allotment of land shall have the same effect, when properly certified to the Secretary of the Interior, as if such allotment had been allowed and approved by him; but this provision shall not apply to any lands now held by either of the five civilized tribes.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to suggest that except in bankruptcy cases and in some other exceptional cases, the district courts are not given civil jurisdiction. Suits of this character are usually brought in the circuit court.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be more appropriate to bring the suits in the district court in the beginning. This amendment proposes to give express jurisdiction, and it was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so that there might be no question as to the place where the suits should be brought.

Mr. DOLPH. I think I am quite as familiar with the practice in the United States courts as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. By this provision a question might be raised when there is an appeal in a civil case about where it is to go, and all that sort of thing. The district judges serve as circuit judges, and try all the cases in the circuit court; but I think, as a rule, it would be better to make these cases triable in the circuit court as similar cases are.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well, let that go in.

Mr. DOLPH. If there be no objection, let the word "district," where it occurs in the amendment, be changed to "circuit."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "district" where it occurs and insert the word "circuit;" so as to read "circuit courts of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have a number of memorials bearing upon this bill, which I have received in my mail to-day, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present them at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CALL. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the memorials will be received.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I will state that these memorials, I understand, originated with the Patriotic Order of Sons of America and affiliated organizations. The one I have in my hand is from citizens of Clinton County, Pa. The first signers I notice are the superintendent of the public schools of that county and the ex-superintendent.

The memorialists state that they remonstrate against the violation of the American principle of "separation of church and state," which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education.

They emphatically protest against the passage in its present form of the pending Indian appropriation bill, as that bill specifically appropriates Government moneys for various sectarian schools or undertakings, and permits the Indian Department to contract with others. Therefore, upon the bill itself, and particularly upon the provisions referred to, they ask that a yea-and-nay vote may be taken, believing that the citizens of the country have the right to know what Senators favor this class of education for the nation's wards.

They call the attention of the Senate very particularly to the resolutions of various church societies in opposition to the bill, and petition us to change the pending bill by adopting an amendment similar to the one offered by Representative GEAR, which, in substance, provides for a system of Government schools for advancing education among the Indians on the basis of the American free-school system, and the memorialists ask the influence and votes of the Senate for "the Government schools only."

In addition to this memorial of L. M. Patterson and 60 others, of Clinton County, Pa., I also present the memorials of E. C. Miller and 51 others, of Houtzdale, Pa.; of W. F. Werley and 25 others, of Lehigh County, Pa.; of E. F. Becker and 58 others, of Lancaster, Pa., and of Rev. J. M. Spangler and 52 others, of Cambria County, Pa., all remonstrating against the present system of sectarian Indian education receiving governmental aid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petitions will be received and laid on the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. QUAY. In pursuance of the suggestion from the Patriotic Order of Sons of America in one of their councils, as well as of the memorials I have presented, I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until two weeks from to-day, in order that the patriotic orders of the country may be heard from.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the motion will not prevail, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT. It was my intention when we should reach the portion of the bill, which we shall come to pretty soon, providing for denominational schools, to make some inquiries with reference to the policy of the Government in that respect and some observations on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to postpone the consideration of the bill for two weeks from to-day.

Mr. QUAY. In order that the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America may be heard from. That is part of the motion, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was not agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 51, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the service of not exceeding eight hundred and fifty privates, at $10 per month each, and not exceeding seventy-five officers, at $15 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquors on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of equipments, and for the purchase of rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 6, to insert:

Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies: To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian service and pay of necessary employés; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $275,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount $35,000 shall be expended in South Dakota;" so as to make the clause read:

For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations, and of lands to be allotted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $60,000, of which amount $35,000 shall be expended in South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 23, to insert:

For surveying lands in the Indian Territory, known as those of the Five Civilized Tribes, in conformity to the laws applicable to the public domain, $5,000; and any unexpended balance of the sum of $25,000 appropriated by section 15 of the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1893, is hereby made available and may be applied to the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 6, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to negotiate through Indian inspectors of his Department with any Indians for the surrender of portions of their respective reservations, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 11, to insert:

For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians for the sale and relinquishment of certain portions of their reservation in the State of Wyoming to the United States, $2,000; and the Secretary of the Interior shall detail immediately one or more of the five Indian inspectors to make an agreement with said Indians: Provided, That any agreement entered into for said lands shall be ratified by Congress before it shall become binding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 5, after the word "ninety," to insert:

And an additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse such of the fifteen other settlers whose claims are held for further proof, in such amounts as may be found justly due them by the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of an act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, providing for the assessment of damages resulting to nine hundred and forty-four settlers who went upon the Crow Creek and Winnebago Indian Reservation, in the now State of South Dakota, between the 27th day of February, 1885, and the 17th day of April, 1885, and who were afterwards removed therefrom by the Government, the sum of $116,119.19, said sum being the amount found due after careful examination by the Secretary of the Interior and recommended by him for payment in pursuance of said act of October 1, 1890, and an additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse such of the fifteen other settlers whose claims are held for further proof, in such amounts as may be found justly due them by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out "the same to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of continuing and completing the appraisal of improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, $4,996.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to allow to Eugene E. White, of Prescott, Ark., late a special United States Indian agent, a credit of $165 on his two cash accounts, one for the quarter ending December 31, 1887, and the other for the quarter ending March 31, 1888, and out of said amount to pay him the sum of $69.49, which is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 24, to insert:

To provide for the expenses of the five commissioners appointed to take a census of the Old Settlers Cherokees, $5,000, the same to be deducted from the amount awarded to said Indians by judgment of the Court of Claims, dated June 6, 1893, and reimbursed to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 6, to strike out:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools and the erection and repair of school buildings on Indian reservations, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including the pay of the superintendent of Indian schools the salary of $2,500 with traveling expenses as prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,070,000, $20,000 of which may be used for the purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, and swine, and poultry, for schools, and $20,000 for the transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools.

And insert:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,000,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska; for the erection and repair of school buildings on Indian reservations, $40,000; for the purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, and poultry, for schools, $20,000; for collecting and transporting pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools, except Carlisle, and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified, to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor, $35,000; in all, $1,095,000.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire whether the lump sum of $1,095,000 is for the support of Government schools, or whether some portion of it is to be used for the support of what are known as contract schools?

Mr. CALL. The amendment, I understand, includes what are known as contract schools also.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] a few moments ago presented a memorial from citizens of Pennsylvania, the object of which is to remonstrate against the appropriation of money by the Government for denominational schools for Indian pupils.

I have a similar memorial from citizens of Middletown, Conn., numerously signed, protesting against appropriations to sectarian schools for the education of Indians, which I present at this time and ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT. In reference to this matter, I desire to say that I am, and have been for a number of years, entirely opposed to appropriating money for the support of denominational Indian schools. I had hoped that the policy of having all our Indian schools Government schools was to prevail, and that the number of Indian pupils in attendance upon denominational schools would be reduced as rapidly as possible. It is practically impossible in an appropriation bill to reduce the appropriation for the purpose of carrying on these schools. To refuse to appropriate money in the pending bill for the denominational schools is to have the education of about one-third, more or less, of the Indian pupils of the United States stopped at once, without any provision being made by the Government for their education.

There has been some reduction in the appropriations for denominational schools. I am unable to ascertain from the bill, and I think none of the appropriation acts afford that information exactly, how much money is to be expended by the Government in any one year for the denominational schools, because there is a lump sum of $1,000,000 for the support of the Government schools, and a portion of that amount is used to support the denominational schools. Certain denominational schools are provided for specifically in the bill, and I understand other denominational schools are provided for from the appropriation of a million dollars, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may make contracts.

The amount paid for denominational schools reached its highest point in 1892, when it was $611,570. In 1893 it fell to $533,241, and in the fiscal year which expired on the 30th of June last it was $512,435. Whether a further reduction is contemplated for the present fiscal year I am unable to discover from the appropriations in the pending bill. There is a table in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs showing the expenditure for this purpose from 1887 to 1894, inclusive, which I will ask may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Congregationalists have heretofore taken some official action declaring that they will cease to take aid from the Government in conducting the Indian schools carried on under their supervision. This has partially gone into effect. The Methodist denomination drew out, if I may use that expression, in 1892, and the Episcopal Church reduced the amount received from Government from $29,910 in 1891 to $7,020 in 1894, gradually withdrawing from the work. The attendance of pupils at Government schools and at contract schools is shown in table 1 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I ask that it may be inserted in my remarks.

Amounts set apart for various religious bodies for Indian education for each of the fiscal years 1887 to 1894, inclusive.

This table shows that the highest number enrolled in contract schools was, in 1891, 6,477, while in 1893 it had fallen off about 350, to 6,125. In the meantime the enrollment in the Government schools was rapidly increasing, having increased from 11,449 in 1891 to 14,715 in 1893.

I fully sympathize not only with the sentiment which seems to be extending in the country that the Government should not aid denominational Indian schools, but in the wider sentiment that the Government ought not to appropriate money for any institutions which are carried on by sects or denominations, especially with regard to the teaching of Indians. I do not think there ought to be two systems.

I believe that the Government system is the right system, and that all the Indian schools ought to be Government schools. I do not believe that the contract schools by the different denominations have been of the service in the education of Indian children that the Government schools have been. It raises jealousy between the denominations, and more or less the different religious denominations seek to inculcate religious truths according to their idea of what religious truth is.

Now, in Alaska, for instance, where we are carrying on education, I think the education is conducted among and by eight different denominations, and there is continual jealousy and bickering among them. All this must have its effect upon the practicability and the efficiency of the education of the Indian children. I know of no reason why the Government should not educate all the children, if it educates any, and I hope and have hoped that the policy of denominational schools might cease.

The matter has been discussed in the Senate before. I think we have had assurances here, and indeed from the Indian Commissioners, that the denominational schools should as rapidly as possible be done away with and Government schools substituted in their place. Practically, it is impossible to do away with the contract schools all at once without serious injury to the children who are being educated in them, but the policy of doing away with them ought to be adopted by Congress, and they should gradually be abandoned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the remark made by the Senator from Connecticut a moment ago answers the question I rose to propound. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut if there is any substantial reason why we might not provide that no part of the appropriation of $1,000,000 should be used for denominational schools. Would such a proviso attached to the appropriation work hardship or conflict with contracts now made?

Mr. PLATT. The difficulty about it is that all these schools are in operation, the children are attending them, and the buildings in many instances are owned by the denominations. The Government has no buildings at the places where the schools are conducted, and to cut off the appropriations suddenly would simply prevent the education of the children who are now being educated in the contract schools. It will break up the schools until such a time as the Government can establish schools to take charge of the children who are now being educated in the contract schools.

That is the difficulty. If it were not for that I should be in favor of a provision that from this moment the contract-school system should be abolished, and the entire education of Indian children carried on by the Government. But in thinking about this matter and considering it, as we have considered it, it does not seem practicable to discontinue the practice by a provision upon an appropriation bill when the system is in operation, and when it must either be appropriated for or the education of the children cease.

It depends largely upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs whether the policy shall be restricted. He has a certain sum of money to expend for the education of children, not specially provided for in the act, and a portion of that sum goes to support contract schools which are not specifically provided for in the act. The Commissioner can gradually withdraw these contracts, and I believe the sentiment of the country, the sentiment of all denominations of Christians, is against continuing the system of schools carried on by the denominations. I think it is a great mistake that they were ever instituted at all.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, in connection with the general subject I send to the desk and ask to have read a communication to me from the officers of the Women's National Indian Association and the Universal Peace Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

1823 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, June 7, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The Universal Peace Union having examined the Indian appropriations bill reported in the House of Representatives April 30, earnestly requests that you will present in the United States Senate the urgent protest of this Union against the proposed reduction, by $70,000, of the amount for day and industrial schools named as necessary by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and also against the reduction by, $150,000, of the appropriation needed for the current fiscal year, as well as against the clauses hampering the use of educational funds when appropriated.

We also protest against the reduction, by $16,000, of the appropriation for the Carlisle Indian School, and against the diminution of the total sum for all Indian schools, by over $315,000, or more than $231,000 less than the amount named as necessary by the Secretary of the Interior.

All these reductions would, we know from long observation of the needs of the Indian service, be disastrous to Indian education and civilization, and therefore this society, with its wide membership and world-wide influence, as well as the many societies included in your own constituency, will be grateful to you for your influence, efforts, and vote against these proposed reductions.

Second. Permit us, sir, on the other hand, to ask you to present an expression of our profound gratitude that our Government seven years ago by legislation pledged itself to the policy of Indian education and civilization, and this in order to fit our Indian tribes for the radical and permanent economy of self-support and United States citizenship, and to say that it is because such a policy is the only economical one that we should regard the above proposed reductions, if granted, as in effect a criminal extravagance.

Third. We beg you, sir, to say for us, in view of the true national economy of Indian industrial education and its resulting self-support, that, instead of a diminution of Indian appropriations, we would urge the small increase needed to provide schools for all Indians of school age, and that we emphatically urge adequate provision for the retention of all the inspectors, superintendents, and field matrons, and for the continuance of all the facilities now employed for Indian civilization and education, not one of which is yet more than adequate; and, lastly, that there may be the usual appropriation for the expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, whose vigilance and uncompensated services have saved to our Government many hundreds of thousands of dollars, many antagonisms, and been so important and inexpensive a factor in Indian progress.

We are, sir, for the Universal Peace Union,

Yours, respectfully,

AMELIA S. QUINTON,
President Women's National Indian Association.
THOMAS J. WHITNEY,
Vice-President Universal Peace Union.
FRANK E. CARSON,
Secretary Universal Peace Union, Committee.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, United States Senator.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is true, as stated in the communication which has just been read, that there has been a serious reduction in the amount of money to be appropriated for Indian education.

Mr. CALL. There has been a reduction, but I am not prepared to state the total amount of the reduction. There has been a reduction in special cases where it is believed, according to the statements of the Commissioner and the other evidence before the committee, that the schools are not well attended, and that the expenditure is not required to the full extent of former appropriations. There are special reasons in each case which would have to be investigated before any conclusion would be arrived at with regard to the correctness of that statement. There have been reductions all along the line, but as to the schools, it has generally been in cases where there has been a nonattendance of pupils and the establishment of other schools, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner and the committee, render larger appropriations unnecessary.

Mr. PLATT. The communication from the president of the Women's National Indian Association and the vice-president and the secretary of the Universal Peace Union makes the statement that the diminution of the total sum for all Indian schools is $315,000, or more than $231,000 less than the amount named as necessary by the Secretary of the Interior. It would hardly seem that a reduction of $315,000 less than the amount appropriated last year for Indian education could be accounted for by diminution of appropriations in cases of schools where there has been a nonattendance of scholars.

The pupils in Government schools increased in 1891, 1,549; in in 1892 over 1891, 1,981; in 1893 over 1892, 1,210. We have not the figures for 1894. But these figures show that there has been a gradual increase of Indian scholars, and I do not think there ought to be such a reduction.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the appropriation of $1,005,000 made in the bill $231,000 less than was given last year?

Mr. PLATT. No; less than the amount recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is $231,000 less than the amount named by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. President, speaking frankly, I do not believe that such a reduction is necessary. I do not believe it is justified by the circumstances. With the report of an increase in attendance and the general protest of the people who make a special study of the matter of Indian education and Indian progress against it, I think we ought to have some fair explanation as to why the Secretary of the Interior is cut down $231,000. He is not to be charged with any undue sentimentality. It is not a mere fancy on his part that he recommends this sum of money. It is to be supposed that this Administration selects a specially capable man.

Mr. PLATT. The Secretary of the Interior cut down the amount $75,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a capable man, and knows what he is about. As my colleague suggests to me, after the Secretary has cut down the appropriation $75,000, then the committee cuts it down $231,000.

Now, one of their reductions is in the appropriation for the Carlisle school. That is one of the schools which are a credit to American civilization. Capt. Pratt is like the late Gen. Armstrong, of Hampton, a man marvelously fitted for that kind of work. While he is full of what you may choose to call a sentimental enthusiasm upon this matter as Armstrong was, yet, like Armstrong, he is emphatically a man of what in common parlance is called horse sense. He is not wasting any money. He is making a profound impression upon a large body of Indian youths, who go back to their homes, and if 10 per cent of them go to the devil after they go home the money is still well invested.

I think it is a shame for the American people to go backward openly by a legislative decree in this splendid work. These people are our wards. We have done a great deal of foolish work in endeavoring to take care of them; but we happen to have been on the right track in this matter, and I am sure that the Democratic party will make nothing in the estimation of the morality and Christian civilization of this country by cutting down the Carlisle school, or by refusing to give the Secretary of the Interior by $231,000 as much as he wants after he has reduced his recommendation $75,000.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it is obviously impossible to form any intelligent judgment of the correctness of the action of the committee in this respect without examining each individual case. Whether a specific sum of money should be appropriated to a particular school depends upon the efficiency of that school, upon the number of pupils now and prospectively in the immediate future to be there, and it depends upon other schools. The various circumstances connected with each school will vary the appropriation from year to year. So in the large number of schools for which this appropriation is made it is impossible to judge of the reasons which actuated a majority of the committee without going to each particular school and considering the circumstances attending it.

The committee, however, acted upon the idea that the smallest amount of money which was capable of being used efficiently was the proper sum to appropriate in each case. It is obvious that unless we choose to go through the whole of the items, whether the aggregate amount shall be ascertained to be the correct amount or whether the estimate was the correct amount, that was the judgment of the committee as to each particular school making up the aggregate amount, which was reduced.

With regard to the appropriation for the Carlisle school, that is a proper subject of inquiry here. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will explain the reasons why the committee acted as it did in this particular instance. I wish to say a word in reference to the sectarian schools, as they are denominated.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire a little further about the Carlisle school? I can not understand that. The appropriation for the Carlisle school has been cut down. The committee reports an increase of $5,000. The item in last year's appropriation act is as follows:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil, for transportation of pupils to and from Carlisle school, and for the repair of buildings, $105,000; with additional pay of military officer acting as superintendent, $1,000: Provided, That not more than $5,000 of this amount shall be used in repairing buildings: And provided further, That no more Indian children shall enter and be educated and supported at said school who have not attended some other school for a period of at least three years; in all, $106,000.

The item on page 60 of the bill reads as follows:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil, for transportation of pupils to and from Carlisle school, and for the repair of buildings, $105,000; for additional pay of military officer acting as superintendent, $1,000; in all, $106,000.

So I do not see why the appropriation is not precisely the same as it was last year.

Mr. CALL. It is. There was no reduction for the Carlisle school.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill state what was the estimate for the present year for the Carlisle school? What was the amount recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read the estimate:

Support of Indian schools, $1,000,000; transportation, $10,000; superintendent, $1,000; repairs, $5,000; $116,000.

Mr. PLATT. It was then cut down $10,000 from the estimate?

Mr. CALL. Yes, from the estimate.

Some question was made here in regard to the appropriations in the bill, as there always is, for what is termed denominational schools. The committee had before it the protests of different denominations and associations from various portions of the country against any appropriations for what the memorialists term denominational or sectarian schools. The present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as well as the former Commissioners, have endeavored to prevent any increase in appropriations for what are termed denominational schools. The policy of the Government does not recognize different religious sects, and the policy of the administration of the Indian Department has been to make no recommendation of appropriations for different denominations.

These appropriations are not to sectarian or denominational schools, but according to the estimate and the report of the Commissioner there have been schools throughout the country established by citizens of the United States out of their own means, in different portions of the Indian Territory. They are charitable associations, and in the absence of an adequate provision on the part of the Government and for the purpose, I suppose, of avoiding the very greatly increased expense of assuming the entire burden of education, and to encourage by the policy of the Government these charitable efforts, contracts have been made not with denominations, not with any particular form of religious belief, but with citizens of the United States, made in former Administrations and continued down from one Administration to another.

No adequate provision being made for the education of the entire body of the Indians, I presume it was found best, as was stated by the Senator from Connecticut, not to discontinue abruptly the appropriations where charitable institutions of any kind undertake to take care of the Indian children but to provide an education for them without any knowledge, or any inquiry, or any reference to whether it was an Episcopalian, or a Methodist, or a Baptist, or a Catholic institution. Dealing with it as an agency offering to educate these children as citizens of the United States associated for these charitable purposes, and not looking into the question whether they are of one form of religious belief or of any form of religious belief, the law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner to make contracts for the education of these children.

Under this theory the schools were established; the present Administration finds they are in operation just as they were before; and in the absence of any other provision and in the interest of economy it has been thought proper that these contracts shall be made to do what? To carry out the existing contracts which rest upon the pledged faith of the Government more or less.

This I understand to be the justification of these appropriations. The Government has contributed to establish these schools not in money but by appropriating certain sums of money to pay for the education of these children. They are in existence and there is no adequate provision, and can not be, until some system shall be adopted looking into the future and taking effect in the future by which if it is possible to do so you can prohibit these denominational institutions from their voluntary use of their own money going into those sections of the country and educating the Indian children.

I find in the report of the Superintendent of Indian Schools the following:

In a previous annual report I said it was my opinion that as a whole the Government schools were the best, in respect to real scholarship. There are some very excellent contract schools, conducted by Presbyterians Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, and Congregationalists; but none of them are quite equal to the best Government schools, though a few are not much behind. It is safe to say that the general average of the Government schools is above the general average of the contract schools.

I have little sympathy with the complaint that "religious exercises take too much time in the contract schools," and that in the Roman Catholic schools "about all the children learn are prayers, the catechism, and a little fancy work." I have heard this charged ad nauseam. In a few cases the charge has been justified by the facts; but in almost all cases, if I may accept the statements made to me, but little time in school hours is occupied with such exercises, particularly with the catechism. In a few instances, I have found occasion to object to the amount of time devoted to the catechism, and in no instance have my objections been discourteously treated. I do not think it the purpose of the Government, so long as it accepts the contract schools as they are conducted, to severely disparage the religious exercises. The prayers, scripture passages, and religious songs are helpful, not only in teaching the English words, but also elevated sentiments.

That I understand to be the policy in regard to this bill as in all former appropriation bills for the Indian Department.

* * * * * * *

Bishop Whipple, a Protestant, whose life has been devoted to the Indians, a minister of the gospel distinguished for his learning, his piety, and his eminent ability, opposed to sectarian or denominational schools, in a speech which is appended to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Browning—a valuable and interesting report—says:

I have tried to make it the rule of my life that never, under any possible circumstances, would I be a party to presenting a divided Christianity to heathen folk. There was at this time a noble mission among the Sioux in the care of the Presbyterian Church, under the charge of two men, uncanonized saints. I allude to the venerable Dr. Williamson and the Rev. Dr. Riggs. They had a noble mission among the upper Sioux, but there were 2,500 Indians among the lower Sioux, where there was no mission: and when three of their chiefs came to me and said, "We have sold the Government 800,000 acres of our reservations, and we have waited for four years, and have not received one single penny, and we are entitled to $8,000 a year for schools, and that money has been expended for six years, and yet there is not among our people a single child who has ever learned to read," I said that I would plant a mission there.

For two years, twice each year, I visited the Indian country. In the Ojibway country I traveled from 500 to 1,000 miles each year on foot or in a birch-bark canoe. I saw very little fruit. We gathered a little Christian company, and there were some gleams of light. Then there came that awful Indian massacre. Eight hundred white people slept in nameless graves. I supposed that our missionaries were murdered, and I never can forget the anxiety of heart as I sat in my study, with the tears running down my cheeks; and, when she who was more than my right arm, who is waiting for me now in Paradise, came and put her arms around my neck, and said, "Henry, you have forgotten something." I said, "What, my dear?" "You have forgotten that it is your business to do the work, and God will take care of the harvest." And so I began again. When we heard from the Indian country, so far as I know, there was not a single Christian Indian of the Presbyterian or of our own mission who was not as true as steel to his profession.

I know one man who comes to visit me still, an old man, who was a Christian. When Little Crow said he was going to join the English, and they would wipe out the people of Minnesota, this man said: "Tell them the truth. Tell them those English are ruled by a squaw who would not touch her little finger to his bloody hand." And they cried out, "Shoot him!" He opened his coat, and said, "Shoot!" But they saved 200 white women and children from death, and a fate worse than death. When we heard of their fidelity, we were overpaid a thousandfold.

But it was in that case as it has always been, that the hostile element were given rations, and were removed and cared for. And these men who had shown their bravery at the risk of their lives were left to the charge of the cold world or to starve.

I never shall forget the time when the Government put in my care the Sisseton Indians, who belong largely to the mission of the Presbyterian Church. There was a conflict between the two Houses of Congress. There was no confidence in the Indian agent. Money had been squandered. One day someone said: "Bishop Whipple has been living near these Indians. Let us put the money in his care; he will not steal it." And, to my surprise, I found myself in charge of a large body of Indians outside of my diocese. I telegraphed that I could not take the responsibility. I went to Washington, but Congress had adjourned; and the Secretary said, "If you do not take this money and help the Indians, they will starve to death." When I reached the agency the old Indian, Simon Anagmani, rose, trembling in every limb, and with tears running down his cheeks, said: "For days and days the earth has been iron, and the sky is as if it were iron, and we have cried, and God did not hear or answer, and we have reached out our hands, and we could not take hold of anything. We have looked into the faces of the Christian men at last, and I believe the Great Spirit has saved us."

* * * * * * *

There is another matter that I hardly know what to say about. I am sometimes afraid that we have made a terrible mistake; and then, again, it is always safe to stand on principle. I believe that every Christian man in the United States should avoid anything that looks like an alliance between state and church. Almost all of the religious bodies have voluntarily relinquished the aid which the Government gives to their schools. The school at Santee Agency is not there to teach Presbyterian theology; it is to teach Indians the same things that they are taught at Carlisle. But, because it is supported by the American Missionary Association, it seemed to be sharing the position of Government patronage. So far as I know, I may be wrong.

I am afraid that to one body of this country quite as much money, and perhaps more, is being given as at any period of the history of the Government. If that is so, it ought not so to be. I know not what there may be in the future, but I do know this, that if we know how to work and wait, if we know how to sow the seed and believe God will give the harvest, there is no question about the future. And, when you get over to that country where you are going to meet those loved ones and see your beloved Master, there will be no comfort greater than to meet some one you have helped heavenward, homeward. Happy is the man or the woman that could have written over her grave the epitaph which I once read in the Basque Province of France: "Here lies Estelle, who, having spent her fortune in works of charity and love, which she sent before her to Heaven, has now gone there to enjoy them."

That, I think, is the explanation of this appropriation. Schools have been contracted for under an established policy of the Government, having no kind of reference to any form of religious belief, not contracts with Episcopalians, nor with Presbyterians, nor with Congregationalists, nor Catholics, but contracts with any kind of association of character, and conducted by men capable of educating these people, to educate such a number of these people as from year to year they may undertake to take care of; but in no case where there was adequate education, and in no case now where there are adequate opportunities for education in Government schools do I understand that there has been any appropriation whatever. I am fully in accord with the sentiment of the religious denominations on the subject, that church and state should be entirely separate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not want to be unnecessarily technical about this matter. I presume that the policy laid down in the bill is to be continued at least for another year. But I wish to express my conviction that it is high time that the Congress of the United States shall return to the doctrines which were laid down by the fathers of the Republic when they demanded that there should be a separation of church and state in this country. It is a doctrine which I hold myself, and which I think if submitted to the American people would receive their indorsement.

Yet in the matter of educating the Indians, notwithstanding the Senator from Florida disclaims that we are encouraging sectarian education, the facts are that we are doing that very thing, and the remarkable fact is shown by an examination of the statistics that one church in this country during the past eight years has received appropriations aggregating $2,366,416, while fifteen other religious denominations have received only a little more than one-half of that amount.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. It was no part of my purpose to disclaim that the influence of these appropriations is unequal and to the advantage of some churches over others. I spoke of the policy of the Government as it had come down to the present Administration, and whatever might be the effect of it, I said that although the committee might concur altogether with the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and probably do, as to the propriety and necessity of a separation between church and state in all matters, they had no discretion in regard to this matter except to continue the appropriations or discontinue entirely the education of the Indians now going on in these charitable institutions; and the committee believed that the contracts which had been made before and came down to the present Administration were binding upon the Government, if not as a matter of law as a matter of good faith.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am disposed to believe that the statement made by the Senator from Florida is absolutely correct. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is interested in this matter, and who with myself is opposed to appropriating money for sectarian schools either in the Indian Territory or elsewhere in the United States, has made a very lucid statement covering that point, saying that in his opinion we can not with justice or propriety abandon the contract system at the present time. Mr. President, I shall make no attack upon any religious denomination. Those who know me best know that I can not bring myself to do that. But I feel bound to say that the Catholic Church in this country has received during the last eight years in appropriations from Congress for the education of Indians $2,366,416, while fifteen other religious denominations have received $1,400,000, or a little more than one-half the amount received by that one great religious organization.

In view of that fact it is not to be wondered at that other great religious denominations of this country have come to the conclusion that it is time to return, as I said, to the doctrines of the fathers, and no longer be parties to a reversal of the doctrine which was then laid down, that church and State in this country ought to be divorced and forever kept apart. The great Methodist Episcopal Church of the country, at Omaha, in their General Conference, in May, 1892, passed the following resolution:

Whereas the appropriation of public funds for sectarian purposes by the National Government is not only wrong in principle, but in violation of both the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That this General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church requests the missionary societies working under its sanction or control to decline either to petition for or to receive from the National Government any moneys for educational work among the Indians.

Following that action, the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in its annual session at Grand Rapids, Mich., in October, 1892, passed a similar declaration. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, at Portland, Oregon, in May, 1892, passed similar resolutions. Following that, the United Presbyterian Church of North America, at the meeting of their General Assembly in Allegheny, Pa., May 31, 1892, resolved—

That we protest against all Government appropriations for the denominational Indian schools and for other sectarian purposes as unconstitutional, and petition Congress to refuse all applications for such appropriations.

I will state that this denomination is not receiving Government appropriations.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. According to the table which I have put in my remarks the highest sums paid the schools established under Roman Catholic auspices was in 1892, $394,756.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. PLATT. The amount in 1893 was $375,845, and in 1894 it was $378,345. It seems to have increased a little in 1894. The Presbyterian denomination had its highest appropriation for schools in 1890, which was $47,650.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in 1893, $29,000.

Mr. PLATT. And in 1894, $30,090. The Congregational denomination had its highest appropriation in 1889, which was $29,310, falling off in 1894 to $6,250.

The amount received by the Episcopal Church I gave when I was on my feet before, $29,310, falling off in 1894 to $7,020. The Quakers had the highest amount in 1887, $27,845, falling off in 1894 to $10,020. The Methodists discontinued the work entirely.

Mr. GALLINGER. And they never had very much.

Mr. PLATT. They had $13,980 in 1892 and have had nothing since.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. PLATT. That is the statement of facts from the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. The entire appropriations received by the great Methodist Church in this country amounted to only about $30,000. That is all the money that they have ever drawn, while the one other church to which I have alluded drew in the single year, 1892, $394,756, and a still larger amount, I understand, is appropriated to them for the present year.

But in addition to the religious denominations to which I have alluded, the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, sitting as the Board of Missions, Baltimore, Md., October 19, 1892, has put itself on record against this system. The Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church December 13, 1892, declared against it.

The American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church in the annual session at Hartford, Conn., October 27, 1892, made a very strong declaration against the continuance of these appropriations for sectarian purposes. They close their declaration by quoting a form of amendment to the Constitution of the United States which they think ought to be adopted, and which I think ought to be adopted. I will read it:

No state shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding, by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly, or in part, under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

So it appears that four of the great religious denominations of this country have put themselves plainly and unqualifiedly on record against the system which we are continuing to perpetuate in our annual appropriation bills.

I wish to call attention to the fact that while our great political parties have made many declarations, which have been repudiated in Congress first and last, they have not forgotten the very question that is now under discussion. The Republican party in 1876 made a very strong declaration in these words:

The public school system of the United States is the bulwark of the American Republic, and with a view to its security and permanence, we recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any schools or institutions under sectarian control.

The Democratic party met in national convention in 1876, thirteen days after the Republican party, and not to be outdone by their rivals they made a declaration in the following words:

We do here reaffirm * * * our faith in the total separation of church and state, for the sake alike of civil and religious freedom—

And they refer to the public schools—

* * * which the Democratic party has cherished from their foundation, and is resolved to maintain, without prejudice or preference for any class, sect, or creed, and without largesses from the Treasury to any.

I wish that we might live up to those declarations of the two great political parties in the country in this matter. They were right when they made those declarations, and the Congress of the United States is doing violence to a principle which was enunciated at the very beginning of the Government, when they take money from the Treasury of the United States and appropriate it for sectarian purposes, I care not what church or religious society is benefited by it.

I wish to call attention to one of the most remarkable documents in the form of a petition that has ever been presented to the Congress of the United States. It is from the National League for the Protection of American Institutions. They petitioned, I understand, the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses concerning the matter of appropriating money for sectarian purposes in connection with our Indian system.

It is signed by hundreds of men from different parts of the country. I am almost tempted to read the names, but will not do so. I will call attention, however, to the officers:

William H. Parsons, president; William Strong, vice-president; James M. King, general secretary; William Fellowes Morgan, treasurer.

Board of managers: George S. Baker, George T. Balch, Henry K. Carroll, Churchill H. Cutting, Peter Donald, Dorman B. Eaton, W. W. Hoppin, John Jay, James M. King, James McKeen, George D. Mackay, Thomas J. Morgan, William Fellowes Morgan, William H. Parsons, John Sinclair, John D. Slayback, Josiah Strong, Peter A. Welch.

Law committee: William Allen Butler, Dorman B. Eaton, Cephas Brainard, Henry E. Howland, Wheeler H. Peckham.

Among the honorary officers I will name only a few: Charles Kendall Adams, LL.D., Madison, Wis.; Hon. Sherman W. Adams, Hartford, Conn.; Rev. Bishop E. G. Andrews, D. D. LL.D., New York City, N. Y.; Hon. Hubert H. Bancroft, San Francisco, Cal.; Rev. William A. Bartlett, D. D., Washington, D. C.; Gen. Henry V. Boynton, Washington, D. C.; Rev. Bishop Thomas Bowman, D. D., LL.D., St. Louis, Mo.; Hon. Addison Brown, New York City, N. Y., and so on through the list. I will ask permission to insert the petition and the names thereto attached as part of my remarks.

A petition concerning sectarian appropriations for Indian education.

[A careful perusal is respectfully requested.]

To the Congress of the United States:

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions petitioned both sessions of the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses concerning sectarian appropriations by the National Government for Indian education.

The league now addresses the following petition to the Fifty-third Congress concerning Indian appropriation bills.

The league petitions against the violation of the American principle of the separation of church and state which is involved in making any sectarian appropriations for Indian education.

The highest official bodies of the Congregational, the Methodist Episcopal, the Presbyterian, and the Protestant Episcopal Churches have determined to withdraw their applications for funds from the United States Treasury, because of the principle which they now see is involved in this dangerous practice, and they propose henceforth to support their own schools without Government aid.

The league petitions that the General Government now adopt a definite, permanent, and uniform principle, in accord with the spirit of the United States Constitution, for advancing education among the Indians on the basis of the American free common school system, in order that the dangers involved in departure from the American principle of keeping separate and distinct the functions of church and state be no more fostered by any actions of the General Government.

Officers: William H. Parsons, president; William Strong, vice-president; James M. King, general secretary; William Fellowes Morgan, treasurer.

Board of Managers: George S. Baker, George T. Balch, Henry K. Carroll, Churchill H. Cutting, Peter Donald, Dorman B. Eaton, W. W. Hoppin, John Jay, James M. King, James McKeen, George D. Mackay, Thomas J. Morgan, William Fellowes Morgan, William H. Parsons, John Sinclair, John D. Slayback, Josiah Strong, Peter A. Welch.

Law Committee: William Allen Butler, Dorman B. Eaton, Cephas Brainerd, Henry E. Howland, Wheeler H. Peckham.

Now, this is a very serious matter. It concerns the rights of the American people so far as the appropriation of their money is concerned. Notwithstanding the Senator from Florida has disclaimed that these appropriations are made for sectarian purposes, I believe it is in contravention of the spirit at least of the Constitution of the United States; and were it not that wrong would come to established schools which have been encouraged and perpetuated by this false system I should certainly move a proviso to the effect that this money shall be used exclusively for other than sectarian purposes. I do not believe the Congress of the United States can long stand upon the ground we occupy to-day. There is already a gathering storm in this country against this matter of appropriating money for sectarian purposes. That storm may break before a great while upon the Congress and the people of the United States. The principle is wrong. That principle will have to be reversed sooner or later, and in my opinion the sooner it is done the better it will be for the rights and the liberties of the American people.

Mr. President, I have a single additional remark, and that is, that if I can find time to formulate a motion to recommit this bill with proper instructions to the Committee on Appropriations, with a view to getting rid of this abnormal and unjust condition of things in the near future, without doing detriment to contracts already made, I shall, when the bill comes into the Senate, submit that motion. If I do that, as I hope to do, I trust that Senators will lay aside all prejudice, all prepossession, and come to a conclusion that it is time at least that we made a starting point in remedying an evil which has grown upon our system and which, as I before stated, is in contravention of the spirit, if not of the letter, of the Constitution of our country.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations who does not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that whenever it is possible to do so, in deference to the growing public sentiment of this country, it would be better that all Indian schools should be under the direct control of the Government. He does not differ from the committee in that respect, nor the committee from him. The public opinion of this country, of the great masses of the religious people of all churches, is opposed, I believe, to the policy of sectarian schools.

The question, however, is, What can the Committee on Appropriations do? These contracts have been made; these schools are established. Suppose you did establish a Government school to-day right alongside of one of these denominational institutions, as they are termed, would the children be taken away unless you used force? Would they not have a discretion to attend them? Would it be proper for the Committee on Appropriations or for the Senate suddenly to adopt a system in this country to do away with all the schools which are to be found there or leave them entirely to the spasmodic influences of private charity?

To show the condition the Committee on Appropriations is in, and the Senate is in, I desire to read upon this subject the statement of a man whose life has been devoted to the interests of the Indians and to Indian education, a man who favors the idea that there should be no sectarian schools, but who states candidly the difficulties in the way of the subject, not only on the part of Congress, but on the part of the denominations and religious associations themselves. In a history of the proceedings of the convention of the board of Indian Commissioners held at Lake Mohonk, attached to the Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1893, on page 1035, I find the following in the address of Bishop Whipple:

There is another matter that I hardly know what to say about. I am sometimes afraid that we have made a terrible mistake; and then, again, it is always safe to stand on principle. I believe that every Christian man in the United States should avoid anything that looks like an alliance between State and church. Almost all of the religious bodies have voluntarily relinquished the aid which the Government gives to their schools. The school at Santee Agency is not there to teach Presbyterian theology; it is to teach Indians the same things that they are taught at Carlisle. But, because it is supported by the American Missionary Association, it seemed to be sharing the position of Government patronage.

So far as I know, I may be wrong. I am afraid that to one body of this country quite as much money, and perhaps more, is being given as at any period of the history of the Government. If that is so, it ought not so to be. I know not what there may be in the future, but I do know this, that, if we know how to work and wait, if we know how to sow the seed and believe God will give the harvest, there is no question about the future. And, when you get over to that country where you are going to meet those loved ones and see your beloved Master, there will be no comfort greater than to meet some one you have helped heavenward, homeward. Happy is the man or woman that could have written over her grave the epitaph which I once read in the Basque Province of France: "Here lies Estelle, who, having spent her fortune in works of charity and love which she sent before her to Heaven, has now gone there to enjoy them."

He proceeds further on another page of the report to say.

I never shall forget the time when the Government put in my care the Sisseton Indians, who belong largely to the mission of the Presbyterian Church. There was a conflict between the two Houses of Congress. There was no confidence in the Indian agent. Money had been squandered. One day some one said: "Bishop Whipple has been living near those Indians. Let us put the money in his care; he will not steal it." And, to my surprise, I found myself in charge of a large body of Indians outside of my diocese. I telegraphed that I could not take the responsibility. I went to Washington, but Congress had adjourned; and the Secretary said, "If you do not take this money and help the Indians they will starve to death." When I reached the agency the old Indian, Simon Anagmani, rose, trembling in every limb, and with tears running down his cheeks, said: "For days and days the earth has been iron, and the sky is as if it were iron, and we have cried, and God did not hear or answer, and we have reached out our hands, and we could not take hold of anything. We have looked into the faces of the Christian men at last, and I believe the Great Spirit has saved us."

I suppose that neither the Senator from New Hampshire nor any religious denomination in this country would say that this action of Bishop Whipple, a Protestant, opposed to the continuance of sectarian schools, was not exactly what ought to have been done, and that the schools established and the care of the Indians, which he carries with him, ought not to be suddenly displaced by the Government.

The contracts made were certainly obligatory, and the existing contracts are now obligatory. They are not made by the Committee on Appropriations; they are not made by the Senate; they are not made by the House of Representatives; they have been made by the Executive, the administrative department of the Government. Bishop Whipple was sent there, and being there a missionary to the Indians, he found that the interests of honest administration could best be conserved by a citizen of the United States of character, and probably because of his religious character and associations.

So the committee have no responsibility whatever for these provisions in the bill, and I believe every member of the committee is favorable to the idea of an entire separation of these schools from all sectarian or religious connections, but they have no authority in this matter unless they encroach upon the administration of the Government in its executive functions and arbitrarily set aside the contracts which have been made.

For myself, I am entirely of the opinion that these schools ought not to be sectarian, just as Bishop Whipple was of that opinion; but we find ourselves in this condition, and the committee disclaim any responsibility whatever for these appropriations. They are made in pursuance of laws which are obligatory on us and on the House, and to pay money contracted for and recommended by the proper executive authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, line 23, after the word "fund," to strike out—

And also provided, That $3,000 of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended in the construction of school buildings for the Cherokee Training School at Cherokee, N. C.: Provided, That so much of the appropriations made in this bill for the payment of agents, as shall not be required for that purpose, is hereby made available for educational purposes to be added to the $1,070,000 already appropriated and used for the same purpose, if required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for construction of school buildings, $3,000;" and on page 60, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fourteen thousand seven" and insert "seventeen thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of eighty pupils at the Cherokee Training School, at Cherokee, N. C., at $167 per annum each, $13,360; for pay of superintendent, $1,200; for construction of school buildings, $3,000; in all, $17,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 70, before the word "thousand," to insert "and five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for additional pay of military officer acting as superintendent, $1,000; in all, $106,000; so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil, for transportation of pupils to and from Carlisle school, and for the repair of buildings, $105,000; for additional pay of military officer acting as superintendent, $1,000; in all, $106,000.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, on that amendment I ask the Senator in charge of the bill, if we can not have the $10,000 additional estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior, to consent to give at least half of it for the Carlisle industrial school, so as to appropriate $110,000 instead of $105,000? I trust there will be no objection to that increase on the part of the committee.

Mr. CALL. I shall not object if the other members of the committee do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Pennsylvania to move to amend the amendment of the committee in line 7, by striking out the word "five" and inserting "ten."

Mr. QUAY. Yes, and the amendment is accepted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "thousand" it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the amount $110,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I move to increase the total from "$106,000" to $111,000, so as to conform to the amendment which has just been made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 61, line 10, after the words "per annum," to insert "and said superintendent shall give bond with approved security and act as agent of the Santee Indians located at Flandreau, and while so acting shall be allowed a clerk at the yearly rate of $500, which amount is hereby appropriated."

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee desire that amendment to be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 16, on page 61, after the word "dollars," to insert "to procure a permanent water supply for the school, $1,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary," and before the word "hundred," in line 19, to strike out "twenty-nine thousand one," and insert "thirty thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at Flandreau, S. Dak., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500 per annum; for pay of one assistant matron, $600 per annum; general repairs and erection of outhouses, $2,000; to procure a permanent water supply for the school, $1,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $30,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 3, to insert:

For the repair of the church and building used for school purposes on the San Xavier Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, $1,000.

Mr. PLATT. I should like some explanation of this proposed amendment. That is not a Government school, is it?

Mr. COCKRELL. That amendment applies to an old Greek church, which is said to be the oldest church in America. It is a question as to whether it is not as old or older than the building at Santa Fe. It is used in connection with the schools. It is a building of rare architecture, and it needs some repairs. The roof is covered with tiles, and repairs are needed there, and owing to the length of time which has elapsed since its construction, the stone near the foundation is disappearing, and some additional repairs are needed there. The building is said to be a work of rare architectural skill. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who visited it in person, insisted that this amendment should be made, even if the building were not used for school purposes.

Mr. PLATT. The real object of the appropriation, then, is to preserve a building which is one of our antiquities at the present time?

Mr. CALL. That is it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Florida to line 19, on page 61. The Senate having disagreed to the amendment from line 10 to line 14, the Chair suggests that the word "six," before the word "hundred," should be changed to "one;" so as to read $30,100."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let "six" be stricken out and "one" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the amendment in line 19, on page 61, was agreed to will be regarded as reconsidered, and the word "six" stricken out and "one" inserted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 63, line 1, after the word "fencing," to strike out "in entire building plant;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils, at $167 per annum each, at Grand Junction, Colo., $25,050; for pay of superintendent at the Indian school, $1,500 per annum; for general repairs, $500; fencing, painting, $685; cisterns, cesspools, and sewerage, $500; in all, $28,235.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 23, after the words "per annum," to strike out "general repairs, $1,000; construction of laundry, $500; construction of storage building, $2,000," and insert "construction of buildings and general repairs, $3,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils at Mount Pleasant, Mich., at $150 per annum each, $22,500; for pay of superintendent, $1,500 per annum; construction of buildings and general repairs, $3,500; in all, $27,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 7, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" and in line 8, before the words "and fifty," to strike out "twenty-eight thousand five hundred," and insert "twenty-nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils at Santa Fe, N. Mex., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500 per annum; for general repairs, $1,000; water supply for irrigation and fire protection, $1,500; in all, $29,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 17, to strike out:

For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians for the sale and relinquishment of certain portions of their reservation in the State of Wyoming to the United States, under charge of a commissioner to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be appropriated the sum of $2,000, to become immediately available: Provided, That the pay of said commissioner shall not exceed $6 per day and necessary traveling expenses: And provided further, That any agreement entered into for said lands shall be ratified by Congress before it becomes binding: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall detail immediately one or more of the five Indian inspectors to make said treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 19, to insert:

That in the expenditure of money appropriated for any of the purposes of education of Indian children, those children of Indians who have taken lands in severalty under any existing law shall not, by reason thereof, be excluded from the benefits of such appropriation.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest that in line 22 of the amendment, on page 67, after the word "taken," to insert "or who may hereafter take."

Mr. CALL. That amendment to the amendment is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "taken," in line 22, on page 67, the words "or may hereafter take."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 68, line 3, after the words "direction of the," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" and, in line 7, after the word "him," to strike out "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

That the expenditure of the money appropriated for school purposes in this act shall be at all times under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and in all respects in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may from time to time be prescribed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 9, after the words "Sec. 2," to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the several Indian tribes interested therein, the face value of certain nonpaying State bonds or stocks, including certain abstracted bonds described on pages 153 and 154 of Annual Estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895 (House Executive Document No. 5, Fifty-third Congress, second session), to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, as provided by the act of April 1, 1880; and thereupon said State bonds or stocks shall become the property of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 69, line 17, after the words "construction of," to insert "artesian wells;" and on page 70, in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value, at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That funds herein and heretofore appropriated for construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigating may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended in open market.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 70, line 6, after the word "That," to strike out "so much of the appropriations herein made as may be required to pay for goods and supplies, for expenses incident to their purchase, and for transportation of the same, for the year ending June 30, 1895, shall be immediately available; but no such goods or supplies shall be distributed or delivered to any of said Indians prior to July 1, 1894. And;" and in line 18, after the word "male," to strike out "Provided, That these contracts" and insert "and the contracts so made shall be on the basis of the appropriations for the preceding fiscal year and;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized to advertise in the spring of each year for bids, and enter into contracts, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for goods and supplies for the Indian service required for the ensuing fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that the appropriations for such fiscal year have not been made, and the contracts so made shall be on the basis of the appropriations for the preceding fiscal year, and shall contain a clause that no deliveries shall be made under the same and no liability attach to the United States in consequence of such execution if Congress fails to make an appropriation for such contract for the fiscal year for which those supplies are required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 8, to strike out section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That no Indian child shall be sent from any Indian reservation to a school beyond the State or Territory in which said reservation is situated without the voluntary consent of the father or mother of such child if either of them are living, and if neither of them are living without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of such child. Such consent shall be made before the agent of the reservation, and he shall send to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs his certificate that such consent has been voluntarily given before such child shall be removed from such reservation. Nor shall any Indian child be sent to a school more than 40 miles beyond the reservation of the tribe to which he or she belongs until after said child shall have attended school on some Indian reservation for at least four years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 22, to insert as a subheading:

AGREEMENT WITH THE YANKTON SIOUX OR DAKOTA INDIANS, IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 25, after the word "Section," to strike out "12" and insert "11;" and on page 75, line 14, after the word "confirmed," to strike out "with the modifications, changes, and conditions hereinafter set forth;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. The following agreement, made by J. C. Adams and John J. Cole, commissioners on the part of the United States, with the chiefs, headmen, and other male adults of the Yanton tribe of Sioux or Dakota Indians upon the Yankton Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, on the 31st day of December, 1892, and now on file in the Department of the Interior, and signed by said commissioners on behalf of the United States, and by Charles Martin, Edgar Lee, Charles Jones, Isaac Hepikigan, Stephen Cloud Elk, Edward Yellow Bird, Iron Lingthing, Eli Brockway, Alex Brunot, Francis Willard, Louis Shunk, Joseph Caje, Albion Hitika, John Selwyn, Charles Ree, Joseph Cook, Brigham Young, William Highrock, Frank Felix, and Philip Ree, on behalf of the said Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians, is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24 on page 86.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator in charge of the bill give me his attention for a moment? The matter beginning with line 24 on page 86, and going to the end of line 3 on page 87, ought to be stricken out. I do not want to have an enacting clause put in the middle of a bill. The ratification of the agreement with the Yankton Sioux is already contained on page 75.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Connecticut is not correct in that respect. It is very proper that those words should go in on page 86, where they are. The first clause is a ratification, and then we enact provisions specifically in regard to it. We put the enacting words in there to show that what follows is not a part of the agreement which is copied there. It is the rule which has been pursued in all the other Indian appropriation acts.

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe the Senator will find an enacting clause in the middle of an appropriation act anywhere.

Mr. COCKRELL. We thought we did find it in all of them.

Mr. CALL. It can be corrected afterwards if the Senator from Connecticut desires.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 87, line 3, after the word "confirmed," to strike out:

As modified as follows:

First. That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to be paid to the adult members of said tribe as provided in article 7 of said agreement, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be immediately available, and shall be applied in carrying out the provisions of the said seventh section of said agreement. And the sum of $11,475 shall be appropriated, as provided in article 15 of said agreement, upon the ratification of the changes of said articles of agreement, as provided in this act by said Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians.

That of the first proceeds of the lands ceded by said tribe to the United States $100,000 shall be set apart, not to be covered into the Treasury, and shall be placed by the Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the Secretary of the Interior, on his requisition, to carry into effect the provisions of the third article of said agreement; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said sum to be divided among the members of said tribe per capita, as contemplated by the said article, and such distribution shall be made within thirty days from the opening of said lands to settlement; and if the whole of said sum shall not have been received as proceeds of said lands, the remainder shall be immediately distributed, when with the sum before distributed, it amounts to $100,000. And the sum of $500,000, the residue of the proceeds of said land, shall be placed to the credit of said tribe of Indians, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, said interest to be paid and distributed to said tribe as provided in articles 5 and 6 of said agreement: Provided, That none of the money to be paid to said Indians under the terms of said agreement, nor any of the interest thereon, shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, or demands against said Indians for damages or depredations claimed to have been committed prior to the signing of said agreement.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which amount the sum of $500,000 shall be placed to the credit of said tribe in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the 1st day of January, 1893, said interest to be paid and distributed to said tribe as provided in articles 5 and 6 of said agreement. Of the amount herein appropriated $100,000 shall be immediately available, to be paid to said tribe as provided in section 1 of Article 3 of said agreement. There is also hereby appropriated the further sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be immediately available, to be paid to the adult male members of said tribe, as provided in article 7 of said agreement. There is also hereby appropriated the further sum of $11,475, which sum shall be immediately available, to be paid as provided in article 15 of said agreement: Provided, That none of the money to be paid to said Indians under the terms of said agreement, nor any of the interest thereon, shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, or demands against said Indians for damages or depredations claimed to have been committed prior to the signing of said agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 18, before the word "That," to strike out "Second;" in line 22, after the "words United States," to strike out "(except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply);" on page 90, line 4, after the wotd "shall," to strike out—before making final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $3.75 per acre, one-half of which shall be paid within three years from the date of this original entry.

And insert

"in addition to the fees provided by law, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of $3.75 per acre, of which sum he shall pay 50 cents at the time of making his original entry and the balance before making final proof and receiving a certificate of final entry.

And in line 18, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out:

Provided however, That each settler shall be limited to 80 acres in amount, but after the expiration of six months from the opening of said lands to settlement, may take an additional 80 acres from any of the lands of said tract then subject to entry: And provided further, That after three years' actual and continuous residence upon said land from date of settlement, the settler shall, upon full payment of $3.75 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered: Provided, That settlement shall be made under this act within thirty days from date on filing on land. That the right of commutation is extended to all bona fide homestead settlers on the lands in Oklahoma Territory opened to settlement under the provisions of the act of Congress, entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," approved March 3, 1893, and the President's proclamation in pursuance thereof, after fourteen months from date of settlement, upon the payment for the lands as provided in said act.

So as to make the clause read:

That the lands by said agreement ceded to the United States shall, upon proclamation by the President, be opened to settlement, and shall be subject to disposal only under the homestead and town-site laws of the United States, excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each Congressional township, which shall be reserved for common-school purposes and be subject to the laws of the State of South Dakota: Provided, That each settler on said lands shall, in addition to the fees provided by law, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of $3.75 per acre, of which sum he shall pay 50 cents at the time of making his original entry and the balance before making final proof and receiving a certificate of final entry: but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged, except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 13, to strike out:

Third. That any person who was not the owner of land in any State or Territory of the United States at date of passage of this act may make an entry of the lands opened to settlement under the provisions of this act, although said person may have heretofore made an entry under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, That said person is not otherwise disqualified.

That the changes of said agreement provided for in this section shall be deemed ratified and agreed to by said Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians when three-fourths of those who signed said agreement shall individually sign an agreement assenting to said changes and accept and receive the payment each, as provided to be paid in article 7 of said agreement.

Fourth. That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations to procure the ratification by said Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians to the changes in said agreement, as provided for in section 1 of this act, and shall without delay, upon the agreement of said Indians to said changes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, open said lands to settlement, provided the settlers upon said land shall be required to pay 75 cents per acre at the time of filing upon same: Provided, That the proclamation of the President opening said lands to settlement, as provided in section 3 of this act, shall be issued within thirty days after the ratification of the changes in said agreement by said Indians, as provided in section 1 of this act, and that said proclamation shall be issued giving at least sixty days notice of the date said lands will be open to settlement.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provisions proposed to be stricken out relate to an entirely different matter from the treaty. They have no connection with the treaty, directly or indirectly, although injected into the midst of this matter. We therefore propose to strike them out, and the part which ought to be retained we put in as an additional section at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 92, line 19, before the word "that," to strike out "fifth;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior, upon proper plats and description being furnished, is hereby authorized to issue patents to Charles Picotte and Felix Brunot, United States interpreters, for not to exceed 1 acre of land each, so as to embrace their houses near the agency buildings upon said reservation, but not to embrace any buildings owned by the Government, upon the payment by each of said persons of the sum of $3.75.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in line 21, after the name "Brunot," the words "and W. T. Selwyn."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 2, to strike out:

Sixth. That every person who shall sell or give away any intoxicating liquors or other intoxicants upon any of the lands allotted under the provisions of this act shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $300. And Article XVII of the agreement is modified by this section.

And to insert:

That every person who shall sell or give away any intoxicating liquors or other intoxicants upon any of the lands by said agreement ceded, or upon any of the lands included in the Yankton Sioux Indian Reservation as created by the treaty of April 19, 1858, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 16, to insert:

That any person who was not the owner of over 40 acres of land in any State or Territory of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1894, may make an entry of the lands opened to settlement under the provisions of this act, although said person may have heretofore made an entry under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, That said person is not otherwise disqualified.

Mr. PLATT. Does the committee desire to insist upon this amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was in the original proposition I think. It was proposed by the other House, and we had to strike it out where it was because it was not in the proper place. We simply propose to reinsert it here.

Mr. PLATT. Where does it appear in the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 91, as the third provision. It ought not to have gone in as a part of this matter, but as a regulation. If the Senator from Connecticut objects to it we shall not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I doubt whether we ought to make a different provision in the opening of one of these reservations from what is contained in the general land laws of the United States. There has been a great deal of controversy over the question as to whether the entire land laws ought not to be changed in that respect.

Mr. CALL. I accept the Senator's suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was at the top of page 94, to insert the following heading:

AGREEMENT WITH THE YAKIMA NATION OF INDIANS IN WASHINGTON.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 24, after the word "confirmed," to strike out:

First. The sum of $10,000 to be paid said Indians as provided in Article II of said agreement, as herein modified, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same be immediately available and shall be applied in carrying out the provisions of said article, and the sum of $100,000 shall be hereafter appropriated, when said Indians shall approve and ratify the amendments made by this act in said agreement, which sum of money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Siletz Reservation as provided in Article II of said agreement. That of the proceeds of the lands ceded by said Indians $32,600 shall be set apart not to be covered into the Treasury, and shall be placed by the Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the Secretary of the Interior, on his requisition, to carry into effect the provisions of Article II of said agreement and the moneys shall be divided per capita among the members of the tribe as provided in said article.

And to insert:

That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $142,600, which sum of money shall be paid to the Indians in the manner and form prescribed by articles 2 and 3 of the agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, line 8, after the word "depredations," to strike out:

[And provided further, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands ceded and relinquished by said agreement are hereby confirmed to the State of Oregon for the support of the common schools of said State under the limitations prescribed by law.

And in line 12, before the word "mineral," to insert "the.'

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, line 3, before the words "per cent," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" in the same line, after the words "after the," to strike out "ratification" and insert "passage;" and in line 4, after the word "act," to strike out "by said Indians;" so as to make the clause read:

That all of the money so held by the United States to pay the delayed payments shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 12, on page 112.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 112, after the word "shall," in line 6, I move to strike out down to and including the word "changes" in line 10; and in line 11, before the word "sixty," to insert "proclamation by the President and."

The SECRETARY. On page 112, line 6, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out:

Prescribe rules and regulations to procure the ratification by said Indians of the Siletz Reservation to the changes in said agreement, as provided for in this act, and shall without delay, upon the agreement of said Indians to said changes.

And in line 11, before the word "sixty," to insert "proclamation by the President and;" so as to make the clause read:

That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, open said lands to settlement after proclamation by the President and sixty days' notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 112, after line 12, to insert:

AGREEMENT WITH THE NEZ PERCE INDIANS IN IDAHO.

SEC. 15. Whereas Robert Schleicher, James F. Allen, and Cyrus Beede, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did on the 1st day of May, 1893, conclude an agreement with the principal men and other male adults of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians, upon the Lapwai Reservation, in the State of Idaho, which said agreement is as follows:

Whereas the President, under date of October 31, 1892, and under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1887, authorized negotiations with the Nez Perce Indians in Idaho for the cession of their surplus lands; and

Whereas the Nez Perce Indians are willing to dispose of a portion of the tract of land in the State of Idaho reserved as a home for their use and occupation by the second article of the treaty between said Indians and the United States, concluded June 9, 1863:

Now, therefore, this agreement made and entered into in pursuance of the provisions of said act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, at the Nez Perce Agency, by Robert Sleicher, James F. Allen, and Cyrus Beede, on the part of the United States, and the principal men and male adults of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians located on said Nez Perce Reservation, witnesseth:

ARTICLE II.

It is also stipulated and agreed that the place known as "the boom" on the Clearwater River, near the mouth of Lapwai Creek, shall be excepted from this cession and reserved for the common use of the tribe, with full right of access thereto, and that the tract of land adjoining said boom, now occupied by James Moses, shall be allotted to him in such manner as not to interfere with such right. Also that there shall be reserved from said cession the land described as follows: "Commencing at a point at the margin of Clearwater River, on the south side thereof, which is 300 yards below where the middle thread of Lapwai Creek empties into said river; run thence up the margin of said Clearwater River at low-water mark, 900 yards to a point; run thence south 250 yards to a point; thence southwesterly, in a line to the southeast corner of a stone building, partly finished as a church; thence west 300 yards to a point; thence from said point northerly in a straight line to the point of beginning; and also the adjoining tract of land lying southerly of said tract, on the south end thereof; commencing at the said corner of said church, and at the point 300 yards west thereof, and run a line from each of said points. One of said lines running on the east side and the other on the west of said Lapwai Creek; along the foothills of each side of said creek; up the same sufficiently far so that a line being drawn east and west to intersect the aforesaid lines shall embrace within its boundaries, together with the first-above described tract of land, a sufficient quantity of land as to include and comprise 640 acres;" for which described tracts of land the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to William G. Langford, his heirs or assigns, the sum of $20,000, upon the execution by said Langford, his heirs or assigns, of a release and relinquishment to the United States of all right, title, interest, or claim, either legal or equitable, in and to said tracts of land, derived by virtue of a quit-claim deed of February 14, 1868, to the said William G. Langford, from Langdon S. Ward, treasurer of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which release and relinquishment shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and it is stipulated and agreed by said Nez Perce Indians that upon the execution and approval of such release and relinquishment the right of occupancy of said Indians in said described tracts shall terminate and cease and the complete title thereto immediately vest in the United States: Provided, That any member of the said Nez Perce tribe of Indians entitled to an allotment now occupying and having valuable improvements upon any of said lands not already occupied or improved by the United States may have the same allotted to him in such subdivisions as shall be prescribed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in lieu of an equal quantity of agricultural land allotted to him elsewhere; and for this purpose shall relinquish any patent that may have been issued to him before the title to said "Langford" tracts of land shall vest in the United States, and shall have a new patent issued to him of the form and legal effect prescribed by the fifth section of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Statutes, 388), covering the new allotment and that portion of the former allotment not surrendered. It is further agreed that 5 acres of said tract, upon which the Indian Presbyterian Church is located, as long as same shall remain a church, shall be patented to the trustees of said church; that the said 5 acres shall not include improvements made by the United States; the said 5 acres to be selected under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

ARTICLE III.

In consideration for the lands ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed as aforesaid, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to the said Nez Perce Indians the sum of $1,626,222, of which amount the sum of $626,222 shall be paid to said Indians per capita as soon as practicable after the ratification of this agreement. The remainder of said sum of $1,626,222 shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the "Nez Perces Indians, of Idaho," and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which principal and interest shall be paid to said Indians per capita, as follows, to wit: At the expiration of one year from the date of the ratification of this agreement the sum of $50,000, and semiannually thereafter the sum of $150,000 with the interest on the unexpended portion of the fund of $1,000,000 until the entire amount shall have been paid, and no part of the funds to be derived from the cession of lands by this agreement made shall be diverted or withheld from the disposition made by this article on account of any depredation or other act committed by any Nez Perce Indian, prior to the execution of this agreement, but the same shall be actually paid to the Indians in cash, in the manner and at the times as herein stipulated.

ARTICLE IV.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the United States will purchase for the use of said Nez Perce Indians two portable steam saw mills, at a cost not exceeding $10,000, and will provide for said Indians, for a period not exceeding two years, and at a cost not exceeding $2,400, a competent surveyor, for the purpose of fully informing said Indians as to the correct locations of their allotments and the corners and lines thereof.

ARTICLE V.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the lands by this agreement ceded shall not be opened for public settlement until trust patents for the allotted lands shall have been duly issued and recorded, and the first payment shall have been made to said Indians.

ARTICLE VI.

It is further stipulated and agreed that any religious society or other organization now occupying under proper authority, for religious or educational work among the Indians, any of the lands ceded, shall have the right for two years from the date of the ratification of this agreement, within which to purchase the land so occupied, at the rate of $3 per acre, the same to be conveyed to such society or organization by patent, in the usual form.

ARTICLE VII.

It is further stipulated and agreed that all allotments made to members of the tribe who have died since the same were made, or may die before the ratification of this agreement, shall be confirmed, and trust patents issued in the names of such allottees, respectively.

ARTICLE VIII.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the first per capita payment, provided for in Article VIII of this agreement, shall be made to those members of the Nez Perce tribe whose names appear on the schedule of allotments made by Special Agent Fletcher, and to such as may be born to them before the ratification of this agreement: Provided, That should it be found that any member of the tribe has been omitted from said schedule, such member shall share in the said payment and shall be given an allotment and each subsequent payment shall be made to those who receive the preceding payment and those born thereafter: Provided, That not more than one payment shall be made on account of a deceased member.

ARTICLE IX.

It is further agreed that the lands by this agreement ceded, those retained, and those allotted to the said Nez Perce Indians shall be subject, for a period of twenty-five years, to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Nez Perce Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall, for a like period, be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians.

ARTICLE X.

Representation having been made by the Indians in council that several members of the Nez Perce tribe, to the number of about fifty, as per list hereto attached, served the United States under Gen. O. O. Howard, in the late war with Joseph's band of said tribe, as scouts, couriers, and messengers, and that they have received no pay therefor; it is agreed that the United States, through its properly constituted authority, will carefully examine each of the cases herewith presented, and make such remuneration to each of said claimants as shall, upon such examination, be found to be due, not exceeding the sum of $2.50 per day each, for the time actually engaged in such service; it being understood and agreed that the time of service of said claimants in no case exceeded sixty days. And it also having been made to appear that Abraham Brooks, a member of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians, was engaged in the service of the United States in the late war with Joseph's band of Nez Perces, and it also appearing that the said Abraham Brooks was wounded in said service, and that by reason thereof, he is now in failing health, and has been for several years; that he is now nearly blind in consequence thereof; it is agreed that an investigation of all the facts in the case shall be made by the proper authorities of the United States, as early as practicable, and that if found substantially as herein represented, or if found worthy under the law in such cases provided, he shall be allowed and paid by the United States a pension adequate to the service and disability.

ARTICLE XI.

The existing provisions of all former treaties with said Nez Perce Indians not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement are hereby continued in full force and effect.

ARTICLE XII.

This agreement shall not take effect and be in force until ratified by the Congress of the United States.

In witness whereof the said Robert Schleicher, James F. Allen, and Cyrus Beede, on the part of the United States, and the principal men and other male adults of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians have hereunto set their hands.

Concluded at the Nez Perce Agency, this 1st day of May, A. D. 1893.

ROBERT SCHLEICHER,
JAMES F. ALLEN,
CYRUS BEEDE.

A. B. LAWYER, and others.

Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,668,622, of which amount the sum of $1,000,000 shall be placed to the credit of "the Nez Perce Indians of Idaho" in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Said sum of $1,668,622, together with the interest on said sum of $1,000,000, shall be paid to said Indians, or expended for their benefit, as provided in Articles II, III, IV, and VIII of said agreement; "out of which sum the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the heirs, administrator, or legal representatives of William G. Langford, deceased, the sum of $20,000, upon a release and relinquishment to the United States by said heirs, administrator, or legal representatives of all right, title, interest, or claim, either legal or equitable, in and to the tract of land described in article 2 of said agreement as therein provided: Provided, That none of the money agreed to be paid said Indians, nor any of the interest thereon, shall be, or become, liable to the payment of any judgment or claim for depredations committed by said tribe or any member thereof before the date of said agreement.

That immediately after the issuance and receipt by the Indians of trust patents for the allotted lands, as provided for in said agreement, the lands so ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed to the United States shall be opened to settlement by proclamation of the President, and shall be subject to disposal only under the homestead, town-site, stone and timber, and mining laws of the United States, excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each Congressional township, which shall be reserved for common-school purposes and be subject to the laws of Idaho: Provided, That each settler on said lands shall, before making final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States for the lands so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $3.75 per acre for agricultural lands, one-half of which shall be paid within three years from the date of original entry; and the sum of $5 per acre for stone, timber, and mineral lands, subject to the regulations prescribed by existing laws; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ a competent surveyor for a period not exceeding two years, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 per annum, for the purposes stipulated in Article IV of said agreement, and he is also authorized to purchase two portable sawmills, as provided in Article IV.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the claim of those Indians who served the United States under Gen. O. O. Howard in the late war with Joseph's band of said tribe as scouts, couriers, and messengers, referred to in Article X of said agreement, and also as to the claim of Abraham Brooks, mentioned in said article, and report his findings and recommendations to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, after line 3, to insert:

AGREEMENT WITH THE YUMA INDIANS IN CALIFORNIA.

SEC. 16. Whereas Washington J. Houston, John A. Gorman, and Peter R. Brady, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did on the 4th day of December, 1893, conclude an agreement with the principal men and other male adults of the Yuma Indians in the State of California, which said agreement is as follows:

Articles of agreement made and entered into this 4th day of December, A. D. 1893, at Fort Yuma, on what is known as the Yuma Indian Reservation, in the county of San Diego, State of California, by Washington J. Houston, John A. Gorman, and Peter R. Brady, commissioners on the part of the United States appointed for the purpose, and the Yuma Indians.

ARTICLE I.

The said Yuma Indians, upon the conditions hereinafter expressed, do hereby surrender and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, claim, and interest in and to and over the following-described tract of country in San Diego County, Cal., established by executive order of January 9, 1884, which describes its boundaries as follows:

Beginning at a point in the middle of the channel of the Colorado River due east of the meander corner to sections 19 and 30, township 15 south, range 24 east, San Bernardino meridian; thence west on the line between sections 19 and 30 to the range line, between townships 23 and 24 east; thence continuing west on the section line to a point which, when surveyed, will be the corner to sections 22, 23, 26, and 27, in township 15 south, range 21 east; thence south on the line between sections 23 and 27, in township 15 south, range 21 east, and continuing south on the section lines to the intersection of the international boundary, being the corner to fractional sections 34 and 35, in township 16 south, range 21 east; thence easterly on the international boundary to the middle of the channel of the Colorado River; thence up said river, in the middle of the channel thereof, to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, withdrawn from settlement and sale and set apart as the reservation for the Yuma and such other Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to settle thereon: Provided, however, That any tract or tracts included within the foregoing-described boundaries to which valid rights have attached under the laws of the United States are hereby excluded out of the reservation hereby made.

"It is also hereby ordered that the Fort Yuma military reservation be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the control of the Department of the Interior, to be used for Indian purposes in connection with the Indian reservation established by this order, said military reservation having been abandoned by the War Department for military purposes."

ARTICLE II.

Each and every member of said Yuma Indians shall be entitled to select and locate upon said reservation and in adjoining sections 5 acres of land, which shall be allotted to such Indian in severalty. Each member of said band of Indians over the age of 18 years shall be entitled to select his or her land, and the father, or, if he be dead, the mother, shall select the land herein provided for for each of his or her children who may be under the age of 18 years; and if both father and mother of the child under the age of 18 years shall be dead, then the nearest of kin over the age of 18 years shall select and locate his or her land; or if such persons shall be without kindred, as aforesaid, then the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or some one by him authorized, shall select and locate the land of such child.

ARTICLE III.

That the allotments provided for in this agreement shall be made, at the cost of the United States, by a special agent appointed by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time prescribe, and within sixty days after such special agent shall appear upon said reservation and give notice to the said Indians that he is ready to make such allotments; and if anyone entitled to an allotment hereunder shall fail to make his or her selection within said period of sixty days, then such special agent shall proceed at once to make such selection for such person or persons, which shall have the same effect as if made by the person so entitled; and when all of said allotments are made and approved, then all of the residue of said reservation which may be subject to irrigation, except as hereinafter stated, shall be disposed of as follows: The Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said lands to be regularly surveyed and to be subdivided into tracts of 10 acres each, and shall cause the said lands to be appraised by a board of three appraisers, composed of an Indian inspector, a special Indian agent, and the agent in charge of the Yuma Indians, who shall appraise said lands, tracts or subdivisions, and each of them, and report their proceedings to the Secretary of the Interior for his action thereon; and when the appraisement has been approved the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said lands to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder for cash, at not less than the appraised value thereof, first having given at least sixty days' public notice of the time, place, and terms of sale, immediately prior to such sale, by publication in at least two newspapers of general circulation; and any lands or subdivisions remaining unsold may be reoffered for sale at any subsequent time in the same manner, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and if not sold at such second offering for want of bidders, then the Secretary of the Interior may sell the same at private sale at not less than the appraised value.

ARTICLE IV.

That the money realized by the sale of the aforesaid lands shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the said Yuma Indians, and the same, with interest thereof at 5 per cent per annum, shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress, or to application, by order of the President, for the payment of water rents, building of levees, irrigating ditches, laterals, the erection and repair of buildings, purchase of tools, farming implements and seeds, and for the education and civilization of said Yuma Indians.

ARTICLE V.

Upon the approval of the allotments provided for herein by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotments shall have been made, or in case of his or her decease, to his or her heirs or devisees, according to the laws of California, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs or devisees, as aforesaid in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all incumbrance whatsoever.

And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void. And during said period of twenty-five years these allotments and improvements thereon shall not be subject to taxation for any purpose, nor subject to be seized upon any execution or other legal process, and the law of descent and partition in force in California shall apply thereto.

ARTICLE VI.

All lands upon said reservation that can not be irrigated are to be open to settlement under the general land laws of the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

There shall be excepted from the operation of this agreement a tract of land, including the buildings, situate on the hill on the north side of the Colorado River, formerly Fort Yuma, now used as an Indian school, so long as the same shall be used for religious, educational, and hospital purposes for said Indians, and a further grant of land adjacent to the hill is hereby set aside as a farm for said school; the grant for the school site and the school farm not to exceed in all one-half section, or 320 acres.

ARTICLE VIII.

This agreement shall be in force from and after its approval by the Congress of the United States.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seal the day and year first above written.

WASHINGTON J. HOUSTON, [SEAL.]
JOHN A. GORMAN, [SEAL.]
PETER R. BRADY, [SEAL.]
Commissioners on the part of the United States.

BILL MOJAVE, and others.

Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

That for the purpose of making the allotments provided for in said agreement, including the payment and expenses of the necessary special agent hereby authorized to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and for the necessary resurveys, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the survey and sale of the lands by said agreement relinquished and to be appraised and sold for the benefit of said Indians, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of said lands.

That the right of way through the said Yuma Indian Reservation is hereby granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for its line of railroad as at present constructed, of the same width, with the same rights and privileges, and subject to the limitations, restrictions, and conditions as were granted to the said company by the twenty-third section of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes:" Provided, That said company shall, within ninety days from the passage of this act, file with the Secretary of the Interior a map of said right of way, together with a relinquishment by said company of its right of way through said reservation as shown by maps of definite location approved January 31, 1878.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause all the lands ceded by said agreement which may be susceptible of irrigation, after said allotments have been made and approved, and said lands have been surveyed and appraised, and the appraisal approved, to be sold at public sale, by the officers of the land office in the district wherein said lands are situated, to the highest bidder for cash, at not less than the appraised value thereof, after first having given at least sixty days' public notice of the time, place, and terms of sale immediately prior to such sale, by publication in at least two newspapers of general circulation, and any lands or subdivisions remaining unsold may be reoffered for sale at any subsequent time in the same manner, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and if not sold at such second offering for want of bidders, then the Secretary may cause the same to be sold at private sale at not less than the appraised value. The money realized from the sale of said lands, after deducting the expenses of the sale of said lands, and the other money for which provision is made for the reimbursement of the United States, shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Yuma Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and said principal and interest shall be subject to appropriation by Congress, or to application by the President of the United States for the payment of water rents, the building of levees, irrigating ditches and laterals, the purchase of tools, farming implements, and seeds, and for the education and civilization of said Indians: Provided, however, That none of said money realized from the sale of said lands, or any of the interest thereon, shall be applied to the payment of any judgment that has been or may hereafter be rendered on claims for damages because of depredations committed by said Indians prior to the date of the agreement herein ratified.

That all of the lands ceded by said agreement which are not susceptible of irrigation shall become a part of the public domain, and shall be opened to settlement and sale by proclamation of the President of the United States, and be subject to disposal under the provisions of the general land laws.

That the Colorado River irrigating Company, which was granted a right of way for an irrigating canal through the said Yuma Indian Reservation by the act of Congress approved February 15, 1893, shall be required to begin the construction of said canal through said reservation within three years from the date of the passage of this act, otherwise the rights granted by the act aforesaid shall be forfeited.

That the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority from time to time to fix the rate of water rents to be paid by the said Indians for all domestic, agricultural, and irrigation purposes, and in addition thereto each male adult Indian of the Yuma tribe shall be granted water for 1 acre of the land which shall be allotted to him, if he utilizes the same in growing crops, free of all rent charges during the period of ten years, to be computed from the date when said irrigation company begins the delivery of water on said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 138, after line 12, to strike out:

SEC. 16. That to pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian Service and pay of necessary employés; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 138, after line 17, to insert as a new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 17. That the approval of Congress is hereby given to "An act to adopt the negroes of the Chickasaw Nation," etc., passed by the Legislature of the Chickasaw Nation, and approved by the Governor thereof January 10, 1873, particularly set forth in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting to Congress a copy of the aforesaid act, contained in House Executive Document No. 207, Forty-second Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment as an additional section to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section:

SEC. 18. That the right of commutation is hereby extended to all bona fide homestead settlers on the lands in Oklahoma Territory opened to settlement under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," approved March 3, 1893, and the President's proclamation in pursuance thereof, after fourteen months from the date of settlement upon the full payment for the lands at the prices provided in said act.

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue to the Cherokee Nation or to its assigns evidences of indebtedness of the United States of America, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable annually on the 4th day of March of each year, in amount of one thousand and ten thousand dollars, respectively, for the respective amounts of the second, third, fourth, and fifth installments, maturing respectively on the 4th day of March, 1895, the 4th day of March, 1897, the 4th day of March, 1898, and the 4th day of March, 1899, and amounting in the aggregate to $6,640,000, as specified in said act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which, as in Committee of the Whole, we agreed to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations on page 54, line 5, beginning with the word "and" and going to the words "Secretary of the Interior," in line 9.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations on page 54, line 5, to insert what will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

And an additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse such of the fifteen other settlers whose claims are held for further proof, in such amounts as may be found justly due them by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out what has been read and inserting in lieu thereof the matter which I send to the desk, furnished us by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

And the further sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of reimbursing, if found upon further examination to be entitled, such claimants in the list examined by the Secretary of the Interior as were held for further proof, or which were erroneously disallowed because of incorrect descriptions of the lands settled upon, thus making it appear that they were not upon lands affected by the executive order of February 27, 1885.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate as in Committee of the Whole agreed to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the proviso beginning in line 25, on page 35, and going to the end of line 6, on page 36.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out on page 35, line 25, the following proviso:

Provided, That when in pursuance of any treaty an appropriation has been heretofore made to erect schoolhouses for the accommodation of the children of any tribe of Sioux Indians out of any fund belonging to said Indians which appropriation is still in force, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed as early as practical to erect such school buildings.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 50, after the word "dollars" in line 4.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 4, page 50, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to contract with responsible parties for the construction of irrigating canals and purchase or securing of water supply on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, for the purpose of irrigating the lands of said reservation: Provided, That the expense of constructing said canals and purchase or securing of water supply shall be paid out of moneys belonging to the said Fort Hall Indians now in the Treasury of the United States and subject to the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians.

Mr. PLATT. Before the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is considered I wish to ask whether all the committee amendments have been offered. I will state very frankly, if I can get the attention of the committee, that I supposed the committee were to offer an amendment on page 69, striking out the proviso at the top of the page and inserting another provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior to examine the claim of Mr. Munson referred to there. Does not the committee intend to offer an amendment of that character?

Mr. COCKRELL. That was a very peculiar case. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is now absent from the Chamber, took up the matter, and looked into it very carefully. There were grave doubts as to whether the provision ought not to remain upon the bill, and there were grave doubts as to whether it ought to remain. It was understood that he and I would make an investigation of it, if we could, and submit the result to the full committee. We never had an opportunity of completing the examination.

We reported the bill subject to that modification. Unfortunately he was called away before we had time to confer with him, and I prepared a proposed substitute for it, directing the Secretary of the Interior. The Senator from Colorado thought it ought not to be allowed now without some restrictions upon it. That substitute was never submitted to the full committee, and when there was such controversy over it, I did not feel that I had a right to offer it as a committee amendment. I have furnished the proposed amendment that I drew to the Senator from Connecticut. He has it in his possession. I thought, after reviewing the whole matter, that it was better to do that under all the circumstances. We still kept control of it, and there was still controversy as to what the facts were. In fact we did not have all the facts before us; we never had them, and I do know to this day what all the facts are in the case. I have been told that there are facts on both sides, and I have never seen them in writing or in any other way.

Mr. PLATT. I supposed it had been agreed upon as a committee amendment, but if that is not the case I will offer it at the proper time.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will state to the committee and also to the Senate, that when I sent up my amendment I presumed that all the committee amendments which were going to be offered had been presented. In regard to the amendment which I have submitted, I will state that it has the indorsement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and also of the Secretary of the Interior. It takes no money out of the Treasury. I understand the committee are willing to accept it. I say to the Senator who has the bill in charge that I understand the committee are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I make no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senater from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I move to strike out the proviso on page 69, commencing in line 1, and ending in line 6, and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following proviso at the top of page 69:

Provided, That the sum of $9,500 shall be subtracted from the amount to be paid to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians on account of the interest herein provided for and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said sum of $9,500 to W. B. Munson of Denison, Tex.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to make a thorough examination of the claim of W. B. Munson, of Denison, Tex., against the Chickasaw tribe of Indians for the amounts named in certain orders or drafts drawn by R. H. Sanders in favor of the First National Bank at Denison, Tex., dated December 10, 1880, and directed to Hon. Robert L. Boyd, auditor, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, and by him accepted June 6, 1881, and to make a full report of the finding of the facts to Congress in December next.

Mr. PLATT. The point that I make with reference to the provision in the bill which I propose to strike out is that Congress has no power or right to take anything from the interest of the Chickasaw trust fund for any purpose whatever; that it is under treaty obligation and statute obligation to pay the interest of that trust fund to the Indians, and it can not divert any portion of it for the purpose of paying any supposed debt which the Chickasaw Nation or any person in the Chickasaw Nation may owe or be supposed to owe.

I shall not go into what is claimed with reference to this debt. The provision of the bill seems to count upon the fact that the Chickasaw Nation owes W. B. Munson, of Denison, Tex., $9,500. That is disputed by the nation. For the purposes of this amendment I do not care very much whether the nation owes the debt or not. The United States has no right to take the money out of this trust fund.

We have had a little experience with this trust fund. We went a good many years ago upon a supposed right, and paid out a part of the principal. After the lapse of thirty or forty years they went into the Court of Claims and obtained the decision of the Court of Claims that we had no right to do it, and we had to refund $240,000, and there is now a bill pending here to pay them $560,000 as interest. The Chickasaw trust fund is derived from some land which they ceded to the United States and for which the United States agreed to pay them. In the treaty of 1832 there was the following clause:

ARTICLE II.

The Chickasaw Nation have determined to create a perpetual fund for the use of the nation forever, out of the proceeds of the country now ceded away. And for that purpose they propose to invest a large proportion of the money arising from the sale of the land in some safe and valuable stocks, which will bring them in an annual interest or dividend, to be used for all national purposes, leaving the principal untouched, intending to use the interest alone. It is therefore proposed by the Chickasaws, and agreed to, that the sum to be laid out in stocks, as above mentioned, shall be left with the Government of the United States until it can be laid out under the direction of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in such safe and valuable stock as he may approve of, for the use and benefit of the Chickasaw Nation.

Then, in 1834, there was the following clause in the treaty:

The funds thence resulting, after the necessary expenses of surveying and selling, and other advances which may be made, are repaid to the United States, shall, from time to time be invested in some secure stocks, redeemable within a period of not more than twenty years; and the United States will cause the interest arising therefrom annually to be paid to the Chickasaws.

Then we had the statute of January 9, 1837. It is now section 2096 of the Revised Statutes:

The Secretary of the Interior shall invest, in a manner which shall be in his judgment most safe and beneficial for the fund, all moneys that may be received under the treaties containing stipulations for the payment, to the Indians annually, of interest upon the proceeds of the lands ceded by them, and he shall make no investment of such moneys, or of any portion, at a lower rate of interest than 5 per cent per annum.

Then in the treaty of 1852 there is the following clause:

The Chickasaws are desirous that the whole amount of their national fund shall remain with the United States in trust for the benefit of their people, and that the same shall on no account be diminished. It is therefore agreed that the United States shall continue to hold said fund in trust, as aforesaid, and shall constantly keep the same invested in safe and profitable stocks, the interest upon which shall be annually paid to the Chickasaw Nation. (10 Stat., 975.)

In three treaties and by one statute we are bound to pay this interest to the Chickasaw Nation, and by the decision of our Supreme Court we are just as much bound to keep our obligations with the Indians as we would be to keep our obligations with Great Britain.

Mr. HIGGINS. We ought to do it without the decision of the court.

Mr. PLATT. We ought to do it without the decision of the court. We might just as well attempt to divert a portion of a fund which we held for the benefit of Great Britain or a portion of its interest and pay it to somebody who said he had a just claim against Great Britain as to take it away from this trust fund or the interest of the trust fund and pay it out to some one who claims that he has a debt against the Chickasaw Nation. A man deals with the Chickasaw Nation as he deals with the United States. We are simply trustees of the United States to hold that property and to pay the interest arising from the invested fund to the Chickasaw Nation.

If, according to the terms of the bill, we were to pay this money to Mr. Munson (even if he had a judgment against the Chickasaw Nation), without the consent of the Chickasaw Nation, if the Chickasaw Nation could get into the Court of Claims it could bring suit for and recover it against the United States.

As was said by the Senator from Missouri, the facts here are in dispute. If they were not in dispute, if they were conceded, we would have no right against the protest of the Chickasaw Nation to pay out its interest money upon the trust fund which we hold to cancel a debt which a man has against the Chickasaw Nation. But the facts are in dispute, and therefore I have proposed, in lieu of the proviso which I propose to strike out, a provision directing the Secretary of the Interior to examine this claim and report a finding of the facts to Congress.

I doubt very much whether the United States ought to interfere even to that extent. If we pay this claim it is an admission of the fact that whenever any person has a claim against any one of the Indian nations which the Indian Nation refuses to pay and we have any funds belonging to it in our hands, he may come to Congress and get payment out of the funds which we have.

Mr. President, I do not think that I need say any more about this claim. I have a large number of papers, affidavits, and protests from the Chickasaw Nation declaring that they do not owe it, that the debt of Mr. Munson is against an individual and not against the Chickasaw Nation, if he has any debt at all. But I do not wish to detain the Senate by going into the disputed facts with reference to whether this is a just claim against the Chickasaw Nation. What I say is that the United States has no right under the treaty and under the law to divert any portion of the interest of this trust fund for any such purpose, and if it does it will have to restore it out of its own Treasury to the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the House of Representatives, after an elaborate investigation of this matter, passed an appropriation in behalf of Mr. Munson, in these words:

Provided, That the sum of $9,500 shall be subtracted from the amount to be paid to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians on account of the interest herein provided for and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said sum of $9,500 to W. B. Munson, of Denison, Tex.

Now, who received the benefit of this money? The Chickasaw Indians. They received every dollar of it. They received it from a bank with which they were accustomed to transact the business of the nation. They received it on a draft drawn on their auditor and accepted by him. They received it on papers approved at the time by the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, William B. Overton. I propose that the Senate shall hear a plain, lucid statement of the transaction given by Mr. Perry, who was at one time president of the Denison bank. I ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE STATE OF TEXAS, Grayson County:

Personally appeared before the undersigned authority, Edward Perry, who, after being by me sworn in conformity to law, on his oath says: That he was, from 1873 to 1888, the executive officer of the First National Bank of Denison, Tex. That during a part of said time the officials of the Chickasaw Nation of Indians transacted the greater part of their financial business through the said bank. That R. H. Sanders, a citizen of the United States, had a contract from the said Chickasaw Nation to supply and conduct a large school in the said nation, known as the Lebanon Academy; that this contract run for five years, the said Sanders being paid by said nation under said contract about $12,000 per annum as the contract price for supplying and conducting said academy. That about one year before the expiration of this contract the said academy was destroyed by fire, at which time the said nation was indebted on said contract to said Sanders in the sum of $5,500.

The said Sanders, being anxious to have the said academy rebuilt, and to obtain a new contract with the said nation for another term of five years, proposed to the authorities of the said nation that if the said authorities would rebuild the said academy and give him a new contract to supply and conduct same for another term of five years, at or about the same consideration as the old contract, that he, Sanders, would contribute to the construction of the new building the said sum of $5,500. This proposition was accepted by the said authorities as made; the said building was erected, the contract made with said Sanders as stipulated, and to the personal knowledge of affiant the said Sanders did contribute and pay to the said Chickasaw authorities the said sum of $5,500, and the said fund was used by the said authorities in the construction of said building.

The said Sanders entered upon his new contract; had to furnish and equip the said academy, and in so doing and to conduct and maintain same had to use large sums of money, which he in part obtained by loans from said bank. That the usual course of business in the transactions of the said bank and the said Chickasaw authorities, so far as the same related to the said Sanders, was for the said Sanders to draw through the said bank on the auditor of the said Chickasaw Nation against the sums due the said Sanders by the Chickasaw Nation under said contract; then when such drafts were accepted by the said auditor the said bank would make advances on such acceptances to the said Sanders on account. That on the 10th day of December, 1880, the said Sanders drew three certain drafts on Robert L. Boyd, the then auditor of the said Chickasaw Nation, for the sum of $4,640; two of these drafts were for $2,000 each, and one for $640, which said drafts were regularly and in due course of business accepted by the said Boyd as auditor of the said nation, and was then by the said Sanders turned over to the said bank on account. That these transactions were in conformity to a method adopted by the said bank and the said Chickasaw Nation at the advice and with knowledge and consent of the governor and officials thereof.

Transactions involving large sums of money had for some time previously been handled in this way, and heretofore all such drafts had been regularly paid. That upon demand for the payment of said three drafts, the officials of the said nation requested time, saying they were not ready to pay them then. The sum of $240 was however paid on the six hundred and forty dollar draft, leaving a balance due on this one of $400, at the same time this draft was retained by the said Boyd, he saying that he would need it for a voucher for the amount he paid on same. That subsequently, and about eighteen months after the making of the new contract between the said Sanders and the said Chickasaw Nation, as aforesaid, and after the payment of the $240 also, as aforesaid, on the said draft for $640, divers personal disputes, quarrels, differences, controversies, and difficulties, grew up between the said Sanders and B. F. Overton, the then governor of the Chickasaw Nation, who was a high-handed, violent, and arbitrary man; in consequence of these various disputes and difficulties between the said Overton and the said Sanders, the said Sanders being in great bodily danger, and to preserve his life fled from the said Chickasaw Nation; that his life was threatened, and his residence in the said Chickasaw Nation, where his wife and children then were was fired into in the night time by a body of armed men, the furniture in said house being riddled with bullets from gun and pistol shots.

That as a further consequence of these disputes and differences, the said Overton, by his high-handed and arbitrary threats and action, at and against the said Sanders, made the life of the said Sanders in the said Chickasaw Nation so unsafe that he dared not return thereto, and that he was compelled to remain away, having every reason to believe, and this affiant does believe, that his life would have been taken if he had remained in the said nation; thus making it impossible for the said Sanders to complete his said contract, the effect of which was to deprive him of the benefits and profits arising out of his said contract. That the said authorities of the said nation then refused to pay the said sum of $4,400, the balance due on the said drafts, and have failed and refused to pay the same or any part thereof ever since, and yet so refuse. That affiant, as the executive officer of said bank, endeavored in every way to secure the payment thereof, and failing in this, then requested and urged the said authorities of the said nation to refund and pay to the said bank for the said Sanders, to secure the payment of the said drafts, the $5,500 contributed by the said Sanders to the said authorities to aid in the construction of the said academy, claiming and charging to the said authorities that the said Sanders had been ruined financially by his expulsion from the said nation, as aforesaid, and their refusal to allow him to fulfill and complete his said contract.

Affiant charges that the said Sanders was so made absolutely insolvent and has ever since remained so, and that in consequence thereof it has been impossible for the said bank to recover from him the money due on said drafts.

Affiant further says that the said three drafts, excepting the $240 paid, as aforesaid, are now due and payable to W. B. Munson, of Denison, Tex., who is the ex-president of the said First National Bank, and became so in the following manner: When some years ago the said Munson, desiring to retire from the banking business, and having arranged for a sale of the said bank, these drafts having become a suspended debt, the purchasers refused to accept them as assets, whereupon the same were written off to the said Munson. That copies of the two of the said drafts, for $2,000 each, are hereto appended, marked Exhibits A and B, and together with the indorsements thereon are made a part hereof. That the said draft for $640 is not in the possession of the said Munson, but was, and affiant supposes is yet, in possession of the Chickasaw Nation, and therefore a copy can not be furnished, the said authorities of the said nation refusing to either pay or return the said draft to the said bank.

EDWARD PERRY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of June, A. D. 1892.

[SEAL.] J. R. HANDY,
Notary Public, Grayson County, Tex.

Mr. COKE. I hold in my hand the original drafts upon the auditor of the Chickasaw Nation, duly indorsed and accepted by him. I will state that the evidence shows that the money which was thus drawn for had been already earned by Sanders in teaching the Indian children and carrying on the Lebanon school.

This is a statement of the facts of this case. The amount called for in this bill is the amount of these drafts with the interest at 8 per cent according to the laws of Texas when drawn.

This is a statement of the condition of the transaction. Since 1880, which I believe was the date of the transaction, Mr. Munson has tried in every possible way to get some sort of settlement. He has been endeavoring to get a settlement there and a settlement here in Washington. He has utterly failed to get any settlement whatever with those people. Then this state of case is presented. Here is a man who was contracted with by the Chickasaw authorities, by the governor and the other authorities. Here are drafts drawn in accordance with that contract and accepted by those authorities; and they are unpaid, and refusal is absolutely made to pay them.

It is said that the fund out of which payment is sought is a trust fund. Of course any fund is a trust fund in the hands of any party belonging to another. The interest on the securities that belong to the Chickasaw Indians was to be paid to the Indians themselves. We can not sue the Indian tribe. There is no legal remedy against them. The only remedy that exists at all is to apply to the Government of the United States, who are the trustees of these Indians, and who hold money to be paid into the hands of the Indians whose government contracted with Sanders, the payee of the drafts, and whose children have been benefited by the contract. That is all there is about the case.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that the Government ought to compel these Indians to do the honest thing in their dealings with the white people of this country. The Government is the guardian of the Indians. The Indians are permitted to contract in a certain mode. They did contract with Sanders, the assignor of Munson. Sanders did comply with his contract until his life was endangered, and he was run out of the Territory. The officers of the Chickasaw government admitted that the drafts were properly drawn by accepting them as drafts which must be paid as soon as they get money into the treasury. This is all I have to say at this time about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, this claim is disputed by the Chickasaws. The claimant is a man, I understand, of fine character, a business man, and the president of a bank. He claims that this money has been due him for a number of years. It is posttively denied by the Chickasaw Nation that it is due, and I think it would be an improper thing for the Senate of the United States to undertake to settle a litigated question in this way between a claimant and an Indian nation.

Mr. COKE. I have here in my hand the drafts drawn on and accepted by the auditor of the Chickasaw Nation. Are there any receipts against these drafts?

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. This claim is thirteen years old.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Fourteen years.

Mr. PLATT. The Chickasaw Nation have had money in that bank during all that period, and the bank has not attempted to take this debt out, and Mr. Munson is the president of the bank.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is stated in the affidavits of the officers of the Chickasaw Nation that this claim has never been presented to the nation. It has been presented again and again by attorneys about the time the Indian appropriation bill was to be passed.

I have personally inspected the claim, which was placed in my hands by the attorney representing the claimant, and after looking into it carefully, I stated to him I could see no justice in undertaking to put in an appropriation bill a provision for its payment. There is no bill pending here and never has been any petition or bill presented asking Congress to pass a law authorizing this man to bring suit anywhere. He simply waits until an appropriation bill is about to be passed, and comes in and undertakes to have the item put on an appropriation bill in spite of the positive denial of the debt by the officers of the Chickasaw Nation, sworn to by the whole of them.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask him how long has this claim been in Washington?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think it has been here two or three years according to my recollection. It has been brought to my attention a number of times.

Mr. COKE. Several years?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps it has been. I know it has been presented to me several times by the attorney representing the claim, and I was satisfied that it was not proper for Congress to undertake to pay it. It may be that the claim is due to this man; it may be that it is a just debt of the Chickasaw Nation; but, if so, it ought to be ascertained and determined by some court, and not determined by the Senate of the United States upon an appropriation bill. That is not fair; it is not reasonable.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator state to what court the question can be taken?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not care what court. I am perfectly willing for it to go to the United States court in the Indian Territory, or I am perfectly willing that the Secretary of the Interior shall investigate the case, as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator whether there is any court that could take jurisdiction of this question, whether he is willing to have it determined by a court or not?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to vote for a bill, as soon as this bill is passed, providing that the claim shall be investigated as proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. I am willing to have any fair, careful, thorough investigation of this claim that can be suggested; but the Senate has not the time to investigate it now.

I have here copies of the papers involved in the case. Here are pages upon pages of affidavits, which I have not had time to read and which other Senators have not had time to read.

I understand the fact to be that this money was loaned to a man by the name of Sanders under circumstances which have been stated to me by both sides, and I believe I understand the truth of the case. If there ever was a case which would justify the establishment of a court to investigate and determine it this is the sort of case that ought to be determined by a court, and not determined anywhere else.

I shall not detain the Senate by arguing as to the impropriety of diverting a trust fund in the custody of the United States to the payment of this claim, however just it may be. We have no such authority, we have no such right; and just at this particular time it would be a most unfortunate thing for us to treat the Chickasaw Nation in this way. We have a commission down in the Indian Territory undertaking to make arrangements with those people by which their lands may be settled and by which they may become citizens of the United States, and it seems to me it is not a very wise step, and it is not a very wise thing for us to inflame the Chickasaws against the Government of the United States, and against the commission we have there now by this high-handed and outrageous proceeding in taking a part of their money and diverting it to the payment of even a just debt.

If this is a just debt to Mr. Munson, the president of a national bank, he is a man of high character, a man of high intelligence, who understands how to take care of his rights, and if the courts are open let him sue. If there are no courts in which suit can be brought, I am willing to vote for the passage of a bill which will allow him to sue in a United States court anywhere, but I am not willing to have the claim settled here in this offhand way without examination, and I enter my protest against it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Even if the money sought to be diverted to the payment of this alleged debt were not a trust fund, I think it simply an extraordinary proceeding to attempt in this manner to garnishee the United States for the payment of this claim.

As every lawyer knows the Government is not subject to being sued in that way, is not subject to garnishment. You can not stop the pay of any officer of the Government, even though he may be indebted to some individual; and if you could not do it in that case, surely you should not in this, even if it were an absolutely just debt which had been reduced to a judgment.

But the proposition is not less extraordinary that the Senate is asked to resolve itself into a court, and as a court and jury to determine whether or not the Chickasaw Nation owes Mr. Munson $9,500. We are to leave the vast and exacting business of the United States to determine this issue. That is an extraordinary proposition. But if we were to go on and vote on this claim we should absolutely pass a verdict upon the case and have the money paid without hearing the evidence.

Affidavits have been introduced, something is put in here on one side, and allegations are made on the other; but is that any way for a court or a tribunal to determine the right between man and man? Yet we are asked to do that. But beyond and above all, is the fact that we are asked to divert funds on which there is created a solemn trust for the payment of the wards of this nation. I hope that they do not stand in this august tribunal any weaker because of their weakness, that their strength would be any greater if, as cestui que trusts, we had here the most powerful nation on earth. We are asked, holding this money in our hands for their use, to pay it to some one else. It is not for this Senate or this Congress to turn itself into a court for the determination of private suits between individuals because one of the parties happens to have trust money owing to it from the United States.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire it understood that this is not an amendment of the committee. This bill was reported to the Senate unchallenged with this provision in it for paying this man. The statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has been made that he had certain reservations in his mind in regard to it; but the bill was reported here favorably without any impeachment of this provision, which was solemnly placed in the bill by the House of Representatives, providing for the payment of this money.

This question was investigated in the House of Representatives, and it comes here with the indorsement of that body. I stand here and show to the Senate a written acceptance of these drafts by the officers of the Chickasaw Nation, and the interest at 8 per cent makes up the amount of the proposed payment. There has been no impeachment of it; no man has said that the debt has been paid.

Mr. PLATT. There has been no impeachment of it except that there was no authority to make any such acceptance. I think that was enough.

Mr. COKE. We had before us the evidence that this bank at Denison advanced money as high as $50,000 at a time to the Chickasaw Nation and that these drafts were given in the usual and ordinary course of business. It was an honest transaction on the part of Mr. Munson and the bank. The Chickasaw Nation have his money. It went to the education of the Chickasaw children and to the maintenance of the Lebanon school. They have never paid it, and the House of Representatives have sent us a provision in this bill providing for its payment. We are remediless without the adoption of this provision.

The Senator from Arkansas talks about helping us to pass a bill to get the claim into court. We know what that amounts to. We are without a remedy. There is no court to which the claimant could go. The claimant dealt with the Chickasaw government. It is true that this Government is the trustee of the Chickasaws for the money that is proposed to be disposed of here, but it is to be paid to the individual Indians or to the nation, not to be invested in stocks, and no direction is given as to its disposition, except that it is to be paid to the Indians. This proceeding is in the nature of a garnishment against the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. PLATT. Is this a payment of interest to the Indians?

Mr. COKE. The interest is to be paid to the Indians.

Mr. PLATT. "The interest upon which shall be paid annually to the Chickasaw Nation."

Mr. COKE. It is to the Chickasaw Nation, then:

Mr. PLATT. Is this payment to the Chickasaw Nation?

Mr. COKE. That puts it still closer. Here is a debt of the Chickasaw Nation, a debt which we have no court to go into to collect, and a debt for which they have stood the claimant off for about thirteen years.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator upon what pretext does the Chickasaw Nation refuse to pay it?

Mr. COKE. They just simply do not pay it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They say absolutely that they do no owe it.

Mr. COKE. Where does the Senator get that?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. From the affidavits of the officers of the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. COKE. Here is their draft for money advanced on the faith of what the governor and the auditor of the Chickasaw Nation said to the bank in the due course of business. Besides there had been a part payment made upon the drafts.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator let me see that draft?

Mr. COKE. Yes; here it is (handing a paper to Mr. JONES of Arkansas). Two hundred and forty dollars was paid on the drafts. They seem to have been short of money, and the Denison bank has had to advance them a great deal of money; and yet we are told that the bank is without any remedy.

The question is whether or not these Indian nations are amenable to any law, whether they are to be permitted to obtain money from citizens of the United States without any remedy, when the United States holds money in its hands which is due to them? I have known repeated instances since I have been a member of the Senate when the Government of the United States has paid claims against Indians out of moneys due them—trust funds—perhaps not against these Indians, but against some Indian tribes. It has been a very common thing to do. The attempt to put this provision upon this appropriation bill has been suggested by the practice of the Government heretofore.

Mr. President, the transaction was an honest one. There is no man in the State of Texas who stands higher than W. B. Munson. I have his affidavit here, in which he makes a plain statement of the transaction. He says the money is due and unpaid. He was the president of that bank once. He ceased to be its president for a time, but is now again its president; and he comes here and asks, when he is without remedy elsewhere, that when the United States Government is about to pay over a large amount of money to the Chickasaw Nation, they pay this sum to him in liquidation and adjustment of an honest debt.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to read to the Senate the paper which the Senator from Texas talks about, and I should like to have the Senate consider just what it is and what it says. It reads:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, Denison, Tex., December 10, 1880.

Please deliver to the First National Bank of Denison, or order, out of my pay due me after 1st February, 1881, a split warrant for $3,000.

R. H. SAUNDERS.

To Hon. ROBERT L. BOYD,
Auditor of the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T.

On the back of that is written:

Accepted January 6, 1881.

It is a plain matter of fact, well known to everybody, that this auditor had no right to accept any draft of this kind on money that was not due, and to bind the Chickasaw Nation. If he undertook to do so he could not bind it. He could only discharge his proper duties in the line of the law.

The other papers are in exactly the same condition. This is an order from a man by the name of Saunders. I have no doubt Mr. Munson tells the truth when he says this money is due; but it is due from Saunders. I have no doubt that is true; but that it is due from the Chickasaw Nation is, to my mind, exceedingly doubtful, and the Senate ought not to assume that if he had had the money he had the right to appropriate it for this purpose. It ought not to assume to pay a doubtful debt of this kind without the Chickasaws having a hearing.

Mr. HIGGINS. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Munson was not the payee of these drafts.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. The drafts were dishonored, and in the affidavit that was read at the desk, which was presented by the Senator from Texas, it was stated that they were written off to Munson afterwards. He simply stands here, therefore, as the holder of paper dishonored as a security, and has no higher equity than the payee himself.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me call attention to one other fact in connection with this case, that Saunders failed to perform his contracts with the Chickasaw Nation. He was held to have violated every claim he had on the Chickasaw Nation, and he was dishonorably dismissed from the service, and among the papers is a statement from Saunders himself that every dollar the Chickasaw Nation owed him had been paid. This money was to be paid out of the money due Saunders after a certain date in the future. Saunders was discharged, and the Chickasaw Nation owed him nothing. There is no obligation in the spirit or letter of the contract that this money should be paid, but if there were, this auditor had no right by his act to undertake to bind the Chickasaw Nation, and the Senate can not undertake to establish any such precedent as that an officer can do any such unauthorized and unwarranted thing.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the Senator will allow me, in his remarks preceding those just delivered, he stated that the courts were open to Mr. Munson to establish his claim in an action at law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know that I said that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understood the Senator to say that. I was going to say that the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] denies that there is any remedy in court; and upon that point I should like to hear the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I said a while ago if the courts were open, my impression was that Mr. Munson would have the right to bring the suit. He certainly has availed himself, as I understand, of his right to sue Saunders, but he has got nothing out of it. Whether he has the right to sue the Chickasaw Nation is another thing.

I am perfectly willing to support the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that this question shall be investigated by the Secretary of the Interior and the facts reported by him to Congress; I am perfectly willing to incorporate in this bill a provision giving jurisdiction to the United States courts anywhere down in that country, where it would be proper and regular to have a suit brought. But what I contend is that in a litigated case like this, one which I submit, so far as it has been investigated, seems to be in favor of the Chickasaw Nation and against the validity or legality of this claim, against its justice and against its fairness, that it is not right for us to settle it here without any investigation and without knowing all the facts.

Mr. COKE. I have just one more word to say, and that is that so far as the offer of the Senator from Arkansas to create a court is concerned, in which this claim can be tried, the Senator is not able to deliver the goods, not able to fulfill his promise. The claimant is without any remedy in the world, the bank is out of this money, and must get it this way or never get it at all. That is all there is about it.

I call attention again to the fact that this is a transaction with an officer of the Chickasaw Government, made with the consent of the governor of the Nation. It is a draft drawn upon him and accepted by him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is nothing in that paper except the auditor's statement. There is nothing about the governor.

Mr. COKE. So far as that is concerned, does any man imagine that a good, honest, sensible man like Mr. Munson, the president of a bank, was going to put out this much money on a draft of an auditor without the consent of the governor, especially when he swears that it was in the course of a very large business that he was doing with the Chickasaw Nation?

I think the Chickasaw Nation can bind themselves as well as any other government; I think the Chickasaw Nation can be estopped as well as any other government; I think the Chickasaw Nation can be made liable on its promises as well as other governments, if you can get it into a place where the nation has money that can be reached; and here is the only place that I know of.

Mr. ALLISON. Only a word on this question. It is true that the Committee on Appropriations reported this bill and without changing the text as it came from the House of Representatives. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] states truly that it was to be further investigated by those having the bill specially in charge. It so happened that I looked into it in connection with the Senator from Missouri after the bill was reported, and I made up my mind that, to say the least, there is a dispute as to whether this is a debt of the Chickasaw Nation. Mr. Munson and the bank which he represents advanced this money fourteen years ago, and this is the first we have heard about this claim in this Chamber.

Mr. COKE. I called the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact, and he admitted it to have been here in Washington for several years.

Mr. ALLISON. Very likely; but that does not change the point I make respecting it. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut submits this question to an investigation by the Secretary of the Interior, one of our own officers, and the chief officer having in charge the great questions relating to Indian tribes.

It seems to me that where a dispute of this kind is to be settled, and where there is a doubt as to whether this claim is due or is not due, Mr. Munson ought to be willing to allow the claim to be fully investigated.

If I remember the amendment as I heard it read at the desk, it is proposed that the Secretary of the Interior shall make report at the next session of Congress. So, if Mr. Munson has a just claim that we are bound to take care of, it is a difference of three or four or five months. After the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas, and after the investigation I made, reading every paper that I could find in connection with this case, I must say that I made up my mind that it is a doubtful claim, and therefore I assented—because the Senator from Missouri showed his amendment to me at the time of its preparation—for myself to agree that this claim should be investigated by the Secretary of the Interior, who is a responsible officer of this Government, and who is at the head of the Department having the care of the Indian tribes.

Why should we take this money from the Chickasaw Nation now, without investigation, when we have by this amendment proposed an investigation and report within four or five months?

Mr. COKE. I simply desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Iowa, that Mr. Munson has been pursuing this claim since 1880; and now the proposition is to put it before the Secretary of the Interior; and nobody knows when the report will ever be made and how much additional delay will be involved. The debt has already doubled by interest at 8 per cent, and nobody knows when a report will be had, and whether the report will amount to anything when it is had. I suppose the claimant would then have to go to the Court of Claims the same as if no report had been made, and possibly by that time the money of the Chickasaw Indians would have been paid out, and the claimant would be left where he is now, without money and without any recourse upon anyone. The proposition is to postpone indefinitely the collection of an honest debt already delayed twelve years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. COKE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am usually paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but a while ago I agreed to pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on this question. If he were present I should vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. In his absence I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. In order to make a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. Notwithstanding my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in order to make a quorum I ask that my vote be recorded. I vote "nay."

Mr. CAREY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. Has the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho has not voted.

Mr. SMITH. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	Gibson,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Allison,	Gordon,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Brice,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POWER. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 8, line 3, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty-four," and in line 14, after "dollars," to insert "$19,000 to be used for Fort Shaw Reservation and Indian Industrial School, Montana."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 13, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty-four," and in line 14, after "dollars," insert "$19,000 to be used for Fort Shaw Reservation and Indian Industrial School, Montana."

So as to make the clause read:

For buildings and repair of buildings at agencies, $44,000, $19,000 to be used for Fort Shaw Reservation and Indian Industrial School, Montana.

Mr. POWER. The amount asked for in the amendment is estimated for by the Department. I wish to have read a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs requesting that the amount be added to the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, July 12, 1894.

SIR: Referring to the letter dated March 31, 1894, from the honorable acting Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, transmitting for the consideration of Congress an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Department of the Interior for the support of the Indian school at Fort Shaw, Montana, for the current fiscal year, and aggregating in amount $62,500 (see Ex. Doc. 176, Fifty-third Congress, second session), I have the honor to invite your especial attention, and to ask favorable consideration of the following items which are embraced in the estimate referred to, viz:

Repairs of buildings	$12,000
Fences, farm implements, seed, etc.	2,000
Irrigation ditches, laterals, etc.	5,000

The improvements contemplated being made with these sums are very material and urgently necessary for the proper conduct and maintenance of this school, and I strongly recommend that they be incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill now under consideration by your committee.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING,
Commissioner.

Hon. FRANCIS M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. POWER. The chairman of the committee, I believe, is satisfied that the amendment shall be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 66, after line 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

For education and support of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils at St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School, Keshena, Wis., at $125 each per annum, $18,750.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the amendment I submit has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has been approved and is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I believe it will have no opposition from the Committee on Appropriations. I shall, therefore, content myself by simply remarking in respect to it that this school has been established a long time, and has been conducted in a manner very satisfactory to the Department. It has been supported largely by contributions. The price at which pupils are to be maintained is much less than the average current price paid. The school has for a long time maintained a considerable number of Indian pupils in addition to the number which it is now proposed by the amendment to award to it.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter of the superintendent of the school, a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, and a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in respect to the amendment, and with these, unless there be more reason for discussing it, I shall submit the question for the determination of the Senate:

KESHENA, WIS., March 20, 1894.

SIR: Inclosed please find copy of an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which I respectfully submit, together with the following:

Ten years ago we started at this place and have uninterruptedly carried on till the present day an Industrial Boarding School for the training of Indian children. Our labors have been hard and tiresome, frequently in very discouraging circumstances, but they have been crowned with success, and I do not hesitate to pronounce our school one of the best in the Indian service. This can be proven by the reports of inspectors, special agents, supervisors, and other officials, all on file in the Interior Department. At the Indian educational exhibit at the World's Fair at Chicago we received an award and diploma of honor for our exhibit, testimony for which will be kindly presented by Mr. J. A. Gorman, of Washington.

Our buildings, all of which have been erected at our own expense and for the sole use of the Indians, have ample accommodation for 170 pupils; our average attendance has been and is upwards of 160, and the enrollment about 190 pupils. Notwithstanding this number our school receives contract compensation for only 130 pupils at $108 per capita.

Of course, ever since the establishment of this school we have been obliged to add to what we received from the Government large contributions of our own in order to maintain the school and make it what it is now, and even if we succeed in securing what we now ask for, viz, an increase of funds from the Department, we will be obliged yet to supplement it with our own funds. What we request is much less than is paid for nearly all the other schools specially appropriated for, as will be seen by referring to the appropriation bill.

Every cent received by us is spent for the benefit of the Indians. I can assure you that a much higher purpose than mere money-making actuates us in our work for the Indian's welfare. The seeking of personal profits was barred off beforehand by our solemn promises rendered ere our foot was set upon the field given in our charge. Now that our people here have advanced so far on the road to civilization and Christianity we will not abandon it, but strive to secure every means for its further and better development and final perfection.

I am confident that the Department, if asked, will substantiate all I have said in regard to the school, and I respectfully request that when the Indian appropriation bill comes before the Senate you may aid us in placing the amendment for our school where it belongs among the other portions of the bill.

Very respectfully, yours,

REV. ODORIC DERENTHAL.

Hon. W. F. VILAS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 30, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, and accompanying letter from Rev. Odoric Derenthal, in regard to an appropriation to maintain the Indian industrial school at Keshena, Wis. (Green Bay Agency).

In response thereto, you are respectfully advised that this school is now conducted under a contract approved by the Department for 130 pupils at $108 per annum per pupil, and is paid from the general appropriation for support of schools.

The accompanying report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated 29th instant, to whom the matter was referred, contains the statement that the St. Joseph school is a most excellent school, and that the number of Indian pupils cared for and educated is greatly in excess of the number provided for by the contract, and that it is worthy of all the aid the Department can give it in regard to increasing its per capita allowance and granting the number of pupils asked for.

In view of these facts, I have to recommend that an appropriation be made to maintain this school as requested.

The papers accompanying your communication are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 29, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by your reference, of the letter of Rev. Odoric Derenthal, superintendent of St. Joseph's Industrial Boarding School, Keshena, Wis., addressed to Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS, United States Senate, dated March 20, 1894, submitting an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, with a history of the school, requesting my report thereon.

In reply, I have the honor to state that from reports of inspectors, special agents, and supervisors, recorded in this office, the St. Joseph's school is a most excellent Indian school.

The quarterly attendance reports show that the number of Indian pupils cared for and educuted at this school is greatly in excess of the number provided for by the Government.

In my opinion, St. Joseph's school is doing very good work for the Indians, and it is worthy of all the aid the Department can give it in regard to increasing its per capita allowance and granting the number of pupils asked for.

I concur in the statement set forth in the letter of Superintendent Derenthal, and respectfully request your favorable consideration of his request.

The letter of Rev. Odoric Derenthal and its inclosures are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Appropriations made no recommendation as to this matter because it determined not to add any new schools to the list of schools. The price in the other schools provided for in the bill is $167, and the price fixed in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is $125.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. On page 53, line 14, I move to strike out "five hundred" and insert "nine hundred and ninety-five;" so as to read:

One thousand nine hundred and ninety-five dollars.

I have called the attention of those in charge of the bill to the proposed change. A bill appropriating $1,995 to pay John Palmier for buildings and improvements at Pine Ridge Agency passed the Senate early in the session. There is no question of the right of Mr. Palmier to recover from the Government the value of the buildings and improvements. The only question is one of amount. There must have been a blunder made elsewhere as to the amount. The amount that was certified to by the Indian agent, Capt. Brown, was $1,995. I refer to Report No. 56, made from the Committee on Indian Affairs in this Congress, justifying fully the amendment I have proposed. There certainly should be no opposition to it, and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not object to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to read the items which make up the $1,995.

Mr. MANDERSON. The items are as follows:

Frame dwelling house, 1½ stories high, 18 by 26 feet; with addition 14 by 18 feet	$1,200
Log dwelling house, 18 by 36 feet	100
Log and board stable	75
Log corral, 100 by 75 feet	50
Forty acres of land under cultivation, inclosed with pole and wire fence	160
Fruit trees planted and growing	40
Breaking 40 acres of land at $3 per acre	120
Digging one well, labor and material	50
Personal labor on farm and buildings	200
Total	1,995

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator again read the last item?

Mr. MANDERSON. The last item is for "personal labor on farm and buildings, $200."

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it was $400.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is $200, making a total of $1,995.

Mr. COCKRELL. We left this just as it came from the other House. I have seen the papers the Senator has, but I am under the impression that there are some other reasons why the full amount was not put in. However, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska may be agreed to and the matter reserved for action in conference.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to say simply that Mr. Palmier was upon these premises for twelve years. He is a very exemplary citizen. Capt. Brown, an army officer, who was the Indian agent at Pine Ridge Agency, says:

Returning to Mr. Palmier's claim for $1,995, I have to say that I consider it a reasonable claim. He has a very good house, barn, corrals, and other improvements which, of course, cost him some money and much labor to erect at this point.

There was no question in the minds of the Committee on Indian Affairs but that this is a very low appraisement of the improvements which were lost by reason of the action of the Indian Department under the law referred to. I hope the committee can retain the amendment in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I offer an amendment to be inserted after the word "dollars," in line 25, on page 49.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 49, insert:

That all lands heretofore constituting a part of the Puyallup Indian Reservation situated near the city of Tacoma, in the counties of Pierce and King, State of Washington, now held in severalty by the Puyallup Indians, patents to which have heretofore been issued by the United States to said Indians, said patents containing certain restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of said lands, are hereby declared to be the property and the estate of each of said allottees or their heirs in fee simple, free and clear of each and every restriction as to the sale, conveyance, or other disposition of the same heretofore imposed by the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That no sale of said lands shall be valid until the parties shall appear before the United States district judge in the district in which said lands are situated, and thereupon submit to him all the terms and conditions of such proposed sale for his approval, and if approved by such judge, he shall indorse his approval on the contract or other instrument evidencing such sale; thereupon such sale may be executed and completed in accordance with the terms and conditions so approved by said judge: Provided further, That the purchase price agreed upon, and as before mentioned, approved by said judge, shall be secured and paid as follows, namely, one-third of the purchase price shall be paid at the date of the final execution of said sale to said allottee, and the other two-thirds shall be secured by eight promissory notes of equal amount, each bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and payable, respectively, in one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight years from the date thereof. Said promissory notes and each of them shall be secured by a first mortgage and lien upon the lands sold, and neither said notes nor said mortgage shall be assignable or transferable to any person whomsoever, but shall remain the sole property of said allottee and his heirs until the indebtedness of said purchaser is fully discharged in accordance with all of the terms and conditions herein.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, the question as to what ough to be done with what is known as the Puyallup Indian Reservation is not a new one to the Senate of the United States. It is a question which has engaged the attention of Congress and of the Executive Department of the Government for some years. The people of the State of Washington feel that they ought to be heard again on this subject and now.

It seems to be a simple matter, although it may appear to be complicated when one first looks over the documents which have been submitted upon the subject. But is in fact a very simple question when you get right down to the bottom of it. There was a treaty with the Puyallup Indian tribe, which provided that the Territory of Washington, which was afterwards created to be a State, could by law remove the restrictions placed upon the disposal of property held by the Indians in severalty, but such a law to be of full force and effect must have the approval of the Congress of the United States. This was provided in the treaty.

Now, the Legislature of the State of Washington, at its first session, held in 1890, did remove those restrictions. Therefore it was simply left for the approval of Congress to be exercised, and then the Indians would have had just as much right to dispose of their land held in severalty as any person holding land has a right to dispose of his property. Thereupon certain individuals proceeded to make negotiations with the Indians for their lands or a portion of their lands. Those negotiations went on, and certain agreements were entered into.

There was a feeling, however, that there might be in this connection some advantage taken of the Indians. There are in the States of the East people who are busying themselves very honorably and charitably in looking after the interests of the Indians.

Some of these people thought that there was a danger that the Indians might be cheated and defrauded out of the value of their property or a large part of the value, and remonstrances began to pour in. There was a cessation of the negotiation, and efforts were made to prevent the Congress of the United States from approving the act of the State. Thus the matter stands. That condition of affairs has been maintained and exists at this day.

Now, what are the essential facts about the situation? Here is the city of Tacoma, of 40,000 people. The boundaries of the city are immediately adjacent to the Indian reservation. The Indian reservation consisted originally of 18,050 acres, of which 585 (originally 598.81, afterwards reduced on account of the overlapping of some claim which was allowed) belong to and are kept in a separate unallotted portion for cemetery, school, and agency purposes. The remainder, 17,463 acres, was allotted to the Indians. How many allottees were there? Only 166 individual Indians altogether were the patentees.

The total population, counting men, women, and children, numbered about 600.

When this matter came up in the Fifty-first Congress in 1890 there was a great deal of discussion about it, and at that time a commission was sent there. On that commission was a very eminent jurist by the name of Judge Drake, now deceased. Many of the Senators knew him. The commission went there and made an examination of the property and local conditions and all the circumstances. Their report is here before me, giving a statement in detail of all the facts ascertained, the names of the Indians, and the amount of property held by them in severalty, and every other feature affecting the question. The commission being an able one, its suggestions and report are of value.

Up to the present time the Indians have been unable to make a disposition of their lands, and in consequence they are the sufferers. Of course, you make an appropriation of $16,000 in the pending bill for the Puyallup and other Indian agencies in that State. You make provision for them on page 48 of the bill, as follows:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents at seven agencies and the support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup agencies, and pay of employés, $16,000.

But if the Indians had been able to sell their land they would have raised the sum of $700,000 for only a portion of the land, only about one-half, for the sale of which they had made contracts. That would have given to the adults, of whom there are less than a hundred and fifty, the sum of $5,000 each. Forty-two of the original patentees had died in 1891. This vast amount of money could have been realized and the United States could have been relieved of expense.

The property would have gone into the hands of white men, who would have improved it, and it would have been taxable property in the State of Washington and in the county in which it is situated. The opportunity which the Indians had of making the sale has gone by for the present. The average value of the land as then arranged to be sold by them was about $76 an acre, which is a very good price for property encumbered by very heavy forests.

Mr. GRAY. Seventy-six dollars an acre?

Mr. SQUIRE. Seventy-six dollars an acre. That is the average price. Mind you, some of it is low land and unfit for occupancy for residence or home purposes. Some of it is good, rich valley land, which, when cleared, will support people well. Other land included in the reservation is hill land and is suitable mainly for agricultural purposes when improved. Now, when this land is cleared, particularly the valley land, it is highly productive. It has been stated, and I believe it to be true, that 6 or 7 acres of it, if it is well cleared, will support a family. But it costs a great deal of money to clear it. It costs from $75 to $150 an acre to clear it for purposes of agriculture. I take these figures from the report of the commission.

Now, see what a position we are in. The Indians can do nothing with this land, practically. There is another commission out there under the law enacted by the Fifty-second Congress in 1893, and while I do not say that the Indians are quarreling with the commission, they do not like the situation. The last commission, to which I now refer, is invested with certain powers and functions as to the selection and sale of the land. But the Indian owners decline to sell under present conditions. These are not savage Indians. They are intelligent people. They have their schools. More than half of the men, women, and children can read and write. They appear in the same garb as we do; they go to political conventions, and vote for Representative in Congress. These people understand the methods of doing business. They serve on juries, and perform all the other duties of American citizenship.

I have been amongst them year after year. I have visited them. I know some of them personally, and that they are some of them highly intelligent people. They have had the benefit of schools for many years. They have one of the best conducted agencies now under the Government. The agent, Mr. Eells, is an exceptionally excellent one, who has been there for a great many years.

I will state what we wish to have done. We desire to have these Indians empowered to sell their lands under some suitable and adequate provision for their protection, for they are the wards of the nation still. We think the best plan to be adopted is to allow the judge of the United States district court to pass upon the question of the equity of the contract—the reasonableness of it. We think that he, being on the ground and knowing these men personally, having been brought up in a city only 30 or 40 miles distant from them, having known many of them for years, and knowing all the conditions, is better able to judge than anybody else.

We wish to have Congress allow the Indians to have the benefit of their property. Time is rolling by, and they are getting no usufruct from the vast body of lands uncultivated. They are cultivating altogether about 1,800 or 1,900 acres out of the 18,000. The Indians are not hard workers, and they can not do the clearing without financial assistance. They can not improve their own property unless they have the money with which to do it, and they can not raise the money because they can not sell the land, and they can not even lease it.

I go now to the other feature of the question. The Congress of the United States by law permits the Indians to dispose of their lands after a certain period, eight years of which yet remain. Eight years from now they can dispose of their lands without any act of authorization by the Congress, and without any restrictions. They are probably as well fitted for business now as they will be then.

Now, why keep them waiting all this time? This is in their behalf. This bill is for their benefit. But aside from that it seems to me the white people of that State have some rights in the premises, I mean without injustice to the Indians. Here is this very important city for the Pacific coast, one of our largest cities of that region, that is bounded on one side by this Indian reservation, which contains the very best land in that vicinity. The land in the valley of the Puyallup is very rich and fertile, and it is most injurious to the interests of the city and county that this grappling hand be held on their throats. It is not right. It is not fair to those people, and it is in their interest in large part that I plead before the Senate to-day.

Mr. GRAY. What can they get for their land now?

Mr. SQUIRE. I suppose the original contracts can not be enforced under the law. The Representative in Congress from that district, Mr. DOOLITTLE, informs me that the Indian owners can probably get from $125 to $150 an acre for land uncleared. It may seem strange that we can get such prices for land. It is because——

Mr. GRAY. Because of the timber on the land?

Mr. SQUIRE. Not because of the timber, but because of its contiguity to the city of Tacoma and its fertility.

Mr. GRAY. What is the matter with the farmers out in that part of the country if they can get $150 an acre for land?

Mr. SQUIRE. The trouble in this case is that the Indians are not free to sell the lands they desire to sell. These Indians have exceptionally good lands. I may say to the Senator from Delaware that it is very fertile. I mean, of course, the best of the valley land.

Mr. GRAY. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. SQUIRE. They can not sell their land. It happens that owing to its contiguity to the city of Tacoma there is a double value: first, its fertility, and, secondly, its proximity to the city and all the inducements that go toward the sale of suburban property.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the Senator from Washington permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SQUIRE. Certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do these Indians ask for this to be done?

Mr. SQUIRE. They do. Mr. DOOLITTLE, the Representative in Congress who lives in Tacoma, assures me positively that they do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How did they take action signifying their desire?

Mr. SQUIRE. They held public meetings, and they have communicated their wishes from time to time to those who represent them here. I submit that there is no necessity for any entanglement about this matter. It is simply a question of allowing a highly competent tribunal located there, the United States district bench, now occupied by a judge who has exceptional qualities of intellect, heart, fairness, and candor, a man who has the confidence of the Indians, to supervise and approve contracts of sale, and this is what they want done.

Now, why should we keep them back? Why not allow those Indians to dispose of their lands under the supervision of the United States judge, who deals with all great questions of admiralty and all other great interests there in that State. Is there any good reason for objection? Is it necessary that there should be kept hovering over them a commission consisting of persons sent from some distant States of the Union and paid at the expense of the people of the United States, a sort of permanent fixture over these Indians, a surveillance that is distasteful to them?

I believe, Mr. President, that the good sense of the Senate will manifest itself in the passage of this amendment. I see no good reason against it. The money ought to be paid there and kept there, and those people ought to be free from this bondage.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to feel obliged to say a few words in respect to the pending amendment. The Senator from Washington is a Senator whom we not only all respect but very much admire and regard, and it is unpleasant for me to interpose a word of objection to anything whatever which he desires. But it happened to be my duty, in serving upon the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, to make a careful inquiry into the facts touching the Puyallup Indian Reservation, and it was imposed upon me by that committee to stand in opposition to a somewhat similar proposal by the former colleague of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Allen]. I do not myself feel at liberty to permit this amendment to be considered without briefly advising the Senate what I understand to be the situation in respect to the Puyallup Reservation.

The Senator from Washington has correctly stated the fact, that it is a rich and valuable tract of land, hugging closely to the city of Tacoma, so nearly adjacent to it as that the city itself is now almost upon it. Some of that land is worth a thousand dollars an acre, I suppose.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I correct the Senator from Wisconsin? I do so with great reluctance, as I respect him very highly.

Mr. VILAS. I would be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think there was such an estimate made as to one particular tract, and that is the tract now under consideration in the amendment. The tract that is reserved for school purposes was valued at a thousand dollars an acre. That is the only tract, I believe, that was considered of such value, and that was at a time when all property, especially real estate in that vicinity, and in fact all over the country, was at a higher figure than it is to-day.

Mr. VILAS. Whether that estimate is correct or not it certainly is land of very high value. It is true also that it has been allotted so that nearly all of it stands in the name of Indian allottees, some one hundred and sixty odd in number. I suppose there is hardly one of those allottees whose name is not affixed to a contract obtained from him some years ago by some speculator or trader in lands who hoped to acquire the ownership of his allotment so soon as Congress shall remove its protective guardianship over his right of sale.

There lies the rich prize. There are the active speculators ready to seize upon it. It is not strange that the fact is as was stated by the distinguished Senator, that the very first Legislature of the State of Washington which assembled gave its unqualified consent to the unlimited power of alienation by the Indians, and had it not been for the wise and prudent restriction which had been preserved for the benefit of the Indians in the treaty with them that the consent of the Legislature should not be effectual to the end without the consent also of Congress, those contracts would long since have taken away from the Indians their rich and valuable possessions.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I interrupt the Senator one moment?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to state that the land which was contracted for at that time did not amount to more than about half of the allotted land. I should also state that it is not now believed that those contracts are valid under the conditions of law existing. It is not proposed to enforce those contracts. The proposition is that new contracts may be made, not that the others shall be enforced.

Mr. VILAS. Have not the contracts been made either before the date of the consent of the Legislature or since for substantially all the rich land?

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand, and it is shown in the report which I hold in my hand from the commission, that the contracts cover something over 9,000 acres out of the 18,000 acres.

Mr. VILAS. What is the date of that report?

Mr. SQUIRE. Eighteen hundred and ninety-one is the date.

Mr. VILAS. That is the old contract.

Mr. SQUIRE. There have been no contracts made since that I am aware of, I should say——

Mr. VILAS. I was about to add, after that general statement of the situation, not caring to go with great particularity into details (nor indeed am I able to do so, for it is some time since I have reviewed the facts with care), that when the last appropriation bill was before Congress, in view of all these circumstances Congress took what seems to me to be very wise and proper action. In the act of March 3, 1893, it was provided—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized immediately after the passage of this act to appoint a commission of three persons, and not more than one of whom shall be a resident of any one State, and it shall be the duty of said commission to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees; and also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes, in the Puyallup Reservation, in the State of Washington. And if the Secretary of the Interior shall approve the selections and appraisements made by said commission, the allotted lands so selected shall be sold for the benefit of the allottees, and the agency tract for the benefit of all the Indians, after due notice, at public auction, at not less than the appraised value, for cash, or one-third cash and the remainder on such time as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, to be secured by vendor's lien on the property sold.

And it was declared to be the duty of that commission, or a majority of them, to superintend the sale of those lands; to ascertain who are the true owners of the allotted lands; to have guardians duly appointed for the minor heirs of any deceased allottees; to make deeds of the lands to the purchasers thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, which deeds should operate as a complete conveyance of the land upon the full payment of the purchase money, etc.

Other provisions, which I shall not delay the Senate to listen to, for further care over this matter, were introduced in that act.

Now, Mr. President, that commission was appointed, as I am informed. That commission is in service, discharging the functions. There is the authority which, if exercised as Congress has provided, will clear up in a just and proper manner this difficulty of a dead tract of land lying near the city of Tacoma. It will provide fair terms for the Indians. And, sir, while that provision of law is in process of execution, and while it is apparently abundantly sufficient to secure the great end of the sale of this property with justice to the Indians, it does not seem to me quite right that on this appropriation bill, without any especial care or examination, we should suddenly introduce a new law which removes at once all restriction upon the sale of the property except that it submits it to a judicial officer upon whom Congress has no right to impose the duty and who can only perform it in case he voluntarily accepts an extrajudicial function without compensation.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me a moment?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the proposed amendment provide for the sale of all the land of the Indians?

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Connecticut is correct. The amendment provides——

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me further. I will state that any bill which has been introduced before, until the action of Congress at the last session in appointing a commission, has always reserved from sale what is within these black lines on the map [indicating], which is about half of the premises. The provision last year was that the lands which the allotters did not need for homes were to be sold. Now, the pending amendment provides for selling everything, as I understand it.

Mr. VILAS. I was about to call attention to the fact——

Mr. PLATT. In this report we have a full account of the allotment of every Indian, stating what might be sold and what is homestead and what might not be sold. It seems that matter is entirely disregarded by the pending amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would like to make a statement, with the indulgence of the Senator on the floor.

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I learn that the Department of the Interior is very well satisfied to remove all restrictions so far as relates to sale of the quantity of land. I think the Department would be quite willing to remove restrictions altogether with one exception possibly. I do not know that it would object to this amendment, but I think it may be true that the Department would prefer to retain the supervision itself. But I suggested in my remarks that a judge of such a character as we have there, a judge living there, familiar with the Indians, understanding them, and a man of their choice, they admiring him, they approving him, desiring that he shall be the one to pass upon the conditions which may be fair toward them, would be preferable to any officer of the Interior Department.

We all know how busy the Departments are here and the Bureaus under them; how difficult it is to pay special attention to such subjects as this, of which the conditions are in distant regions of our country and depending almost altogether upon representations made by agents of the Department, upon which the Department may act. Therefore it is believed that the Indians desire that this United States district judge shall be the one to pass upon the propriety of these contracts as to their interests. They desire this man to be substituted for a commission or even the head of the Department in deciding whether these contracts are conscionable or not.

I beg pardon for speaking just one word more simply to say that I learn it is a fact to-day that the commission there has accomplished nothing in the direction of selecting land which may be sold with the approval of the Indians.

Mr. PLATT. Why not?

Mr. SQUIRE. Because the Indians do not desire to have people act for them in selecting land. They say they know their business. They know what they want to sell just as well as the white man does, and they probably do. They know whether they want to part with a piece of property or not; they know what it is worth; and you can depend upon them to secure all they can get for it.

It seems to me now that it is understood the Department has shown its willingness to have all other restrictions removed, that is, so far as relates to the quantity of land to be sold—to be merely a question who shall supervise and approve the sales, and we consult the Indians themselves when they ask that this notable man, this correct, upright judge, who has done so well for the bench there, shall be their father—if I may use that term in this connection—to approve or disapprove of the transaction, and they ask that their will be granted in this respect.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I am not disposed at all to question the statement of the distinguished Senator from Washington, but we have no other evidence than the general statement that these Indians are so desirous of having this judge perform the duty. We have no evidence that the judge is willing to assume that duty. If we impose that duty upon him we have no sort of control over him. It would be an entire extrajudicial duty, which he could assume only voluntarily. Congress can not impose upon a judge of the Federal court the duty of supervising contracts of sale with Indians.

Mr. President, I only wish to observe (and I wish to do so as gently and with as little urgency as the facts will permit) that this amendment coming in now seems extraordinary after the provision made last year which is in process of execution. It almost leads one to suspect, what I am sure has never entered the mind of the Senator from Washington, that some of those people out there interested in securing these lands have found the commission to be executing its duties with too much advantage to the Indians, with too much care in their supervision.

Let me observe further, as was suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, that the amendment proposes not only to obliterate the cautionary guardianship of the United States, save and except as it imposes that duty upon a judge when there is no right to put it there and when he may repudiate it, but it also proposes to sell all of these allotted lands, notwithstanding the very act now under execution, in care for the Indians, directed the commission first to save for them what was necessary for their homes, and notwithstanding every proposal heretofore made, the one which we successfully resisted in the last Congress, when urged by the distinguished colleague of the Senator from Washington, has limited and set apart a certain portion of this reservation as not to be sold, while this sweeps in the whole thing.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator does not mean that it sweeps in the whole thing. He does not mean that it sweeps in anything beyond the allotted land.

Mr. VILAS. I was just about to add, if the Senator will permit me, that with the act of last year it takes every acre and makes every acre subject to sale.

Mr. SQUIRE. Five hundred and eighty-five acres are reserved, unallotted.

Mr. VILAS. I must withdraw that general expression. It reserves the burying ground, and so much as shall be held necessary for school purposes.

Mr. SQUIRE. Five hundred and eighty-five acres, which is probably the most valuable. That is, I believe, according to the appraisement under the supervision of the commissioners. It is valued at a thousand dollars an acre, because this can be made town property and be divided into lots. It is perhaps all, or nearly all, cleared. It is adjoining the village of Puyallup, as I remember, and is convenient to churches, schoolhouses, residences, and streets.

Mr. VILAS. The act provides that it shall be the duty of the commission to select not only such parts of the allotted land as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees, but also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes, and expose it all for sale.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me? Does the Senator understand that under the provision of law of last year the allotted lands can be sold without the consent of the Indians?

Mr. VILAS. Perhaps not, but I will not undertake to affirm absolutely that I am correct in that statement.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The truth of the matter is, I think, that the whole business is a dead letter on the statute book. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that if the act contemplates selling the allotted lands on which those Indians hold patents from the United States without their consent, then I take it the Senator will agree with me that that is something Congress can not do. If upon the other hand, it contemplates securing their consent, then I suggest that the Indians never have consented and never will consent to the disposal of their lands in that way. Consequently in any event the statute is a dead letter. There is nothing being done, and nothing has been done except the surveying of land There has not been a sale.

Mr. VILAS. It may be that nothing has yet been done in the way of effecting sales, and perhaps a reason for it may be discovered in this amendment, which seeks to put the entire disposition of the lands in the Indians themselves, subject only to an approval of their contract by a judge.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Wisconsin is familiar with Indian Affairs. Does he not believe that the interests of the Indians would be protected under the provisions of this amendment if it became a law? Are their interests not safe, when every contract that they make for the sale of the lands, that they have made in the past or may make in the future, must be submitted to the judge of the United States district court, a man residing there in the State, a man of integrity, a man holding a high judicial position? When the contracts, with all their terms as to amount per acre and everything of that kind, must be submitted to him, does not the Senator believe that their interests are to be protected?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I am not here to affirm anything against the integrity, high character, the great ability, the power and the benevolence of the judge of that court, but I am entirely satisfied with the commission which has been created for the purpose of giving their personal and careful attention to the disposition of these lands, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior thrown over as a further safeguard I very much prefer it, I am bound to say, to the scheme proposed in the amendment. I suspect this amendment.

Mr. President, I think I have said all that is necessary to bring the situation concerning this matter to the attention of the Senate. I have already said that it is with the very greatest reluctance, as a personal matter, that I have said what I felt it my duty to say both as respects the genial, affable, and lovable Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] and the Representative in another place of the same State, who was formerly a citizen of my own State, and for whom I have a personal regard. I should like to ask whether this amendment has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and whether it has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. SQUIRE. In answer to the Senator, I will say that I thank him for his kind words. I appreciate them coming from him, and I appreciate his careful consideration of this question.

The Senator asks, has this amendment been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs? I would state to the Senator that the condition of business in the Senate has been such that the committees, as he well knows, have not ordinarily been holding their customary sessions as committees, and there has been no lack of desire on my part or on the part of the Representatives in the House from the State of Washington to present this matter to the Committee on Indian Affairs. We have endeavored to do so over and over again, but have not been able to secure the necessary attention. Therefore it is not our fault. The amendment was duly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs long since, and they have had an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. VILAS. Is the amendment acceptable to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SQUIRE. We hope so. We hope the committee thinks favorably of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been trying for sometime to say what the Committee on Appropriations think of the amendment. We are profoundly astonished that this matter is pressed upon the Senate. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and I gave the subject the most elaborate, careful, and painstaking consideration for the express purpose of reporting it favorably, if it was within the bounds of decency and self-respect for the committee to do it; and we notified the friends of the measure that it could not be done, that we could not sustain it; and I am sorry that it has been pressed upon us, for I did not want to say what I have felt compelled to say here on the subject.

I sympathize with the representatives of the State of Washington in regard to this matter. I appreciate the condition they are in, and so do the Committee on Appropriations; but I called upon the distinguished Senator from Iowa, in the absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to confer with me in regard to certain matters which might come up on this bill; and we gave the subject the utmost care and attention.

How could we come in here and report favorably upon this amendment when it is the purest kind of legislation? How could we come in here and report the amendment in the face of the opposition of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and of the Secretary of the Interior? How could we come in and report it in the face of the fact that only about March, 1893, we passed a bill providing for the sale of all these lands, appointed a commission, and that commission is there now negotiating with the Indians for the sale of the lands, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs tells us that the commission is making progress. The Committee on Appropriations could not maintain their self-respect and come in and report favorably upon this amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would ask the Senator if it is not the correct statement that this commission is making progress with the school or agency lands, and that it is not making progress with reference to anything else?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know that they have. They have not had time to complete their work, but they report that they are making progress in allotting the lands which have not been allotted in severalty, in getting possession of them, and in disposing of them to individuals.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is it not true that the commission has not been successful in its endeavors to conciliate the Indians in respect to the allotted lands?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Commissioner does not so report.

Mr. SQUIRE. And that the Indians do not act in accord with the commission?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Commissioner has not so reported to us.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am informed that no sales have been made, and that the Indians are not satisfied to come under the terms of the law creating the commission.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is very evident that the bill, which affects very great interests, can not be closed to-night. I appeal to the Senator from Missouri to allow it to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had hoped that we could dispose of a few more amendments this evening; but under the circumstances I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 12 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 19, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 18, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. J. H. McCARTY, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

USELESS PAPERS, WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, in accordance with the act of Congress approved February 16, 1889, a list of useless papers on file in the War Department; which was referred to the Special Committee to Consider the Question of the Disposition of Useless Papers.

REFERENCE OF A SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 320) to authorize the Purcell Bridge and Transfer Company to construct and maintain a bridge over the South Canadian River, etc.; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ADAMS of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 1930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARSNEY. There is an amendment reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. TARSNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAUGATUCK HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan, under the project of 1867, as modified in 1869, 1870, 1875, and 1882, and the improvements recommended in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1893, Appendix MM.

Mr. SAYERS. Before consent is given I would like the gentleman to make some explanation of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the House passed a House resolution on this subject, but the Secretary of War reported that under the last river and harbor bill no supplemental estimate could be sent in except on action taken by Congress.

Mr. REED. Should not this information be furnished to Congress, if a concurrent resolution is required? This resolution provides that the information shall be furnished to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks perhaps it should be so worded.

Mr. REED. I only make the suggestion. Are the estimates furnished to both Houses?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan please send the letter from the Secretary of War to the desk?

Mr. REED. Probably it makes no difference. But if it requires the action of Congress it would seem that the information should be furnished to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that portion of the letter from the Chief of Engineers bearing upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

In returning the resolution of the House of Representatives. I beg to say that section 8 of the river and harbor act, approved July 13, 1892, provides "that, after the regular or formal report on any examination, survey, project, or work, under way or proposed, is submitted, no supplemental or additional report or estimate for the same fiscal year shall be made, unless ordered by a resolution of Congress."

The SPEAKER. This is a concurrent resolution for the purpose indicated, and the question is on its passage.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think it is all right in its present form.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CUSTOMS DISTRICT, HARTFORD, CONN.

Mr. SPERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of bill (H. R. 4452) for adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 3, 1887, creating the customs district of Hartford, be amended by adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the towns already named as comprising said district, and that the town of Vernon, city of Rockville, in said State of Connecticut, within said district of Hartford, is hereby constituted a port of delivery within the meaning of said act of March 3, 1887, and the act of which said act of March 3, 1887, is an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask if this is unanimously reported from any committee?

Mr. SPERRY. I so understand it. The report is at the desk.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. PRICE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4452) adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery, report the same back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to add the towns of Manchester and Vernon to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., to make the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery, and to extend to it the privileges of the seventh section of an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880.

The accompanying letter from the Treasury Department, of December 20, 1893, which is made a part of this report, says there is no objection to the passage of the bill.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from your committee, dated the 6th instant, with which was inclosed for an expression of my views thereon copy of House bill No. 4452, providing for the addition of Manchester, Vernon, and Rockville, in the State of Connecticut, to the ports of delivery embraced within the customs collection district of Hartford, Conn., and extending the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods and for other purposes," to Rockville, Conn., and in reply to say that I see no objection to the passage of said bill.

Respectfully, yours

C. S. HAMLIN, Acting Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE D. WISE,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a correction. I find I am recorded, on page 8973 of the daily RECORD, by the tellers as present and not voting when the vote was taken on the final passage of the bill then under consideration. I was not in the House at that time, and was probably at least a mile distant; for as soon as I had voted on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], as recorded on page 8972, I got my hat and immediately afterwards took the cars to my office on F street. Therefore I wish to have it understood that I was not in the House at that time and was probably that distance away from it when the vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been unable to hear the statement of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. REED. The gentleman desires a correction on the ground that the tellers reported him as present yesterday when he was a mile away. It seems unfortunate——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire repeat his statement?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. My statement was this: That I am recorded on page 8973 of the RECORD, as reported by the tellers, "present," when I was not present in the House, and was probably at least 1 mile away. As soon as I had answered to my name on the first roll call, recorded on page 8972, on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], I took my hat and left the House and went to the cable cars and immediately proceeded westward to my office. I was absent during the whole of that roll call on the passage of the bill, and for probably nine-tenths of the time included in the roll call on the amendment as recorded on the preceding page.

The SPEAKER. The tellers were the gentleman from New York——

Mr. REED (interrupting). I should like to inquire who the bad men were who were acting as tellers at that time.

The SPEAKER. The tellers were the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. REED. I hope the Committee on Rules will give attention to the proposition that we should have four tellers, and let us see if we can not have accuracy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] does not seem to be very certain that he was not here. The tellers can make any statement about it they please.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. What is the statement of the Speaker?

Mr. TERRY. I will state that we noted the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] as present; we believed he was present. We agreed upon that. I called the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] to him, and the gentleman from New York noticed him and took down his name. It is possible we might have been mistaken, but we do not think we were. At least I do not think we were.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], would agree that I am perfectly conscious of my own existence, and know where I was at the time specified, and I say that as soon as I had answered on the preceding roll call I left the House, and was not in it afterward, yesterday.

Mr. TERRY. What time did the gentleman leave the House?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I can not give you the precise moment, but it was as soon as I answered to my name on the previous vote taken on the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. Yes; but it so happened that when it came to the last vote we saw a number of gentlemen leaving, and I thought that I recognized you as one of the gentlemen, and I called the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] to it at the time and told him to make a note of it, and then he took a note.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I did not leave at that time, because I had left the House at least half an hour before that time.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] took the note with the understanding that if you did not answer when your name was called then it would be so reported.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am not responsible for the obscure vision of the tellers: but I repeat that I had left the House of Representatives at least one-half hour before, because I answered to my name on the vote on the amendment, and immediately left the House. I answered on the first roll call. There must have been a second roll call, and the intervening business, and then the roll call on the passage of the bill, and that certainly must have occupied at least one-half hour.

Mr. TERRY. I called attention to you, as I thought it was you, when you were right there. [Indicating.] I spoke to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] and told him he ought to know you better than I did; and we agreed on it and took your name down. Of course the gentleman ought to know better than we did whether he was present. He could hardly be mistaken in that, and we might possibly be, but the gentleman might be mistaken as to the time, and he does not seem to be very certain as to the time when he did leave the House in point of fact.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am absolutely and unconditionally certain that I was not present in this House during any portion of that roll call, and I have so stated at least four or five times, and for the gentleman who acted as teller, or for any one else, to undertake to dispute my statement upon that point seems to me entirely superfluous.

Mr. TERRY. All I can state, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman is that I was satisfied in my own mind that it was the gentleman, and then I called on the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] on his side, called his attention to him, and we agreed on the matter and took his name down, and when he did not respond to his name we reported him as "present."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I am not only satisfied, but I know I was not in the House at any time during that roll call.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House and the gentleman from Arkansas to the statement made by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER]. His name occurs early on the roll, among the Bs. He states, without having looked at the clock, or knowing at what hour he left, that on the previous roll call, as soon as his name was called and he had answered to it, he left and took the cable cars and went west. Now, if that does not conclusively prove that half an hour after he left the Hall he was recorded by the tellers as present, I do not know what can prove it, supposing the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] to be stating the truth.

Now, the only point about it is this: Nobody charges that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], or any other gentleman, willfully recorded anybody as present who was not present. That is not the charge. Nobody makes any charges about it. It is only a correction of fact, and, incidentally, it is interesting to some of us here, as showing the fallibility of human instrumentalities, even when those instrumentalities consist of members of the House.

In other words, that members appointed to do a certain duty are as likely to make a mistake as the Speaker pro tempore, or as a clerk; and the sole emphasis to be put upon this transaction is its relation to past events. A good deal of abuse has been wasted on a Speaker pro tempore who made a mistake of that sort, and upon a clerk who made a mistake; but inasmuch as this was made by two members, one on each side, it goes to show that some portion of that abuse was unnecessary. That is all the significance of the fact.

Mr. TERRY. In regard to that, Mr. Speaker, I simply say that when we have tellers, one of them from the Democratic side and one from the Republican side, there is less danger of mistakes occurring of the kind the gentleman speaks of, when the count was confined to one side.

Mr. REED. Now, let us put that to a practical test. The other system ran for two years and only two mistakes were made, supposing them to have been mistakes. This system has been running only a few months and we run against a mistake. This is really the first day that it has ever been practically put in practice, where a member was recorded as present who did not vote. There were only two mistakes, without any member as teller, and here is one mistake with two members as tellers.

Mr. TERRY. It is an alleged mistake.

Mr. REED. So you will see there is no infallibility of tellers. The rays come through prismatically distorted, notwithstanding the attempted correction by putting crown glass and flint glass together.

Mr. BLAND. It shows there is no infallibility.

The SPEAKER. Of course there is not nor can there be any system that is absolutely infallible. All that is claimed for the present system is that it removes it from any suspicion of intentional unfairness or injustice, because the tellers are composed of members, one from each side, or one from each political party represented in the House. That they may make mistakes, of course every man knows. No one contends otherwise. But what is claimed for the rule, and for the superiority of that rule over any rule that has gone before, is that it removes any question of intentional error.

Mr. REED. If the Speaker will permit me just one word, I desire to say further, that the question is not a test as to the system, but as to whether two members selected from the House, necessarily not very well acquainted with all the members as the Speaker or the Clerk is, are more liable to make a mistake than these two sworn officials of the House. And I want to demonstrate that the experience of mankind, which has more significance than all these theories, thus far is to the contrary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I only want to make one remark. On the day before yesterday, when a question was made as to the accuracy of the count by tellers, one of the tellers disputed that a certain gentleman, Mr. GEAR, was present who had been noted as present by the other teller. I think that this goes to show that the present plan or mode of ascertaining the fact is superior to the arbitrary method of the Speaker making a count, because in this case the tellers, one coming from each side of the controverted question, not agreeing that the member who was in issue or in controversy was present, his name was stricken from the roll.

Mr. REED. And that was wrong, for he was here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). It shows that with a system of two tellers, one from one side and the other from the other, and when they must agree in the count, there is less liability of error.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And it confirms the statement made by the Speaker, that there can be no partisanship. Errors may occur, but they are less likely to occur, and there is less likely to be suspicion in connection with it, if a mistake is made in that way by tellers where two tellers are required and they must agree.

Mr. REED. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee for stating this fact, because that shows another error on the part of the tellers, for the gentleman from Iowa Mr. GEAR] came here next day and stated that he was present when one of the two contended that he was not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Maine is altogether mistaken.

Mr. REED. Governor GEAR was here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He made no statement at the time.

Mr. REED. He made a statement the next morning; and you will find it in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He made no statement at that time.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] made a statement, and that shows another mistake on the part of the tellers, and I thank the gentleman from Tennessee very much for bringing that out.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He stated the next morning that he was present.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. REED. And the tellers disagreed, so that there was another error.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order. The tellers disagreed, so that there was no report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. None at all.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. And therefore the statement of the gentleman from Iowa does not controvert the statement of the tellers, because there was no statement of the tellers.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from Iowa being present when the tellers did not report him, although present, shows an error caused by the system.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not require the tellers to report all gentlemen present, but only a sufficient number to constitute a quorum.

Mr. REED. But at that time the name of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr GEAR] was necessary.

Mr RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was not necessary.

Mr. REED. It turned out afterwards not to be necessary, but at that moment of dispute it was necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that case illustrates the beauty of this rule. Wherever the tellers disagree no report is made.

E. DOUGLASS.

Mr FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] has withdrawn his objection to the request made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY] a while ago for the consideration of a bill, and the Clerk will again report the title of that bill.

CUSTOMS DISTRICT, HARTFORD, CONN.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4452) adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, but no reports were presented.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order this day is devoted to the consideration of measures called up by the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call up the bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1893, as provides that "no private shall be reënlisted who has served ten years or more or who is over 35 years of age, except such as have already served as enlisted men for twenty years or upwards," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all enlistments in the Army shall be for the term of three years, and no soldier shall be again enlisted in the Army whose service during his last preceding term of enlistment has not been honest and faithful; and in time of peace no person who is not a citizen of the United States, or who can not speak, read, and write the English language, shall be enlisted in the Army for the first time: Provided, That the foregoing requirements as to enlistments in time of peace shall not apply to the enlistment of Indians.

SEC. 3. That the period within which soldiers may reënlist with the benefits conferred by sections 1282 and 1284 of the Revised Statutes, be, and the same is hereby, extended to three months; and hereafter every enlisted man in the Army, excepting general service clerks and general service messengers, shall be entitled to all the benefits conferred by sections 1281 and 1282 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That to entitle them to the additional pay authorized by section 1281, for men serving in the third, fourth, and fifth years, the service must have been continuous within the meaning of this section.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Page 2, lines 4 to 9 inclusive, strike out the words "and in time of peace no person who is not a citizen of the United States, or who can not speak, read, and write the English language, shall be enlisted in the Army for the first time: Provided, That the foregoing requirements as to enlistments in time of peace shall not apply to the enlistment of Indians," and insert the following: "And in time of peace no person (except an Indian) who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not made legal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, or who can not speak, read, and write the English language, or who is 30 years of age, shall be enlisted for the first enlistment in the Army: Provided, That any soldier discharged since January 27, 1893, who has been prevented from reënlisting by the operations of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1893, and who may hereafter enlist within three months from the date of the approval of this act, shall be considered to have reënlisted, and shall be entitled to receive while serving subsequent to such enlistment the same pay, service pay, and allowances as if he had reënlisted within thirty days from his latest discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SICKLES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5898) to amend section 4829 of the United States Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4829 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by the addition of the following words: "Provided, That surgeons, assistant surgeons, and other medical officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the several branches thereof, may be appointed from others than those who have been disabled in the military service of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, strike out the word "others," and insert the words "other soldiers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to understand the object of this bill. I would like to know what reason there is for going outside of disabled soldiers for these appointments. What reason is there for changing the rule which has hitherto prevailed?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I refer that question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, prima facie, every man in these homes is a disabled man and is in hospital, and in fact a great many of them are actually in hospital. So great a period of time has elapsed since the close of the war that the night service of the hospital, and some of the day service, ought now to be performed by younger men than those that can be employed under the existing rule.

In a hospital camp of four thousand men, with perhaps five hundred actual invalids on an average, it is impossible to get proper service for so large a number of disabled soldiers if you can only call upon men who were disabled or who served during the war. Hence, after a good deal of experience and consideration of the matter, the board of managers reached the conclusion that the time had come when they ought to be allowed to employ younger men for this work. That is the reason for this bill. If the gentleman will remember that most of the men who were in military service during the war must be now verging towards 60 years of age, and that the men in these homes are disabled men, I think he will see that there ought to be an infusion of new blood into the service.

Another point is that a man who was a surgeon in the service, or who was in the service and is now a surgeon, and who would leave his home to accept the little salary and the confined work that the board of managers can give him, is not a man who would have very much practice to abandon at home. In other words, we would not be able to get the highest class of medical talent for the salaries we are able to pay. The bill, therefore, from every aspect, judging by the experience we have had, is a bill in the interest of members of the homes. It is not, I will say to the gentleman, and it was not designed to be, for the benefit of any particular class of surgeons or any particular class of officials. It was intended to be and it is for the benefit of the patients.

Mr. BROSIUS. What is the salary paid now?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. The salaries range from $1,200 upward. Of course such salaries do not go very far toward securing veteran physicians.

Mr. MARSH. Will my colleague [Mr. BLACK of Illinois] allow me to ask him a question? I wish to know whether this bill, with the amendment——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no amendment reported by the committee. That is a mistake.

Mr. HULL. Was not that amendment pending at the time the bill was up before?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But unless offered again at this time, it is not before the House.

Mr. MARSH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Has there been an amendment adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair put to the House the question on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MARSH. That is my understanding—that the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That occured in the confusion, when it it was impossible to know what was going on. The committee reported no amendment. As soon as I could get to the desk, I saw that somebody had penciled on the bill an amendment which had misled the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was adopted, will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I object, unless we can have the privilege of offering that amendment.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported. We do not know anything about it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, after the word "from," strike out "others" and insert "other soldiers;" so as to read, "may be appointed from other soldiers than those who have been disabled in the military service of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this bill has been before the House heretofore—perhaps during the morning hour——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. By unanimous consent, perhaps. It never was in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The amendment, as the Chair understands, was offered then and discussed, and was left pending. It is not a committee amendment, as the Chair is now informed.

Mr. PICKLER. It was not offered as a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question in that way, supposing that it was a committee amendment. Without objection, the vote by which this was adopted as a committee amendment will be reconsidered.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether we shall have the opportunity to offer the amendment again?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The amendment was adopted in the confusion and under a clear misapprehension. The statement was made by the Chair that it was a committee amendment when in fact it was not.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, my question is whether we shall have an opportunity to submit that amendment—whether the committee will allow the amendment to be offered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can offer the amendment without leave of the committee.

Mr. HULL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: If when this bill was heretofore considered this amendment was pending, was considered by the House, and went over with the bill, would it not come up of itself when the bill comes up?

The SPEAKER. The trouble is that the Chair thought it was a committee amendment, and submitted it as such to the House.

Mr. HULL. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman understands, it very often happens that the House agrees to committee amendments as a matter of course.

Mr. SICKLES. This is a mere informality.

The SPEAKER. But the technical point is made. The gentleman from Ohio then moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw my objection, as the Chair misunderstood the matter.

Mr. SICKLES. If it is a good amendment, let it stand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is not a good amendment. It is an amendment which I wish to oppose if it should become pending again.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no objection to the amendment being offered and considered for a limited time.

The SPEAKER. Then without objection the vote by which the amendment, was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Chair will recognize some gentleman to offer the amendment.

Mr. MARSH. I offer the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers the amendment which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, after the word "from," strike out "others" and insert "other soldiers;" so as to read, "may be appointed from other soldiers than those who have been disabled in the military service of the United States."

Mr. GROSVENOR. My suggestion is that the word "soldiers" probably ought not to be there. If the purpose of the committee is to enable the managers of these homes to secure the services of medical gentlemen other than disabled soldiers, I am in favor of the proposition.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The purpose is to enable them to secure the services of men of ability, capable of taking care of the soldiers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But why say "other soldiers?" Why not say "others," omitting the word "soldiers?"

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The bill reads "others."

Mr. GROSVENOR. But it makes a limitation.

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the language which he desires to have in the bill would allow the employment of anybody, whether he had been in the service or not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, I am perfectly willing. The time is coming very rapidly when we can not limit the medical service of these soldiers' homes to men who have served in the Army. Of the surgeons now living who served in the Army, most of them have either become wealthy by their practice or else they are entirely incapacitated for active professional duty. Why not leave this matter to the discretion of the managers of the homes, that they may employ whomsoever they please, regardless of whether the person employed was a soldier or not.

Mr. MARSH. That is exactly what I want to prevent them from doing.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then we differ on that.

Mr. MARSH. Exactly.

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to say that whenever it becomes necessary to go outside of the men who served in the Army in order to obtain physicians for the soldiers' homes I am willing it shall be done, but I am not willing to do so until it is necessary.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Who is the best judge as to whether it is necessary—the board of managers, who have charge of these men, who see their condition day after day, or the representative from South Dakota?

Mr. PICKLER. I have been trying for ten minutes to have some member of the committee give us some reason why this change of the law should be made. The gentleman from Illinois, as I understood him, has said there is no particular reason. I want to know whether the time has come when we can no longer find men who were in the Army to act as surgeons at these homes. If that time has come I am willing to vote for this bill, but I want to be satisfied that the time has come.

During this Congress there have been several bills before the Committee on Civil Service Reform proposing that in appointments to office preference be given to soldiers who have been discharged from the Army, whether they were discharged on account of disability incurred in the service or not. But we have been unable to obtain consideration of such a measure, which would enlarge the discretion of appointing officers in the selection of soldiers for offices which they are competent to fill. This bill as now proposed seems to impose a further restriction.

I say again, if the time has come when we can not obtain surgeons for our soldiers' homes from men who have served in the Army, we will go outside of that service; but if the time has not come, I am opposed to this bill. I object to this measure until some good reason is shown for its passage.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I am not willing that we shall go outside to make these selections from any person who may offer, if we can find men who were the army comrades of these old soldiers, and who are competent to act as their physicians.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Neither am I.

Mr. PICKLER. I so understood the gentleman. I do not see why we should not have some showing as to the necessity of this legislation. As I have said before, ex-soldiers are preferred under our statutes for offices which they are competent to fill, if they were discharged from the service on account of disabilities which were incurred in it.

I repeat that we have had during this Congress several bills before the Committee on Civil Service Reform, providing that ex-soldiers shall be preferred for offices they are competent to fill whether they have been discharged from the military service on account of disability or not. But we have thus far been unable to get any report or consideration upon that bill from that committee which looks to enlarging the preference for ex-soldiers in official appointments. Now I am opposed to introducing further restrictions, unless some good reason can be shown. I would like to hear from the committee on this subject, and to know what are the facts upon which they base their report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the House fully recognizes the great solicitude of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] for the Union soldier; but I hope it will not be understood that nobody besides my distinguished friend is giving attention to the soldier.

The members of the Committee on Military Affairs have as strong reasons to be interested in the welfare of the soldiers as have those gentlemen who are not members of that committee; and they have made this recommendation to the House in the interest of the welfare, comfort, and health of the soldiers in the national homes after a full and careful examination of the subject. It is not easy—in some cases, indeed, it does not seem possible—to obtain the medical attendance required in these homes for the soldiers because of the requirements of the present law. We simply authorize the managers of the homes to employ other physicians than those who have been in the military service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does not the term "other soldiers" limit the discretion of the management of those homes to some kind of soldier?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then would not such a construction lead possibly to the exclusion of the loyal son of a Union soldier for appointment to a position as medical officer in one of these homes, while at the same time it might permit the son of a rebel soldier to fill such position?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio requires two answers. First, the amendment to which he objects is not a part of the bill as reported by the committee, but is an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH].

The further question, as to whether this would admit a man to practice in a soldiers' home who served in the war on the Southern side, I do not think could have any force, because they have never been recognized by Congress as soldiers in the sense in which the word is used in this bill, and officially those who also served in the Southern army were not recognized as entitled to recognition as soldiers. That term refers alone to the soldiers who served in the Union Army; and the rebel soldiers can not be embraced under the provisions of the present law. Those, however, who served in the regular or volunteer Army only are included.

Mr. PICKLER. If your bill passes is it not true that you may select a soldier from the rebel army? If that is the purpose of the bill, if you mean to go entirely outside of the Union Army, I do not know that I would have any special objection to that feature; but——

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Oh, well, that is an alarmed state of feeling that has no justification in the present instance.

Mr. PICKLER. There is no feeling of alarm about it, but I am unwilling to concede away the rights of the Union soldiers, as I have seen the gentleman from New York ready to do here. I am not willing to be so accommodating as you are.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is entitled to his opinion. The whole question here presented has been fairly stated and the objections made known, and I think it quite time that we should have a vote on the amendment and on the bill. The amendment I do not deem necessary to accomplish the object desired, and the bill may well be passed without it.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from New York has a little time remaining, I believe, and I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the evidence the committee have that the time has come when we should go outside of the soldiers for this service?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It is in evidence from the boards of managers of the homes themselves.

Mr. PICKLER. What homes?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The soldiers' homes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The National Home for Disabled Volunteers.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers have so stated.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. It was stated in the hearing before the Committee on Appropriations on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. There is no question of the fact.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The managers of the national homes have so reported to the committee.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. And we acted upon their report.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to have that communication read if it is in evidence before the committee.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I do not know whether it was printed or not. We used it in the consideration of this measure before the committee. You must take something on the credibility of the committee itself. They have given a thorough consideration to the matter.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH].

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks that I desire to submit in favor of the amendment I have offered, but first I desire the Clerk to read sections 4829 and 4830 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to which sections this bill is a proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4829. The officers of the National Home shall consist of a governor, a deputy governor, a secretary, and a treasurer, and such other officers as the managers may deem necessary. They shall be appointed from disabled officers who served as mentioned in the following section; and they may be appointed and removed from time to time, as the interests of the institution may require, by the board of managers.

SEC. 4830. The board of managers shall have authority to procure from time to time, at suitable places, sites for military homes for all persons serving in the Army of the United States at any time in the war of the rebellion, not otherwise provided for, who have been or may be disqualified for procuring their own support by reason of wounds received or sickness contracted while in the line of their duty during the rebellion; and to have the necessary buildings erected, having due regard to the health of location, facility of access, and capacity to accommodate the persons entitled to the benefits thereof.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, the object and purpose of the law just read was to provide the officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunter Soldiers from those who were in the war of the rebellion. The design is to surround them with old soldiers—with their old comrades. Now, it is claimed that the soldiers have become so aged and decrepit that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to secure medical attendance—medical officers—in these homes from the ranks of the volunteer army. I wish to say that that assumption is in my judgment entirely unfounded. I think that my friend and colleague, both on the committee and from my State, is entirely mistaken when he assumes that gentlemen of the medical profession who served in the army are too old and decrepit for this service at the national homes. I can count in every county in my district from a half dozen up to a dozen active practicing physicians who served during the war.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do you know of one who would give up his practice——

Mr. MARSH (continuing). Men all over this country, who would be very glad of an opportunity to serve their country as surgeons in these institutions. Take the soldiers' home at Quincy, Ill., in my district. There is large competition among the physicians who were in the service for positions there in that home. The most successful physicians in the region of country where I live are gentlemen who performed service in the volunteer army. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that the most of them are 60 years of age. When my friend, Gen. BLACK, shall have arrived at that period, he will but be in the prime of life, in the vigor of his manhood.

There are very few men in this country who break down at 60, and especially is that the case in the learned professions, one of which is the medical profession.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope that is all true, but at the same time neither my friend nor I would want to turn out at all hours of the night to attend sick calls in hospitals of five hundred men at the age of 60 years. That is the situation. Now, my friend will pardon me for one suggestion, and then I will take my seat. That is, that the Board and the committee had no earthly idea of doing anything except to furnish the men themselves, in the barracks, with young, strong, and good attendants. We did not think that this bill ought to be drawn in the interest of surgeons alone, but that it ought to be drawn in the interest of the soldiers and patients.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I think the existing law is in the interest of the soldier; I think it is in the interest of the soldier and consults his interest, of all others, when it provides officers from the ranks of the army in which he served, men who can sympathize with him as no man outside can sympathize. And when my friend [Mr. BLACK] charges that medical gentlemen who have arrived at the age of 60 are thereby incapacitated to perform the duties required of them, I think he is greatly mistaken. I have no charge to make against the object and purpose that this National Board had in making this recommendation, if they made it. If the National Board have made such a recommendation I have never seen it, and I ask my colleague now if that Board, in its official capacity, has made any such recommendation?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. No, it was the general judgment of the board——

Mr. MARSH. Then Mr. Speaker, I want this House to understand——

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Wait until I finish my answer.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Wait until the answer is given.

Mr. MARSH (continuing). That that board has not in its official capacity made any such recommendation. I know that one distinguished gentleman on this board, my colleague, recommended it, but there is no official information here that the board recommended it. And I want to say, gentlemen, in the absence of that recommendation, in the absence of that official action on the part of that board, this House, in my humble opinion, would not be justified in holding that the volunteer medical men who have arrived at the age of 55 or 60 are incapable of performing their duties here.

Now, I want to say one word more in the interest of the soldier. I want to say that if I was an inmate of one of those homes, I would rather see my friend and comrade, Gen. BLACK, an officer there than some gentleman who had not served in the Army. I would rather see that institution officered, from the head of it to the foot of it, by comrades of mine in the Army, because, Mr. Speaker, there is a community of feeling that permeates from one soldier to another that is not to be found elsewhere; and they will feel better, they will feel happier, they will feel that they are surrounded by their friends.

I want to say here that the pretext that these gentlemen have become so old that they are incapable of performing the duties of surgeons and physicians in those institutions is not well taken. I hope that my amendment will prevail, because while the present law compels them to select from disabled soldiers, this amendment of mine will enable them to select from soldiers who are not disabled, and the object that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] has in view will be accomplished.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the showing before the Military Committee was to the extent only that it was impossible now to get good medical attendants from those who were disabled in the service, and that showing, Mr. Speaker, was confined, I think, almost exclusively to the statement of our colleague on the committee [Mr. BLACK]. I have never felt like challenging his statement, but I am not willing to let the statement of my colleague from New York [Mr. CURTIS] pass unchallenged that the members of the committee who served in the Union Army are practically unanimous in favor of this bill as originally reported from the committee. I believe the time has come when we should extend the field of selection, and I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. MARSH], makes the extension sufficient to meet the present necessities of these soldiers' homes.

We have all over this country many gentlemen who served in the Union Army who were mere boys when they came out at the close of the war.

Mr. PICKLER. Hospital stewards.

Mr. HULL. Some of them got their first lessons in medicine on the medical corps, serving as hospital stewards of their regiments. Coming out of the Army before attaining their majority, they finished their study of medicine and became active practitioners, and are now in the prime of life and as competent to discharge the duties of surgeons of these homes as any men in the United States, whether they were in the Army or not.

I am anxious to see this amendment adopted, so as to extend the selection in such a manner as to include that class of men. I have in my district, and I have no doubt the same is true as to the majority of the districts in the country, especially in the North, men who were assistant surgeons who are not any older to-day than I am, and I still feel able for duty. They are competent, able, and willing. They would be glad to accept these places; and if you can not get good medical attendance at the salaries now provided—and I understand that one of the contentions is that good physicians will not go there at present salaries—the Board of Managers is not doing its duty if it does not increase the salaries of these surgeons so as to get these old volunteers the very best of medical attendance.

I do not see why my friends on the committee, and especially the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK], oppose this amendment. It extends it to thousands of additional surgeons, men who are not too old, who are in the prime of life, men who have a community of feeling and interest with these old soldiers in the homes, and I hope that in this session we will not break down the bars entirely. Let us at this session at least preserve some of the original features of the bill. When the time comes when these surgeons that I refer to are too old to give these men good attention it will be time enough to throw the matter open to the competition of the medical profession of the United States.

But, Mr. Speaker, not one word of evidence has been submitted to the committee, not one word of evidence has been submitted to this House, that if this amendment of my colleague from Illinois were adopted the Board of Managers could not get all the service they need from competent physicians of this country to-day.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman, or some member of the committee, let us know how many of these surgeons are employed in the homes of the United States.

Mr. HULL. I can not give the gentleman that information. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] ought to be able to answer that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is with some degree of diffidence that I disagree with the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs touching the proposed legislation, and for the following reasons: The law founding the volunteer homes provided that the officials of the homes, in section 4829 and subsequent sections, should be appointed from officers who had served in the Army. Yes, from disabled officers, not all the officers, but disabled officers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. During the last Congress I introduced and had passed a bill which provides that these salaries may be offered to soldiers and enlisted men.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly; I am coming to that in a minute. I was speaking of the law as it originally passed—that these appointments for officering this great work should be from the disabled officers of the Army. The years have rolled around, and in apt time, under the lead of the gentleman from Ohio, that law was amended so as to make the appointment from officers and enlisted men in the late war whether they were disabled or not.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not only officers, but all honorably discharged soldiers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly. I am saying, if the gentleman will allow me, it was broadened so as to include all officers. Aye, more, it was broadened so as to include all soldiers, and I believe that includes all military men. Now, then, I will say at once in the administration of this great work the preference ought to be given to these military men if they can be found who are competent to hold these places.

Right in that connection I will say that this Board in control of the soldiers' homes is not infallible. I think it is a very good Board. I think the men composing it are men of high character, but they do not know all the men who were in the service, and all of them do not know all the law that pertains to this subject. The president of that Board stated during an investigation at this session of Congress that he had in substance permitted for a long time an incompetent treasurer to remain in service at the Togus branch because he could not find a competent man who was an officer and disabled in the service, not knowing that the law had been amended so that he was free to draw on this whole million of men for one to fill that lucrative position. Now, when the Committee on Military Affairs comes here and proposes to amend the law so as to allow the Board to draw upon surgeons everywhere in the United States for this service, I do not believe it is apt, and I do not believe it is necessary, because the amendment of my colleague from Illinois, if adopted, permits them to call upon any surgeon who served in the Army, in fact the law now allows it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should like a little more time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The law in that form would and does enable the board to call upon any man out of this million who is a surgeon. Many who served in the Army acquired their profession after they were mustered out, but many of them were surgeons in the Army and many were assistant surgeons, and, from my own knowledge in my own section, I believe that there are hundreds if not thousands of surgeons now in practice who are perfectly competent to fill these positions, men who saw service in the late war, and I think they ought to have the preference.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. My colleague is proceeding in his argument upon this bill, as I understand, upon the idea that the surgeons who were in the service, or the soldiers now surgeons who were in the service during the late war, are entitled to a preference?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Now, the committee proceeded upon the idea that this vast army of invalid men had a right to the freshest, ablest, brightest medical service that could be obtained, and it was for that reason, and not from any desire to sacrifice any of the rights of the veteran soldiers, that the bill was brought in. One thing further—the passage of this bill will simply enable the board to make its selection from all surgeons, but will not destroy, remove, or affect the preference to which the veteran soldier is entitled under the law as it stands.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have not indulged in any criticisms upon the motives of this committee or of any member of it in recommending this legislation, and do not now; but I do say again that I believe this recommendation is ill conceived.

My colleague says that the inmates of these homes are entitled to the freshest and best talent that can be secured for this service. I grant him that. They ought to have the best service of the best talent that can be secured for the money. But it is perfectly evident that you can not get Dr. Ford Thompson of this city, or any other great specialist whose practice is worth ten thousand, twenty thousand, or thirty thousand dollars a year, to accept one of these places, which pays about $2,000 a year and quarters.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. From $1,200 up.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, on an average, about $2,000 a year and quarters, as I understand. Now, I repeat, it is evident that you can not get great specialists to serve for that compensation, but you may take men that my colleague and I both know, men like Dr. M. S. Brown, like Dr. Moore, of my own town, like Dr. Pierce, like Dr. Leavitt, like our mutual friend, Dr. Barton, or Dr. Jones, the best medical talent—I will not say the best, but equal to any medical talent in my country—men who saw service in the late war—and many of them would jump at the chance of taking one of these positions at $2,000 a year and quarters.

I undertake to say that those men with their practical experience, are worth a regiment of callow youth graduated every year from the medical colleges; and in my opinion the young man who is without experience would be the one who, being acquainted with the president or the executive committee of the Board of Managers, would receive this employment, which ought to be given to the veteran surgeons who are their superiors from their practical professional work for this service. Therefore I would keep the law as it is and as it was amended and broadened in the last Congress under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio, so as to permit the managers to call upon any surgeon in the United States who saw service in the late war, and my word for it, those men would seek these places and there would be a score of competent applicants for every place to be filled, because it is true that in the present condition of the country, as it has been for ten years past and as it will be for ten years to come, these are places greatly to be desired, and which would be better filled by this class of talent than by newly-graduated medical students.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GARRETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it is necessary that action be taken on this resolution now, because the ten days during which the bill has been in the hands of the President are about to expire. The Senate desires to recall this bill; and if there be no objection the resolution will be considered.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS, NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman last on the floor [Mr. CANNON of Illinois] has certainly introduced into this discussion an element of injustice by the insinuation which he has made that this bill is being presented and urged in order to allow the president of the Board of Managers or some member of the Board to appoint favorites—"callow youths" instead of veterans.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I repel the insinuation. There is not a scintilla of proof, not a word in the history of the Board, not an intimation in all that it has ever done that justifies such an insinuation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I deny absolutely that such a purpose underlies this bill.

Now, as for the gentleman's talk about the surgeons to be found in the neighborhood where he and I reside, that may be all true. But the point with this committee is, not that a certain class of surgeons shall continue to be favored, but that the veteran soldiers in the homes shall have the best possible attendance at any and all times.

In response to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] I will say that in the judgment of the Board the time has come when it is desirable that the list from whom the boards may choose medical attendants to wait upon the sick veterans should be widened.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. One moment, please. That time has come and has passed for years. We have absolutely been hampered by the provisions of the law which we seek to have changed, in the choice that we believe we ought to be allowed to make for the benefit of the veterans themselves. I will not deny that there are in the United States scores and perhaps thousands of men who were my comrades and the gentleman's comrades who are abundantly able to fill these offices, but to the honor of the soldier I say that the men who were comrades of ours and who are fit to exercise the duties of this position are most of them enjoying such practice they can not, on account of financial considerations, turn away from their homes and seek this new employment.

The opposition to this bill is bottomed upon the idea that we ought to prefer and favor a particular class of surgeons. The support of the bill rests on the ground that the veteran soldiers of the Republic should have the best medical attendance that can be given them in their declining days. Gentlemen, the committee on this point are strenuous. A few words of explanation I think will be sufficient to establish in the mind of every man the wisdom of the proposed change. In the first place it has been thirty-three years since the outbreak of the war. The men who were surgeons in the war, or who having been in the war have since become surgeons, are men older by far on the average than the majority of this House.

To expect those men to turn out as they would have to do if the law is enforced at present—to expect that men who on the average are older than you and I shall be compelled to attend to the wants and necessities of the hospitals and the camp at all hours from noon until noon again, is not reasonable. The Board has found that in order to give the best service the law should be ameliorated; and to put it in a fashion which will meet the statements made on the other side, the sons of these old men should now be permitted to become their attendants, and the generation that furnishes the support should also furnish the surgeons to attend upon these veterans. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from South Dakota to agree that if the time has come when this change ought to be made they will agree to it.

I beg to assure those gentlemen that in the judgment of the board, who earnestly support this bill, who have no personal interest in it but desire only the best results, the time has come when with the limited salaries which our appropriation allows—not more than $1,200 in some cases, $1,500 in others, and as high as $2,000 in others—must pass beyond the preferred class designated in the statutes—must have the whole of the medical knowledge and surgical skill of America to draw from, preserving the preference given by the law to those who were actually in the service.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. As I understand it, there is nothing in this bill contrary to the idea that the board of managers of the homes if they can not first find suitable medical assistants among those who served in the Army may then have the privilege of going outside?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Nothing whatever. The preference is always given to the soldier.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman how many soldiers who are assistant surgeons are employed now or required for these homes?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. About twenty now are required, who are absolutely necessary, and the necessities of the service are steadily increasing. In addition to that let me say to the gentleman that there are the nurses, hospital stewards, and others, and the demand is steadily increasing. The average in the hospitals now is about two hundred and fifty men in each of the seven branches.

Let me assure the gentleman that the experience of the past proves conclusively that the time has come when we must take in new employés—that we must have another field to select from—and I take the case, as an illustration, of the surgeon of the gentleman's [Mr. PICKLER'S] own regiment. He was a man of mature years. If he was worth anything at all after he left the Army he acquired a practice, and would probably be unwilling to go into a soldiers' home at the present compensation, unless he was a man who was superannuated in his profession and entirely incompetent to perform the duties which would be required of him there.

Mr. PICKLER. He has gone over the river.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. He has gone over the river. Very well. Then take the assistant surgeon; is he still in the land of the living?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; I think he is. The last I heard of him he was.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Where is he located?

Mr. PICKLER. At Keokuk, Iowa.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. What was his name?

Mr. PICKLER. Maxwell.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Do you know whether he is a successful physician?

Mr. PICKLER. Not personally, but I have always heard so.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Do you know the extent of his practice?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; I do not. I understand it is good.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Do you know if he could be induced——

Mr. PICKLER. Let me say to the gentleman that I know he was a fine surgeon, and rendered active and efficient service in the regiment. He filled the position with honor to himself and satisfaction to the men.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Do you know if he could be induced to accept one of these positions in the homes?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; I do not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "Donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6720) providing for the resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska., asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. ALLEN, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

A bill (H. R. 236) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to soldiers' homes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7475) authorizing Commander C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of Spain;

A bill (H. R. 6424) to authorize Rear-Admiral John G. Walker and Surgeon-General J. Rufus Tryon, of the United States Navy, to accept the decorations of the "Busto del Libertador" of the third class from the President of Venezuela;

A bill (H. R. 5525) authorizing John E. Johnson and others to accept medals of honor and diplomas from the Government of Spain;

A bill (H. R. 4734) to authorize the Secretary of State to accept for the United States of America a painting by G. F. Watts, Royal Academician, entitled "Love and Life;" and Joint resolution (H. Res. 126) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the meetings of the International Geodetic Association.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2024) authorizing additional compensation to the assistant commissioners of the industrial exhibition held at Melbourne, Australia;

A bill (S. 1778) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; and

A bill (S. 1211) for the relief of Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson, of the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.; and

A bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson.

MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS, NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, believing that this bill would be conducive to the good of the inmates of the soldiers' homes throughout the country, instead of placing them under the medical charge of a number of old and disabled heroes who would be unable to perform the duties necessarily required of them, I was in favor of the bill. But I see that there is such a difference of opinion on the floor, especially among the particular friends of the soldiers, that I think perhaps the bill may as well be withdrawn; but before doing so I wish to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in that two minutes I want to say that if my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BLACK], it seems to me, had been as courteous as I should have been to him under similar circumstances, he would have yielded to me for a correction when he misstated what I had said in reference to the personnel of the trustees of the soldiers' homes.

I proceed now to restate, and in restating deny that I imputed to the personnel of the governors of the homes selfish motives in the administration of this law as it is now, or as it will be amended if this act should pass. I have said, and I repeat, that men are apt in performing their official duties to prefer those who are about them: and to show that even the governors of the homes, were not infallible, I called the attention of the House to the fact, which the records of the House will show, namely, that the governor of the Board, or the president of the Board, Gen. Franklin, had stated during this Congress that an incompetent treasurer was continued at Togus because of the provision of the law that disabled officers alone could hold the places, while in fact the law permitted any one of the million men, survivors of the late war, to receive the appointment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would like to have a minute more.

A MEMBER. Let us have a vote. We have had talking enough.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, the gentleman from Ohio will be more generous than the suggestion that is made by my colleague.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not resist the gentleman and yield to him an additional minute.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, then, that is his statement, and presumably the statement of the Board, because he acts for the Board—that they did not know the law; so it is not infallible.

I state again my belief, Mr. Chairman, to be that from the thousands of men who had army service these places that offer $2,000 a year or more can be filled, and better from that class of men than from the newly-graduated students. "Great medical ability!" you say. Well, you could not get it for $2,000 a year. Your Thompsons, and other experts, are not going to take these places. So you will be forced to take the newly-graduated students, or men who in civil life have demonstrated their ability to make a failure or have demonstrated the fact that they can not make a success. You had better at this time stick to the law with the amendment suggested by my colleague.

Mr. MARSH. Which if adopted will leave the law as it now is.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I had thought of withdrawing the bill, but I will ask a vote on the amendment first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH].

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I should like to have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MARSH, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MAHON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 71.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. SICKLES. I hope the gentleman will not press the point of no quorum. I have an amendment which I hope will be satisfactory.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

SECTION 4833, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (H. R. 6050) to amend section 4833, Revised Statutes, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 4833 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4833. The Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are authorized to aid persons who are entitled to its benefits by outdoor relief, in such manner and to such extent as they may deem proper, but such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the Home: Provided, That in the event that buildings at any branch of the Home shall be destroyed by fire or rendered unfit for habitation because of pestilence or by the elements, then and in that event the Board of Managers shall have authority to remove the members of said branch so afflicted or destroyed to any other branch not so affected, and to do this, they may use any funds appropriated for the home, notwithstanding they may have been specifically appropriated for other purposes, to the extent that such funds shall be necessary to effect such a transfer and the maintenance and support thereafter of said members so transferred, and shall report their doings therein to the Congress and their expenditures as in other cases of expenditures: Provided further, That the appropriations for any fiscal year shall not be exceeded."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

The report (by Mr. BLACK of Illinois) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6060) to amend section 4833, Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, submit the following report:

The bill submitted herewith provides that in the event of the buildings at any branch (of which there are seven, located at various points in the United States) being rendered unusable by fire, the elements, or pestilence, that then the Board of Managers for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers may change the members of said branch, so rendered unusable, to other branches and may use any moneys appropriated for the use of the Home for the transportation and support of said members.

Existing law would not allow this use of the appropriations.

The bill does not increase expenditures; it only makes available for an emergency funds already appropriated.

Within the past winter two fires have occurred, one in the branch at Santa Monica, Cal., one at the branch at Warsaw, Ind., and each, fortunately, of limited damage. But they accentuate the necessity for the act proposed. The Board of Managers would be without power under existing law to transport the members rendered homeless by such a calamity to another branch or to support them when transferred. Therefore the Committee on Military Affairs reports the bill and ask that it may pass.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. In the second line of the fourth paragraph of the report occur the words "at the branch at Warsaw, Ind." That should be "Marion, Ind."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. No, it is a correction in the report.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand exactly what is the object of this bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The object is to authorize the managers, in case of fire, to use certain funds to take care of the people who are turned out of doors.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MAJ. GEN. GEORGE S. GREENE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (S. 1513) for the relief of Maj. Gen. George S. Greene. There is a House bill identical in terms, which has been favorably reported. I ask to take up the Senate bill, which is on the Speaker's table, and that the corresponding House bill be ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks to substitute the Senate bill for the corresponding House bill. In the absence of objection, this will be ordered, and the House bill will be ordered to lie on the table.

There was no objection.

The bill S. 1513 was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George S. Greene, late brigadier and brevet major-general United States Volunteers, to the rank of first lieutenant of artillery in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no pension shall be paid to the said George S. Greene, but this proviso shall be no bar to any claims for pension that the widow or children or other heirs of said George S. Greene may have after his decease.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SCHOONER HENRY R. TILTON.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (S. 901) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry R. Tilton, and of personal effects thereon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain as soon as practicable what was the reasonable value of the schooner Henry R. Tilton and the proportion thereof belonging to each of her several owners at the time she was sunk by a deflected projectile from a gun on the United States proving grounds at Sandy Hook on or about the 9th day of July, 1892; and he shall, in like manner, ascertain what was the reasonable value of the personal effects of each of the several officers and sailors on the said schooner at the time of her sinking as aforesaid; and he shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury the several amounts so ascertained; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owners of the said schooner the value thereof so ascertained and reported as herein prescribed: Provided, That the aggregate amount so reported as the value of said schooner does not exceed $10,000, less the amount of the net proceeds of the sale of the schooner; and he shall pay to the officers and crew of said schooner the several sums so ascertained to have been the value of their personal effects lost: Provided, That the aggregate of the said several sums shall not exceed $1,000: Provided further, That all and each of said several amounts shall be received by the persons herein described in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States on account of the loss of the said schooner Henry R. Tilton.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, that bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOUD. I raise the question of consideration against this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. LOUD. I desire to raise the question of consideration against this bill, and make the point of order that it is a bill that should have come from the Committee on Claims. It has no business to be reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to be heard on that point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point raised by the gentleman from California?

Mr. LOUD. That this bill should have come from the Committee on Claims. It is really a private claim.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, this claim results from a transaction of the Army at a very recent date, and therefore it is quite as proper that it should be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs as by the Committee on Claims. It is not a war claim. It is not a claim that is disconnected from the actual transactions of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report clause 4 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker ruled upon this question at the beginning of the present session. Under that ruling, and in harmony with it, the Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from California.

EUGENE WELLS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the next bill that the committee directs me to call up is the bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Eugene Wells.

The bill was read.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the bill ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was informed that the bill had just been read in the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that, but it ought to be read in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let the bill be read again.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Eugene Wells, late captain Twelfth Infantry and second lieutenant First Artillery, United States Army.

Be it enacted etc., That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Eugene Wells, late captain Twelfth Infantry and second lieutenant First Artillery, a second lieutenant of artillery in the Army of the United States; and when so appointed he shall be placed upon the list of retired officers of the Army, unlimited, on account of disabilities incurred in service during the war of the rebellion, as shown by the reports of the boards of medical examiners, United States Pension Bureau, and which disabilities would have entitled him to retirement had he remained in the Army, his rank and pay to date from his appointment and retirement under this act.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Missouri as he needs.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make this request of the members present—that they listen to the report in this case. I know that there exists on some sides opposition to bills restoring officers to the Army who for any cause have quit the service; but this is a case not founded upon any sentimentality or any sympathy or any gush. It is not intended to do anyone a favor. It is to do an act of simple justice; and I venture the assertion that not a single member of this House can read this case as I have read it, and know this case as I have known it for the last twenty years without making up his mind at once in regard to its absolute justice and merit.

There have been six favorable reports made by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and House. There have been two favorable reports made in this case by the Senate; one by Senator COCKRELL, a distinguished, able, careful, painstaking Senator, who always examines these cases from the standpoint of the Government, a man who served in the Confederate army with great bravery and distinction, and is familiar with military service and with the requisites of a good soldier. The other report was made in the Senate by Senator MANDERSON, a Republican, who served with equal distinction and honor in the Federal Army.

A report has been made by my distinguished colleague [Mr. HULL], a Republican serving upon the Committee on Military Affairs, himself a soldier; and in the Forty-eighth Congress, then a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I examined this case carefully and made a report upon it. All I ask in the world is that the members of this House shall listen to the report attentively and decide the case upon its merits. If they will do this, I feel assured that there will not be a single vote against it. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question before the reading of the report commences?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. How long is it since this man has been out of the army?

Mr. MORGAN. Since 1877.

Mr. KILGORE. Was he discharged from the service?

Mr. MORGAN. He was tried by court-martial on charges. I wish to be perfectly frank with the gentleman. He was charged with various offenses against military law and tried upon them. He was acquitted upon every charge except the single one of intoxication. Upon that charge every enlisted man and some of the officers who served with the command at the time during the riots testified that he was not intoxicated, while other officers testified that they thought he was.

Now, let me go a little further. The court-martial found him guilty upon that, and they unanimously recommended him to executive clemency. The proceedings and findings were taken to President Hayes for his approval, but this unanimous recommendation of the court-martial was entirely overlooked by the President. He was not aware of its existence. There is no question about that, for Senator COCKRELL so states in his official report to the Senate in the Forty-seventh Congress. President Hayes made the statement to Senator Armstrong and others, that he had never seen this recommendation to executive clemency when he approved the sentence, and it was the first case where the full sentence was executed where there was such a recommendation to clemency.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that the judgment of the court was that this man be cashiered and dismissed from the service.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. And I understand also that President Hayes refused to restore him.

Mr. MORGAN. The President could not reappoint him without the authority of Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, I can not understand how the papers relating to the court-martial and the judgment of the court failed to reach the President when it was necessary for him to pass upon them.

Mr. MORGAN. He did pass upon the papers, but he overlooked the recommendation to clemency.

Mr. KILGORE. Did not that recommendation go with the papers?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; I presume so.

Mr. SICKLES. But the President stated that he never saw it.

Mr. KILGORE. What is the authority for that statement?

Mr. SICKLES. Senator COCKRELL.

Mr. KILGORE. Did the President put on record any such statement?

Mr. MORGAN. Senator COCKRELL states the fact.

Mr. KILGORE. He states, I suppose, that he is informed and believes so?

Mr. MORGAN. No; he says it is so. It often happens that a brief of such cases is submitted to the President instead of the full record.

Mr. KILGORE. Was there not a charge of insubordination made against this man?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; and he was acquitted on that charge.

Mr. KILGORE. Where do those facts appear?

Mr. MORGAN. We had them before the Committee on Military Affairs. I have gone over the entire testimony in the trial of the case by court-martial.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, they ought to be before the House when we are asked to reverse the action of this court.

Mr. MORGAN. You do not have to take the word of the present Military Committee; you have the word of six other Military Committees of the House and the Senate for that fact.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is set forth in the report.

Mr. SICKLES. Let me read the gentleman the statement of the report on that point, which is very brief.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well.

Mr. SICKLES (reading):

In a report made by Senator COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate in the Forty-seventh Congress, he presents the superior merits of this case in a few words. He said:

"The President did not know of the recommendation for clemency when he approved the sentence. This is about the only case where such a unanimous recommendation by all the members of the court-martial was totally overlooked, and was, therefore, wholly disregarded."

And in a speech made in support of the bill of Mr. Wells, Senator COCKRELL made use of the following emphatic language:

"The unanimous recommendation of the court-martial, had it been known to the President, would have received his favorable sanction, and the sentence would not have been approved. There is conclusive evidence of that."

The evidence is not set forth in detail in the report; but when Senator COCKRELL says there is conclusive evidence of a fact, I think that is a very good ground to go upon.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that, and I would be very much inclined to accept any statement made by Senator COCKRELL as almost conclusive if he made it of his own knowledge, because he is mighty straight goods [laughter]; but I am not inclined to accept anybody's statement as to the policy of enlarging this list of retired officers.

You put a man on that list a while ago, and I made no objection, because it was stated here that he was 130 or 140 years old. [Laughter.]

Mr. SICKLES. Ninety-four—a century plant, born with the century.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I was not very far wrong about his age.

Mr. MORGAN. We do not propose by this bill to extend the retired list. We simply propose to do an act of justice to this man, to allow him to be reappointed to the Army, and if, in view of his present age and condition, he goes upon the retired list, that fact ought not to be used to prejudice his case where he asks for simple justice.

Mr. KILGORE. Where does he live?

Mr. MORGAN. He lives in Missouri. He is a son of the old Federal judge, Robert W. Wells, who was appointed by Andrew Jackson, and was the best judge we ever had in Missouri.

Mr. KILGORE. What is his vocation?

Mr. MORGAN. He was employed in the civil service of the Government for many years, I think, and is now engaged, as far as health will permit, in private vocation.

Mr. KILGORE. Is he a graduate of West Point?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir. He was appointed from civil life or the volunteer service. He is a soldier who was recommended for gallantry in the field by such men as Slocum, Hancock, Butterfield, and Stannard.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does this bill authorize his appointment as captain?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; it simply authorizes the President to appoint him a second lieutenant. It does not propose at all to retire him as captain; it simply proposes to authorize his appointment to the position that he lost through inadvertence or mistake of President Hayes. Senator COCKRELL stated this in a report to the United States Senate in the lifetime of President Hayes, in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to make a further inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri. I understand that the purpose of this bill is to remove this charge against this man, to set aside this judgment, and to authorize the President to appoint him to the same position in the Army that he held when he was cashiered. Is that the purpose?

Mr. MORGAN. That is it.

Mr. KILGORE. How old a man is he?

Mr. MORGAN. Over 50 years of age.

Mr. KILGORE. What effect will this bill have on men who have been in the service continuously and doing duty?

Mr. MORGAN. It will not affect them at all.

Mr. KILGORE. Will it not affect their rank and their right to promotion?

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. KILGORE. Will not the bill give him precedence over them?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir, because he is placed on the limited retired list; and there is no promotion upon that. I wish to state further that this bill was examined by the Secretary of War, who has recommended its passage.

Mr. KILGORE. That is not conclusive.

Mr. MORGAN. But it shows this whole matter has been carefully investigated.

Mr. HEARD. There has never been any unfavorable report from any source.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, it is very curious if everybody was in favor of it that this action has been postponed for fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. MORGAN. That was simply because the bill, while it frequently passed one House or the other, has never passed both Houses at the same Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. When was he cashiered?

Mr. MORGAN. In 1877.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Eugene Wells, late captain Twelfth Infantry and second lieutenant First Artillery, United States Army, had directed him to report the same back with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GEN. NAPOLEON J. T. DANA.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I think it had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Sennte, to appoint Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana, late assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, to the position of assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain of cavalry, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with that rank and pay, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no pension shall be paid to the said Napoleon J. T. Dana.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether, in addition to putting this man on the retired list, it does not promote him from first lieutenant and assistant quartermaster to the rank of a captain of cavalry?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is my understanding that the bill retires him with the same rank that he had when he left the Army. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES] is more familiar with the case than I am.

A MEMBER. Let us hear the report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The report may be read in my time.

The report (by Mr. SICKLES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana, have had the same under consideration, and report the same to the House with a recommendation that the bill do pass. The House bill on the same subject has been favorably reported, and this is identical with it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this a bill to still further increase the retired list?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It increases the retired list by one.

Mr. DOCKERY. What will be the additional charge imposed on the Treasury by reason of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Ninety-six dollars a month.

Mr. DOCKERY. Nearly $1,200 a year. What is the amount of the pension that this man now receives?

Mr. GORMAN. Fourteen doliars a month.

Mr. SAYERS. How old is he?

Mr. HULL. Between 73 and 74 years; but he is more infirm than his age would imply, on account of severe injuries which he received during the war. At the close of the war, when he held a major-general's commission, he resigned because the war was over, and he desired to resume his private business, which had suffered because of his absence in the Army. But on account of his disabilities he was never able to reinstate himself in business; the war had made him a bankrupt.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, this officer resigned from the service——

Mr. SICKLES. He did. But the gentleman should remember that he went back into the service again, and went back at a time when his services were needed.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand that. He was educated at the Government expense?

Mr. SICKLES. And he gave the Government the benefit of his military education. He left, let me say to the gentleman, a most lucrative business in the West, the business of banking in which he was engaged, and entered the military service of the Government during the war. His business was entirely broken up during his absence, and when he resumed it again after the war he was so disabled by wounds that he was unsuccessful, and is now wholly impoverished and unable to earn a dollar, simply living on the insignificant pension of a few dollars a month which the Government grants him.

This is one of the most meritorious cases, I think, that was before the committee. I examined it personally and with great care.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me the action that should have been taken by the committee in this matter would have been to have increased the pension instead of putting him in the regular Army and on the retired list.

Mr. SICKLES. Well, it is more soldierlike and agreeable to a man who reached this high rank in the Army, and won such distinction in the service, to be able to be on a footing upon the retired list with other officers who held a similar rank.

But I would say to the gentleman that the Military Committee naturally sympathize with the desire of the House to look carefully into all of these bills. These half-dozen bills that the chairman has been instructed to report to-day to the House were selected from more than three hundred bills pending before that committee of a similar character. We selected these, and this one particularly, because we regarded them as of singular merit. The rest of these bills are in the pigeonholes of the committee, and we did not wish or think it proper under the circumstances to report them, although as a matter of fact many of them have very considerable merit.

But what I wish to assure the gentleman of is the fact that the Military Committee looks carefully and critically at each application. I have myself denied the appeals from more than a hundred officers, who came personally to me and who brought the strongest letters, asking my support for similar bills. But this order to be presented to-day is one which embraces only cases that have absolute merit, and I could not find a single objection that was tenable in this case.

Mr. SAYERS. The objection, if the gentleman will permit me, to the bill, is that this officer resigned in 1855.

Mr. SICKLES. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. He had been educated, I understand, by the Government, at West Point?

Mr. SICKLES. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. And he resigned from the Army and went into civil life?

Mr. HULL. But that was not unusual at that time.

Mr. SAYERS. Still he resigned from the service.

Mr. SICKLES. Just as many others did. Grant did; McClellan did, and a host of others did also, because at that time their services were not needed by the Government; but the gentleman should remember that in each of these cases when the war commenced they came back and served the country with fidelity and honor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let me say to the gentleman that at that time there was not such a demand for officers as required them to remain in the Army, and it was aiding the service when they resigned and entered the persuits of civil life.

Mr. SAYERS. But when the officer resigned was he not paid a sum of money that would be equal to a commutation of the amount that would be paid him by the Government for the probable length of time he would be in the service?

Mr. SICKLES. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. That is entirely a mistake; there was no such payment.

Mr. SAYERS. Were these officers not paid commutation at the time of their resignation, under the general law?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. At that time there was no such law.

Mr. SICKLES. That was passed after the war.

Mr. SAYERS. When was it passed?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I suppose the gentleman refers to the act of 1870?

Mr. SAYERS. But was there not a law passed prior to the war, permitting an officer to resign and receive commutation for the pay which he would be entitled to receive during the probable length of service?

Mr. HULL. There was no such law.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. An officer who resigned before the passage of the act of 1870 could not receive commutation.

Mr. SAYERS. I understood that that was the law.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No; that did not become the law until 1870.

Mr. HULL. After the war had ended.

Mr. SAYERS. Is the gentleman not mistaken in that?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No.

Mr. SAYERS. Then there was no commutation, in the shape of a cash payment of what would be due the officer for the length of time he would probably serve the Government on his resignation?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Not at all.

Mr. SICKLES. No officer who resigned before the war got that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And it should be remembered that this officer reëntered the service when it was necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. I admit that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And he was in the Mexican war, a most gallant soldier.

Mr. SAYERS. I admit that also.

Mr. CONN. In connection with what the chairman of the committee has said, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. SAYERS. One moment. Let me state my objection to this bill. If this officer is taken from civil life and restored to the Regular Army upon the plea that he had made an able and gallant soldier, which I admit, does not that circumstance apply to a good many thousands of other gallant soldiers during the war who were also in the Federal Army?

Mr. SICKLES. I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that precisely what is proposed to be done in this bill has been done in fifty bills previously.

Mr. SAYERS. I admit that.

Mr. SICKLES. The principle has never been recognized by Congress, so far as I know, that officers or soldiers whose service was strictly limited to the volunteer service should be placed on the retired list. That has never been done, and it is not proposed now. We do not propose to establish any such precedent. Congress in its wisdom has not yet done so, and probably will not do so, but this bill does not interfere at all with that principle. There are fifty precedents for this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, general debate on the bill will be closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DUNBAR R. RANSOM.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 322) to place Dunbar R. Ransom on the retired list of the Army.

The bill was read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill is in Committee of the Whole, and I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, with Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Dunbar R. Ransom, late captain in the Third Artillery of the Army, a captain in the Army, and to place him on the unlimited retired list.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the bill to place Dunbar R. Ransom on the retired list was first taken up in the Fifty-second Congress, when Senator PROCTOR, having left the position of Secretary of War, took his seat in the Senate. While Secretary of War he took an active interest in this case and made a thorough investigation of it, and as soon as he went to the Senate he had the bill passed in the Fifty-second Congress, but it failed to pass the House in that Congress on account of lack of time. Briefly the case is simply this: Dunbar R. Ransom was a graduate of West Point, entering that institution in 1847, and leaving it in 1850. He served all through the war, coming out of it a colonel at the close of the war. Dropping back in the reorganization of the Army he became a captain of artillery. He is a son of Col. Ransom, who fell at the head of his regiment at Chapultepec, and a brother of Gen. Ransom, who died in Georgia from wounds received in Sherman's campaign.

There never was a word against his character as an officer until he borrowed $275. In being moved from post to post he failed to pay it when it was due. He had only paid seventy-three dollars and some cents. He borrowed it from a private. He never denied the debt, but acknowledged its justice. Charges were preferred, and he was cashiered for borrowing from a private soldier. He was a man of large family, with no means except his pay, and had been in the Army all his life, being moved from post to post, as the war records show; he was unable to pay the expenses of his family without borrowing the money. He has from that time to this lived an upright life and has paid the debt from his earnings in private life. The testimony of all the officers and men with whom he has been associated is that he is one of the most gallant and upright men this country has produced.

Mr. BARNES. When did he pay the debt?

Mr. HULL. Since he was cashiered; all but $73, which he had paid before.

Mr. BARNES. How long after that did he pay it?

Mr. HULL. As soon as he could. There is no evidence to show how long it took, but he paid it long before this matter came up.

I will say to my friend that Col. Ransom was brought before Congress more by his friends than by his own action. He is broken down and so old that he is not able to do anything in active business. Gen. G. M. Dodge and other officers have taken an interest in his case, and Senator PROCTOR took an interest in it when it was brought to his attention as Secretary of War, and they have brought this measure before the Congress of the United States, and I believe that it is an act of justice to a man who has fought in the great number of battles that the War Department certifies he fought in. They are set out in full in the report, now before this House, which I had the honor to submit.

Mr. BARNES. I would like to ask my friend whether he acted honorably about this debt before he was discharged?

Mr. HULL. Absolutely. There is absolutely no doubt about that. His letters set forth in the report show that he never denied the debt; and the man himself who made the charge, when he found the serious results of the charge, would have withdrawn it if he could have done so. So that it is simply a question of whether you will continue to punish a man who did such magnificent service for his country by leaving him to die with this stigma upon him, or whether you will now reinstate him in the Army. He is too old for active service in the Army now, and there is no chance of promotion; and I believe that it is one of the most meritorious cases that I have ever known to come before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I would like to know how many officers are situated like this officer?

Mr. HULL. I never heard of any other situated the same as he.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. A great many are cashiered and leave the Army and afterwards they want to get reinstated.

Mr. HULL. I never before knew of an officer being cashiered because he could not pay a debt when it was due.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. They are cashiered for a great many causes, and as soon as the witnesses are dead and the facts forgotten they come here and ask for reinstatement.

Mr. HULL. A majority of the members of this House and officers of the Army or in business could be cashiered for not paying debts due at sometime in their lives.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I believe that the precedent set by this bill is a dangerous one. I am usually a man whose sympathies are with, always have been with, and always will be with that side; but, at the same time, if we lay down a precedent here that as soon as the witnesses have died and the facts have been forgotten an officer can come to the Congress of the United States and have himself reinstated on such a proposition as this, it simply opens a flood gate for others to come in.

Mr. HULL. There is nothing to show that there is any other charge against him. There is no other controversy.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. But you do not ask simply a removal of the stigma: you ask that he be put upon the retired list, and that he may draw his pay as a retired officer of the Army, and that does not seem to me entirely right.

Mr. HULL. I will ask the gentleman to read the record of this gallant officer, and I am sure you will think it is not wrong to put him on the retired list.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I think the bill sets a dangerous precedent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman will permit me to call his attention to the fact he will see the fact of the absence of witnesses in this particular case cuts no figure, because the report is based upon written documentary evidence on file in the War Department:

It appears from the testimony of the principal prosecuting witness, Sanborn, that when he loaned the money to Ransom he stated that he would not require its return until the following October. (Page 15 of transcript.)

We have not printed all the papers here, but all the papers have been before the committee.

He also testifies, on page 18, that he did not write the captain on the subject of the loan until after the receipt by him of the $75 remittance some time in March, 1868. So it will be seen that this payment was made by Ransom without any demand by Sanborn.

What I want to impress upon the committee is that there is nowhere in this testimony any evidence tending to show fraud or deception, or taking advantage at all. It is simply a record of poverty and inability to pay money borrowed, because the officer was ordered to one or two places and had to take his family, and as soon as he could he began to pay the debt. Then this man, growing impatient after he had received one payment, made a complaint, and the pay of the officer was stopped, and the stoppage of the pay preventing him from making payment to the claimant.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I will not object further.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word about this bill, as I know so many men who have felt an interest in Capt. Ransom. Gen. Logan, when alive, had this bill before his committee and examined the entire record of the court-martial, and the report of that committee contains this statement:

The committee are of opinion, after carefully examining all the evidence adduced, that the court erred in its findings as well as in the law of the case.

I call the attention of my friend from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to that statement, and to the fact that this man, after having participated in twenty-four battles, with his body full of lead, having been three times promoted for gallantry on the field of battle, was, on an error of law and of fact, dropped from his position in the regular Army.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that after hearing the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I withdraw all objection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I am glad to hear that. I knew that the just and generous-hearted gentleman from Missouri would not persist in opposing this bill. I will not occupy further time, Mr. Chairman, but will ask favorable action.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the bill be now closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (S. 322) and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLES B. STIVERS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Charles B. Stivers, late captain in the Seventh United States Infantry, was summarily and erroneously dismissed the service on the 15th day of July, 1863, by Special Orders, No. 313, by order of the then Secretary of War, which order of dismissal, upon proof being made to the War Department that an injustice had been inadvertently done the said officer, was revoked by order of the Secretary of War on August 11, 1863, by Special Orders, No. 356, whereupon said Capt. Stivers was restored to his rank in the Army and continued in honorable and faithful service therein until December 30, 1864, when, by a proper order from the War Department, after due examination, on account of long and faithful service and physical disability, he was placed upon the retired list of the Army; and

Whereas the said Charles B. Stivers was continued upon said retired list from the said date of his retirement until June 1, 1890, when he was dropped from the same in pursuance of an order of the War Department made by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (114 United States Report, 619) to the effect that the revocation by the President by an order of dismissal of an officer of the Army did not restore him to his former position in the service, but that such restoration could only legally be effected by an act of Congress: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act only, and only so far as they affect Charles B. Stivers; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the exercise of his discretion and judgment, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint said Charles B. Stivers, late a captain in the Seventh United States Infantry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain in the Army of the United States in the infantry service, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of the date of December 30, 1864, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent, with the pay of his grade and rank from said date the same as if he had never been considered out of the service since his original entrance therein; such retired pay, however, having been heretofore duly and continuously received by said Charles B. Stivers up to the 1st day of June, 1890, the same shall only be due and payable to him hereafter from said date last named.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to the language of the report on this bill.

Let it be understood that this officer was erroneously dismissed from the Army in 1863, and that within thirty days thereafter the Secretary of War admitted that he had made a mistake, admitted it publicly by an order of the President restoring the officer.

Mr. SAYERS. But I understood the gentleman to say that this man had been erroneously dismissed from the Army?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. How was he erroneously dismissed?

Mr. SORG. He was sick. He was reported absent without leave, but it was afterwards discovered that he was sick.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That was admitted, and upon that admission action restoring him was taken. The same Secretary of War and the same President by whom he had been dismissed restored him, and he continued in the service until the 30th of December, 1864. Then, by virtue of the law and of his long and faithful service, he was placed on the retired list. He was then in the Army properly, or was supposed to be in it properly, and he continued on the retired list until it was decided recently by the Court of Claims that while the President had the power to dismiss an officer summarily, he had no power to revoke such order of dismissal even when improvidently or unjustly made.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, from 1864 until 1890 this officer was illegally drawing pay?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, according to the decision of the Court of Claims—illegally, but not unjustly or inequitably, because he had been restored by the same authorities that had dismissed him, they having discovered that he had been tried for an offense for which he was not guilty and dismissed because of the judgment of the court-martial.

Mr. SAYERS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that when this officer was court-martialed he had no notice?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He was tried in his absence.

Mr. SAYERS. And had no notice?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He had no notice, as I recollect the record.

A MEMBER. How did the court get jurisdiction?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This was a court of inquiry. They took jurisdiction in a number of such cases. This decision of the Court of Claims was made quite recently.

Mr. CANNON of California. Did this man draw pay as a retired officer until that decision?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of California. Do you know whether he is now drawing a pension—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He is not. The preamble to this bill recites that—

The said Charles B. Stivers was continued upon said retired list from the said date of his retirement until June 1, 1890, when he was dropped from the same in pursuance of an order of the War Department made by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (114 United States Reports, 619) to the effect that the revocation by the President by an order of dismissal of an officer of the Army did not restore him to his former position in the service, but that such restoration could only legally be effected by an act of Congress.

Now, this bill proposes to legalize that which was done by order of the President and which at the time was supposed to be legal, so that no claim may be made against this officer for money illegally received.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill carries no appropriation, I understand?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No appropriation. It simply authorizes the President, in the exercise of his discretion, to appoint "said Charles B. Stivers, late a captain in the Seventh United States Infantry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain in the Army of the United States in the infantry service, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of the date of December 30, 1864, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent, with the pay of his grade and rank from said date the same as if he had never been considered out of the service since his original entrance therein; such retired pay, however, having been heretofore duly and continuously received by said Charles B. Stivers up to the 1st day of June, 1890, the same shall only be due and payable to him hereafter from said date last named."

It seems to me that justice and equity require that he should be permitted to receive pay from that date.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand it, if this bill is not passed, he may be called upon to refund the pay he has received?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of California. Then I think we ought to pass the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill has been reported favorably two or three times. It was introduced by my late colleague, Mr. Houk, and I am not as familiar with all the facts of the case as I ought to be.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that this officer, if placed upon the retired list at all, ought not to draw pay except from the time when he shall have been restored to the retired list. It is not contended here that he was not properly dismissed for disobedience of orders and without leave.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that that was altogether a mistake. He was absent on account of sickness and he was tried for being absent without leave.

Mr. SAYERS. But he was tried also for disobedience of orders.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. That would mean the same thing in this case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] insists upon it I think this would be a fair provision: "That the same shall only be due and payable to him hereafter from the date of the passage of this bill." That would relieve him from the possibility of a claim for the money received by him.

Mr. Chairman, to satisfy the judgment of the gentleman from Texas, I move to amend by striking out, in line 22, page 3, the words "from said date last named" and inserting "from the date of the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed, and this amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, and with the recommendation that it be passed as amended.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM A. WINDER.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call up the bill (H. R. 450) to restore William A. Winder to the United States Army, and to place him on the retired list with the rank of captain of artillery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair. [Loud applause.]

The committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 450) to restore William A. Winder to the United States Army, and to place him on the retired list with the rank of captain of artillery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint and restore to his proper rank in the Army, as captain of artillery, and to place him on the retired list, William A. Winder, of San Diego, Cal.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. BOWERS) to explain this bill.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, Capt. Winder entered the United States Army and served all through the Mexican war. He was promoted for gallantry in that war and made a lieutenant; he served continuously from that time until 1866—through both wars. There is no charge against him in connection with his whole service except in connection with his service at Alcatraz Island, where he was in command for three years during the war. Some fanatical patriots who were careful to stay at home during the war charged that while he was in command at that post he "fed the rebel prisoners on the fat of the land, served on silver platters."

That is substantially the charge, and practically the only charge against him. Because he was a Democrat then and is now, and because all of his family, the Winders of the South, including his father and others, were in the Confederate army, a great many of those patriots thought he could not be a Union man; and therefore they set to work to undermine him and prejudice Secretary Stanton against him. In consequence of these charges Gen. Wright at one time sent a company of men to reenforce the place, with an officer to rank Capt. Winder. But upon an investigation which was made soon after, Capt. Winder was reinstated in the command and highly complimented for his judgment and efficiency.

This man served, as I have stated, until 1866, and he served under very adverse circumstances. He was true to the country that he served so long. In 1866, after the war was over, he tendered his resignation, the reason assigned by him being that the Secretary of War was unfriendly to him. Within three months afterward he made application to be restored to his position in the Army. But the President, in the meantime, had filled the vacancy, and he could not be reappointed.

Now, during the time he was in command on the Pacific coast he was paid in greenbacks, which were worth there 35 cents on the dollar. He entertained the commanders of all the various foreign war vessels that came there; so that when he resigned he was in debt $4,000, which it had cost him for the entertainment of these people.

There is no charge against him whatever. He is now nearly 70 years of age, broken down in health. He served the country long and faithfully. The President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland, recently gave him a very small billet to let him allot some Indian lands in California; but the service does not amount to anything, as he will only be engaged for three or four months. I ask this House in justice to an old and gallant soldier to put him on the retired list. The bill carries no back pay or any considerable amount of money; he simply wants to die under the flag.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, we may as well draw the line on this bill. If it had merit I should be the last to oppose it. I will briefly call the attention of the committee to the facts that are set forth in the report as forming the basis of merit on which it rests.

Now, in this case the party can not fall back on the proposition that he rendered great or important military services during the late war. He rendered no service during that time that involved any danger. He was stationed in California, and left the service directly after the war was over, on the ground that the Secretary of War was hostile to him.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand you to say that he rendered no service during the war which involved danger, personal danger?

Mr. SAYERS. No service of a dangerous character.

Mr. ALLEN. I can scarcely forgive him for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. It does seem to me that the facts as stated by the committee in their report can not possibly justify this committee in placing him on the retired list at an expense of from $100 to $125 per month to the Government.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Let me say to my friend from Texas that he repeatedly made application to the authorities during the war to be sent East into active service. Commanding as he did that most important point on the Pacific coast, his services were deemed necessary there and he was not sent East. It was that stronghold on the Pacific coast that did much to save the coast to the Union. The man that commanded it is the man this bill seeks to place upon the retired list.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, well, I suppose there were a good many loyal men on the Pacific coast at that time.

Mr. BOWERS of California. So there were; but the record of this man is all straight. There is no crime alleged against him, no charge against him at all, only that he was kind and considerate to the Confederate prisoners.

He is now old and poor, and for the two or three years he has got to live he would like to be an officer of the United States, in whose service he was for such a long time.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, let us see what his military record is.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I have his military record here, too.

Mr. SAYERS. I will read from it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Well, read from it.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, let us see where he was during the war:

Awaiting orders to February 21, 1861; en route to March 22, 1861; with company at Presidio, Cal., to May 30, 1861; at Alcatraz Island, California, to October 21, 1861; at Washington, D. C., to January, 1862; at Alcatraz Island, California, to August 2, 1864; at Point San José, California, to August, 1865; at San Diego, Cal., to October 6, 1865; en route to the East to November 21, 1865; on recruiting service in New York to January 18, 1866, and on leave until he resigned, October 18, 1866.

Now, there is the record of this officer; and it does occur to me that the case is absolutely without merit, and that this committee will not be doing right to restore him after he had voluntarily resigned from the service and retired to private life at the expense which this bill will necessarily involve.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, let me read a little more from the record. The gentleman has not read it all.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well; I am reading from his military record.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Well, I am reading from the record, and let us see what it says:

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the thanks of this State be, and they are hereby, tendered to Capt. Creighton, of the bark Three Bells, Capt. Lowe, of the Kilby, and Capt. Stouffer, of the Antarctic, for their noble and humane conduct in rescuing so many valuables lives from the wreck of the ill-fated steamer San Francisco.

Resolved, That the thanks of their native State are also tendered to Capt. James T. Watkins, the noble and heroic commander of the unfortunate steamship San Francisco, and to Maj. Wyse, Lieuts. W. A. Winder and Charles S. Winder, and Lieut. Frank Key Murray, for their courageous and gallant bearing during those trying scenes.

Here was a service for which this man was complimented in this manner. Nearly two hundred men and officers were drowned on that steamer. That is another part of the record, when he was in charge, and shows that this was a time at least when he was in personal danger.

Mr. ALLEN. Is there not some suspicion that he sympathized with the rebel prisoners during the war?

Mr. BOWERS of California. That was a charge against him at the time, that he sympathized with them, and on the ground that his family were all on that side, he himself being the only member of the family who was true to the flag.

Mr. BRYAN. What has he been doing ever since that time?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Trying to pay the debts contracted in the service.

Mr. BOWERS of California. And he was compelled to expend that by reason of the position he occupied there. The Government never paid it, but paid him his salary at the same time in currency that was only worth 30 or 35 cents on the dollar. If he lived twenty years on the retired list you could not repay him the money he took from his own pocket to sustain the honor of the country at the time he occupied the position to which I have referred, and for the services he rendered.

Mr. GROVESNOR. What was the matter at San Francisco at that time?

Mr. BOWERS of California. And I want to call the attention of the Chairman, and the committee, to the fact that he went as a boy into the Mexican war, fought all through that war and was brevetted a lieutenant for gallantry in the battles of that war.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to close general debate.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLARK of Missouri). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks unanimous consent to close general debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move as a substitute that the committee rise, and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to move that this bill be referred back to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to bring in some different report?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order in the committee. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SAYERS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 47.

Mr. SAYERS. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission that the bill be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 450) and had directed him to report that, by unanimous consent, it had been withdrawn without recommendation.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

Mr. HATCH. I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and request a conference.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I understand that there is an appropriation of a million dollars put upon the bill by the Senate for the purpose of destroying the Russian thistle. I desire to know of the gentleman if he will not, before he agrees to that item, bring it back to the House for the purpose of taking the sense of the House upon the proposition?

Mr. HATCH. I certainly will.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, an order will be made that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and request a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HATCH, Mr. FORMAN, and Mr. WAUGH.

MEDALS OF HONOR.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 205) to provide for the presentation of medals of honor to the militia and volunteer troops of the several States who volunteered their services for the defense of the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania in the year 1863, prior to and after the battle of Gettysburg, Pa.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], from the Committee on Military Affairs, calls up a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, this is in Committee of the Whole. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the joint resolution H. Res. 205, with Mr. TRACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of General Orders, No. 195, Adjutant-General's Office, War Department, Washington, D. C., June 29, 1863, and which reads as follows:

"General Orders, No. 195.

"The Adjutant General will provide appropriate medals of honor for the troops who, after the expiration of their term, have offered their services to the Government in the present emergency, and also for the volunteer troops from other States that have volunteered their services in the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania.

"By order of the Secretary of War:

"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS].

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, during the invasion of the States of Pennsylvania and Maryland, previous to the battle of Gettysburg, a call was made for 100,000 troops, and at the same time, immediately upon their starting for the scene of conflict, the Adjutant-General issued the order which has been read by the Clerk.

It has always been considered an obligation on the part of the Government which ought to have been redeemed long ago. And the Assistant Secretary of War in his communication says "It would seem as though no possible objection could be made to carrying out General Order 195, quoted in the resolution, but that it should be greatly regretted that the carrying out of such an order should have been so long delayed." This order was in the nature of a contract; and it certainly ought to be fulfilled on the part of the Government. When the call was made the merchant left his counting-house, the banker left his bank, the clerk left his counter.

Mr. SICKLES. And the farmer left his plow.

Mr. COOMBS. The farmer left his plow, and within twenty-four hours they marched to the scene of the conflict. The order was read to the troops on the field of battle, and that they did efficient service has never been doubted. It is an obligation of the Government which I am sure this Congress will be ready to redeem.

I have had estimates made at the mint by the Director of the Mint and he states that the silver medals will cost about 40 cents apiece. I have letters from forty or fifty colonels of regiments, generals and men prominent in the service, who have asked me to claim this at the hands of Congress. I wish to ask, Mr. Chairman, permission to change the title of the bill so that it shall read, "Service in the defense of the United States in the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania."

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the gentleman think it exactly the fair thing to these bankers who left their banks, and these clerks who left their counters, and these merchants who left their stores, and these farmers who left their plows to put off on them a silver medal made of a debased metal. [Laughter.]

Mr. SICKLES. It is good for medals, though not good for money. That it just what it is fit for.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New York, and then, perhaps, to base some observations on his reply.

Mr. COOMBS. If the gentleman will allow me to make one other statement before making his inquiry.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry or two for information. How many of these soldiers were there enlisted at first?

Mr. COOMBS. Twenty-six thousand five hundred. They went down inside of eight days.

Mr. KILGORE. Were they called out by the State or by the Federal Government?

Mr. SICKLES. They were called out by the President.

Mr. COOMBS. He called out 100,000 men. He knew he was going to have a hard time with you men down there, and he called for abundant force.

Mr. KILGORE. How long were they in the service?

Mr. COOMBS. They were not discharged until all danger from you people was over.

Mr. KILGORE. How long was that; for how long a time were they called into service?

Mr. SICKLES. They were called in June, 1863, and they remained in the Army until the exigency was over, and this order was issued as an inducement to them to serve.

Mr. KILGORE. How long did the exigency exist?

Mr. SICKLES. For about three months.

Mr. KILGORE. About three months. Why are you trying to make any discrimination in favor of these picnic soldiers as against——

Mr. SICKLES. Simply because the Government itself made that discrimination.

Mr. KILGORE (continuing): And against soldiers who served through all the war. I believe in doing justice all along the line.

Mr. SICKLES. Undoubtedly. This was the action of the Government itself——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let this debate run on.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to know upon what terms arrangement is made. There ought to be an opportunity at least for discussion of both sides of the question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman will have an opportunity afforded him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, upon what principle is this debate being conducted? Does the gentleman undertake to control all the time on both sides?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not undertake to take any time except such as is given me under the general rule, which gives me the floor for an hour.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is taking the floor and alloting the time himself upon this subject. Something may be said on both sides of the question; and I desire to say something, unless the gentleman has got a patent in the matter.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not claim any patent, but I am entitled to the first hour, and I am giving the time to those who desire it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to have some time myself.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman desires to have any time, I will yield it to him.

Mr. COOMBS. I would like the privilege of answering the gentleman from Texas. I wish to say to him that these men who went to the front in this special emergency were not carpet soldiers. They had done previous service. Their time had expired and they went to the front in this emergency as skilled soldiers.

Mr. KILGORE. But they did not stay very long, and that is the trouble.

Mr. SICKLES. They had already served their time.

Mr. COOMBS. They had served their time and had been discharged.

Mr. SICKLES. And this was an inducement offered to them by the Government.

Mr. KILGORE. But why did not they continue in the service?

Mr. SICKLES. Their services were not required.

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose they were bankers and other people of that class, and that you had to promise them silver medals in order to get them to go at all. [Laughter.] But I understand the gentleman from New York to say that this is a contract entered into by the Government.

Mr. SICKLES. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. In that case I want to set up the plea of limitations right here and now, because this claim has been running thirty-one years, and the statute of limitation bars it.

Mr. SICKLES. Oh, that statute applies to money obligations, not to obligations of honor. There is no statute of limitations against the recognition of patriotic service in this country, thank God! [Applause.]

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that; but there were many other people who were engaged in serving their country in a patriotic way and whose claims are equal or greatly superior to these. Beside, sir, we have not got the money for this purpose.

Mr. SICKLES. We are going to tax sugar in a few days, and that will bring us all the money that we want. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. But we do not want to do that. Besides, as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] has suggested, I do not think it is fair to these people to compel them to accept medals made out of a metal of so little value as silver in this country. Therefore I am inclined to antagonize this bill.

Mr. SICKLES. Substitute gold, then.

Mr. KILGORE. We have not got the gold to spare.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to have been some misapprehension on the part of members of the Committee on Military Affairs as to the resolution that was considered when this question was before us. At least there was a misapprehension on my part, for I supposed that we were considering a resolution more general in its terms than this, but I am informed by the Chairman that this is the one that was adopted by the committee. At the time this resolution was before the Military Committee first the question came up as to broadening the scope of the resolution so as to honor other men who had performed distinguished service upon the field of battle after the expiration of their regular term of service, and I was in favor of that.

I refer particularly to one regiment, the First Iowa, which was among the earliest to volunteer when the civil war was inaugurated. The term of service of that regiment had expired, but the battle of Wilson's Creek was impending and they unanimously resolved that they would stay with the command until that battle was fought. They did so, and they were led in person by Gen. Lyon, who gave his life in leading a charge against the enemy's lines.

Now, I regard that battle as one of very great importance in many ways, because it fixed irrevocably the status of Missouri in the Union, and awakened the North to work before us; and I desire to offer here an amendment which I offered in the committee, and which received the support of my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. SICKLES], who suggested that the resolution should be recommitted to the subcommittee with instructions to incorporate my amendment in it. That suggestion was adopted by the committee. The resolution was reported back, however, in its present form because the committee thought it best to report a resolution simply covering the cases that had been mentioned in the general orders.

Mr. SICKLES. To give what had been promised.

Mr. HULL. Yes; but in this matter of honoring the Union soldiers who stayed in the service after their time had expired, I do not believe we should limit it to Maryland and Pennsylvania, whose soldiers are named in the general orders simply because they were near the national capital. I do not believe the militia of those two States should receive an honor denied to regular volunteers. This is the amendment I desire to offer:

Resolved further, That the Secretary of War be instructed to prepare like medals of honor for such other volunteer troops as performed service on the field of battle in defense of the Union after the expiration of their term of service.

That will let in the First Iowa, but it will not confine this recognition to that regiment, but will include every regiment that stayed and fought after its term of service had expired. I can see no reason why the troops of Maryland and Pennsylvania should have medals of honor for certain services that does not apply equally to every other regiment of Union troops that performed similar service with or without promise of special recognition. They all stayed and performed the service simply because they were defending the flag of the Union and were willing to sacrifice their lives for their country.

I want to say further, in reply to a suggestion which has been made here, that nineteen-twentieths of the members of the First Iowa Regiment went home and immediately enlisted and served in other regiments through the war. I want this recognition to go not only to the surviving veterans, but to their families.

A distinguished colonel of the First Iowa Regiment, a Democrat from Dubuque, died in my town recently. I do not want to deprive his family of this evidence of the loyalty of their father.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I concur very heartily with the suggestions which have just been made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. I was seeking the ear of the distinguished Chairman of the committee in order to offer just some such suggestions. I am heartily in accord with the purpose of this bill; but I can see no possible reason why at this late day the men who volunteered to save Gettysburg (and God knows there were a good many outsiders needed there) should be selected out and placed in apparent competition and discrimination with men who did the same sort of acts on many another field.

I have in my mind two regiments—one from Ohio, with which I was not connected, and one from Illinois, the Twenty-fourth Illinois—both of which regiments had been ordered to the rear to be mustered out of service, but both of which remained on their own motion, went into battle, and lost heavily of their men. And there were many other cases of the same kind.

I can see no reason why medals should be given to the men who served at Gettysburg, while these men of whom I speak are discriminated against.

Again, there were other emergencies than that at Gettysburg. Other cities than Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and Washington were threatened. I remember the time when Kirby Smith with a great army threatened the destruction of Cincinnati, and the communication with the Army of the Cumberland and of Tennessee. I remember when, upon the request of the President and the proclamation of the governor, thousands of men in Ohio and Indiana went to Cincinnati, were organized into provisional regiments, brigades, and divisions under Lew Wallace, and stood in the trenches. Judge Storer, the father of my distinguished friend who usually sits before me when he is in the House, was one of them.

Men of that class were organized into what were called in Ohio the "squirrel hunters." They have received legal recognition; they were all organized troops that did valiant service, protecting a great flank of the Union with the same valor and the same patriotism that was exhibited in Pennsylvania: Therefore, while I am in favor of this bill and will vote for it without amendment, I think it ought to be more comprehensive, so as to express the opinion of the Government as to their patriotism and valor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. We admit all that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has said. But here is a positive promise given by the Government to certain soldiers. The Committee on Military Affairs, and I believe Congress, feel that this promise ought to be redeemed. If the gentleman from Ohio will bring in bills to cover those other meritorious cases they will unquestionably receive favorable consideration.

A gentleman asks me what was the promise made in this case. I will read it:

General Orders No. 195.

The Adjutant-General will provide appropriate medals of honor for the troops who, after the expiration of their term, have offered their services to the Government in the present emergency, and also for the volunteer troops from other States that have volunteered their services in the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mr. Chairman, I think that, in view of this order publicly made at the time these soldiers went into action, those who rendered that service ought to have the medals promised them. These medals are not costly as pensions are; the expense of each medal is but a few dimes. I trust there will be no objection to the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now ask a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The amendment of Mr. HULL was read, as follows:

Resolved further, That the Secretary of War is instructed to prepare similar medals of honor, and present the same to such other volunteer troops as performed service on the field of battle in defense of the Union after the expiration of their terms of service.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. COOMBS. The title ought to be amended in two particulars.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the title will be in order in the House after the passage of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

The question being taken: there were, on a division (called for by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina)—ayes 42, noes 9.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum.

Mr. SICKLES. Does it require a quorum for the committee to rise? A quorum is evidently present, but whether it has voted or not I think the motion that the committee rise does not require a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. But the motion is that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, and the point of no quorum is in order on that motion.

The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. COOMBS and Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina were appointed tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide. Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill, in the absence of objection, will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRACEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration House joint resolution 205, by unanimous consent the same was withdrawn.

WILLIAM R. STEINMETZ.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now call up for consideration the bill (S. 812) for the relief of William R. Steinmetz.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. To that I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TRACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill S. 812, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 812) for the relief of William R. Steinmetz.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. KILGORE. This bill ought to be read first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Capt. William R. Steinmetz, United States Army, retired, a major on the retired list of the Army, with the rank and pay of that grade from February 23, 1891, under the provisions of sections 3 of "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and to regulate promotions therein," approved October 1, 1890.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman, Capt. Steinmetz entered the service in 1860, and was promoted during the war to be assistant surgeon. He served on the frontier from 1860 until 1891. He was examined in 1878—first in 1875. He was called for examination for promotion and was given an extension of time because he had been on the frontier ever since the close of the war. The extension of time given to him I think was for two years. He went before the board at the expiration of that time and underwent an examination for retirement. The board recommended that he was fit for active service and refused to retire him. That was a few months before the close of 1875, or the latter part of that year—the report gives the exact date.

In 1878 he asked for an examination for promotion. He was reported then by the examining board of surgeons as not fit for promotion, because of physical disabilities, and was given a year's leave of absence. He asked continually to be restored to active service, and it will be seen by reference to the report that he was placed on active service at the Watertown Arsenal, and served there from some time in the latter part of 1878, or the fore part of 1879, continuously until 1891, when he asked to be retired under the act passed in the Fifty-first Congress allowing any officer to be retired at a rank above that which he held in the service. When he asked to be retired as major, however, they go back and recommend his retirement under examination of 1875 as captain, and without any notice or investigation, or opportunity for explanation on the part of Capt. Stinemetz, he was retired under that examination.

He asks now simply that he be retired according to the existing law, and that is the act of 1891, which is embodied in the report. Section 3 of that act provides:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe a system of examination of all officers of the Army below the rank of major to determine their fitness for promotion, such an examination to be conducted at such times anterior to the accruing of the right to promotion as may be best for the interests of the service: Provided, That the President may waive the examination for promotion to any grade in the case of any officer who, in pursuance of existing law, has passed a satisfactory examination for such grade prior to the passage of this act: And provided, That if any officer fails to pass a satisfactory examination, and is reported unfit for promotion, the officer next below him in rank, having passed said examination, shall receive the promotion: And provided, That should the officer fail in his physical examination, and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted.

It will be seen that this act provides that he shall be retired "with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted."

That is all that this bill seeks to do. The purpose of it is simply to give him the rank to which he was justly entitled under the law at the time of his retirement.

Mr. KILGORE. Right there I wish to ask a question. He was not entitled, as I understand it, to his retirement in the absence of examination, and under that law you have to submit to the examination. Now, the purpose of this bill is to exempt him from that examination.

Mr. GORMAN. No, the law provides that if he is incapacitated through physical disabilities, he is entitled to be retired as of the rank to which his seniority would entitle him.

Mr. KILGORE. Then what is the necessity for this bill?

Mr. GORMAN. They retired him on the examination that was had under the old law, which the act of 1890 superseded.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, you want to promote him, and retire him with a higher rank?

Mr. GORMAN. We simply want to give him what he is legally entitled to under the law.

Mr. KILGORE. Why did he not get it under the first examination?

Mr. GORMAN. Because this law was not in effect when he had the first examination in 1878.

Mr. KILGORE. You want to take advantage of a new law that has been passed upon the subject, to give him additional rank?

Mr. GORMAN. No, it is not to take advantage of anything that did not exist at that time; but it is simply to give him advantage of that which did exist at the time he was retired.

Mr. KILGORE. How is it that they did not give him the benefit of it then?

Mr. GORMAN. Some funny things occur sometimes.

Mr. KILGORE. I see in that report a mention of several things that you do not care to discuss. I apprehend, therefore, that there is something in this case that has not been developed, and I should be inclined to insist that it go over until we can find out more about it. I should be inclined to resist the passage of this bill this evening, under the circumstances.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope in view of the fact that he was retired under the old examination, when as a matter of fact he was entitled to an examination in 1891, and demanded that examination, in view of the fact that no opportunity was given him to take the examination and to get the rank to which he was entitled, that the gentleman will not object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. KILGORE. He is entitled to an examination under the law passed since he was examined, you say?

Mr. GORMAN. That is what we ask for, and that is what he seemingly did not have an opportunity to take advantage of, because they undertook to retire him under the old law.

Mr. KILGORE. I should be perfectly willing to allow the gentleman to withdraw the bill. I should not make any objection to that.

Mr. GORMAN. If it was not a truly meritorious bill, I should ask the chairman to withdraw it——

Mr. KILGORE. I have looked into the report, and I am not satisfied, and I have talked with some of the friends of this gentleman; but the report itself leaves the impression that there are quite a number of things in this case which have not been developed.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say that the Senate has passed this bill twice.

Mr. KILGORE. That is against it.

Mr. GORMAN. The report made by Senator DAVIS is elaborate, and I think if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] will refer to it he will see reasons which I have not had time to state in this brief explanation, and which I do not care to state on the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. I have not read the report made by Senator DAVIS, and I should like to have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no desire to criticise the action of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. KILGORE. I should be willing, as I say, to agree that the bill might be withdrawn. That is as far as I could go this evening.

Mr. GORMAN. Will you agree that it may come up by unanimous consent after you have sufficiently investigated it?

Mr. KILGORE. That is a matter that I could not well control, and I do not want to make any promise now. I should be very glad to accommodate my friend, but this is a matter in which I feel that there should be further investigation.

Mr. GORMAN. If we yield to your wishes in the matter you ought to be willing to yield something in return.

Mr. KILGORE. I may, after I have looked into it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman from Texas insist that this bill shall be withdrawn?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; I shall have to insist upon it.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a truly meritorious measure. This man is legally entitled to be retired as a major.

Mr. KILGORE. The report of the committee which I have read does not impress me in that way.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. TRACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 812), and by unanimous consent the bill had been withdrawn from consideration.

HENRY W. FREEDLEY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 1578) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry W. Freedley, late major in the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TRACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Henry W. Freedley, late major in the Army of the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,000, being the difference between the pay of a major retired, which he actually received, and the pay of a colonel, which he should have received, from March 3, 1875, to November 3, 1889, the date of his death, to which he was in his lifetime entitled by reason of a wound in the leg, received at the battle of Gettysburg while acting as colonel, and subsequently underwent the operation of resection, by which the leg was permanently disabled.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise the point of order that the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over the bill. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, this bill, I think, was properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, because it fixes the rank of the officer.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that that bill has been introduced two or three times, and has always been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM. The bill relates to the retirement of an officer of the regular Army.

Mr. SAYERS. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the legal representatives of this officer the sum of $11,000. That is the substance of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section of the rule relating to the reference of bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule XXI, clause 4: No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rule this bill should have gone to the Committee on Claims, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I move that the committee rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1578, and the point of order being made that the bill was not properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, the point of order was sustained by the Chair, and the committee had directed him to report that fact to the House.

JAMES WILLIAM ABERT.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 2582) to authorize the appointment of James William Abert to the retired list of the Army.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TRACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will now report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint James William Abert to the Army of the United States, and to place said Abert on the retired list thereof with the rank of major of engineers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that there will be no opposition to the passage of this bill, for if there has been any meritorious bill for placing an army officer, or ex-army officer, upon the retired list, this is one of the most meritorious that has been offered to this committee to-day. James W. Abert was in the military service of this country about twenty-six years. He is a hero of three wars. He was chief of the topographical engineer department in the latter part of 1864.

On the 26th day of May, 1864, under circumstances that were trying and particularly excusable, as he was being transferred from the North Carolina and South Carolina department to New Orleans, while in transit from New York, he asked leave of absence, which was seemingly denied at first, but finally, through the influence and assistance of friends, he was allowed a few days leave to visit his wife, who was then at the point of death at Newport, Ky. He was advised by the attending physician that it was absolutely necessary to the life and health of his wife that he should remain with her. He asked for an extension of leave of absence for ten days.

Secretary Stanton did not feel inclined to grant it. Abert then telegraphed that if it was not agreeable to the War Department to extend his leave at least ten days he would be forced to tender his resignation. Not hearing anything further from the War Department, he at once returned to New York and took his transit with his command for New Orleans. While waiting orders to leave New York, he received by wire from the War Department notice of the acceptance of his resignation. He immediately returned to Newport, Ky., to the bedside of his wife, and after a few days was advised by the attending physician that it would be safe for him to leave. He immediately came to Washington and asked the War Department to reinstate him in his command. He brought such influence as it was possible for him to bring to bear to that effect.

Mr. Stanton did not reinstate him. He has been clamoring at the doors of the War Department for reinstatement from that time to this. I believe that in view of the fact that he spent the major part and the best years of his life in the service of his country, that he is now 74 years of age, practically blind, and without a dollar to render him aid or comfort in his last days, it is the duty of a philanthropic country to reinstate a man of this kind. I therefore ask my friends who have thought proper to object to some measures here to take into consideration the specially meritorious character of this bill and allow it to pass unanimously.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRACEY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 2582) and had instructed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a typographical correction. In line 6 of the bill, "Albert" should be "Abert."

The SPEAKER. Without objection that correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAMAGES FROM MUSCLE SHOALS CANAL.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5930) to appoint a commission to report and determine upon certain damages done to citizens of Lauderdale County, Ala., by the building of the Muscle Shoals Canal.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the subject-matter of that bill is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This is not a claim, Mr. Speaker. It does not make any charge upon the Treasury. It simply requires the War Department to make an examination as to the injurious results to certain citizens from a work which was done under the War Department. The subject belongs properly, either to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is not a claim, and it seems to me quite clear that the subject belongs to some committee having jurisdiction of the War Department, and not to the Committee on Claims, so that the point of the gentleman from Texas is not well taken.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the resolution, its effect, if adopted, would be to put in the possession of the War Department a report by its own officers as to the damage alleged to have been occasioned by the works at the Muscle Shoals.

On the question of the reference of the bill, under our rules private bills are referred by the member introducing them. None of the officers or clerks under the Speaker has anything to do with that. The member himself marks the bill with the name of the committee to which he wishes it referred, but if a member refers a bill erroneously, the committee to which it is referred does not thereby acquire jurisdiction of it.

There is a provision in our rules that only certain committees shall have jurisdiction of claims. Paragraph 4 of Rule XXI provides that—

> No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

There is no way of giving any other committee than one of those here named jurisdiction of a claim against the Government, except by unanimous consent. Now, if this bill is a claim within the meaning of the rule, then it is not properly reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But, Mr. Speaker, the bill does not provide for either the payment or the adjudication of anything.

The SPEAKER. It did not occur to the Chair that this was a claim. The bill provides that officers of the Government shall make an investigation as to damage alleged to have resulted from certain work conducted under the direction of the War Department.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. A great many such bills have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs during the last ten or twelve years. I recall the bill providing for the appointment of such a board to investigate and report upon the damages sustained by owners of oyster beds, caused by public work carried on under the direction of the War Department.

I also recall the bill for appointing such a board to report upon the Reed claim for the invention of projectiles; also the Woodbridge claim, of a similar character. No question of jurisdiction was ever raised on these cases, and this is the first time that objection has been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The amendment recommended by the committee provides for an appropriation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. TRACEY in the Chair).

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a proposition to authorize the War Department to appoint three persons to examine and report how much should be paid to certain citizens by reason of their land having been used by the Government for the building of a canal. It can not possibly involve any great sum; but in order that the matter may be fairly and justly adjudicated this bill was introduced.

It seems to me unnecessary to make any remarks, because no appropriation is proposed. These officers will simply examine and report what ought to be done; and if a small payment should ultimately be recommended, certainly no one will object to paying for land at the price which the agents of the Government say ought to be paid.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does not this bill contemplate the payment eventually of what are supposed to be damages?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Simply compensation for the use of the land, that is all. The Government has the matter entirely in its own hands; it is to say what it will pay; these people have nothing to say about it.

The canal was begun years ago, but was abandoned before its completion, and therefore no effectual steps were ever taken to acquire a title, and the parties have been in possession of the land and canal bed until a few years ago, when the Government took possession, completed the work, and turned water in the canal, and the owners of the land then applied for payment. I think water was run in the canal in the spring of 1889, about five years ago.

Before that was done the ditch was no very serious damage to the land, and the owners had it in possession and control, but since 1889 the land has been in possession of the Government.

It is not an old claim. The parties applied for payment as soon as the Government took it in charge five years ago. Many persons, under such circumstances, would be very unreasonable in their demands, but the people in their extreme liberality ask by the bill that the Government have its own officers fix and report upon the value of the land, and even then the bill does not require that even this small sum shall be paid.

I appeal to every member of this body to vote for this bill. It is the most just and moderate request which has been made this Congress. The amount of land involved is only a few acres, but small sums are important to these good people, and to neglect to give them a hearing would be a great wrong.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Did not you and your people want the canal at the time an appropriation was made for building it? Would you not have given all the land in Northern Alabama for the purpose of having that canal constructed?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think such a view should be taken. The Government built the canal to open a water highway from the Northwest and West to the Southeast. It is a great Government project for the benefit of possibly one-third of the United States. Certainly my friend from Tennessee will not contend that people are compelled to give their land away.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But we are not compelled to pay for it, either.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir; it would be a terrible doctrine to announce in Congress that the Government may take private property in this way and then not pay for it.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to suggest two amendments—first, to strike out the words "three persons" and insert "three officers of the Army"; and also to strike out the clause in italics at the end of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I think it is only fair to let the Government select the persons who are to serve on this commission.

Mr. SAYERS. But let the Government send its own officers to make this examination.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed.

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. I now move to amend by striking out in line 4 the word "persons" and inserting "officers of the Engineer Corps," so as to read "a commission of three officers of the Engineer Corps."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I have no objection to the purpose of the amendment; but I think it would be better not to say "officers of the Engineer Corps," because the Government might not be able readily to spare three such officers for this service. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he simply say "officers," and then let the Government send such officers as it may see fit.

Mr. SAYERS. All right; I modify my amendment so as to say "officers of the Army."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to strike out in line 6 the word "sustained" and insert the word "claimed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the amendment reported by the committee to add at the end of the bill the words:

That in case any person other than an officer of the United States Army is appointed on the board he shall be paid $3 per day for the time actually and necessarily employed in said work.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this bill as now amended can not accomplish any necessary or good purpose. As amended it is a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to report the amount of damages "claimed by the following citizens of Lauderdale County, Ala." Now, I suppose there is no question as to the amount "claimed." I take it these claims have already been filed, or they may be filed at any time. What is the use of going to the trouble and expense of sending army officers down into Lauderdale County, Ala., for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages that a man "claims" when he can at any time by a letter or petition give Congress that information?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The committee did not do this. It was done by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But the pith of the bill is all stricken out when we read "report upon the amount of damages claimed." Of course they are to report upon the amount of damage sustained, because the amount claimed could be ascertained without this commission at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. It seems to me that this commission can comply with the duties that are imposed on them by this bill as it now reads, when they return here a list of the claims that these gentlemen are asserting. That is all there is in it; and in my judgment we ought not to encumber the statutes with enactments of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is another committee amendment which has not been acted upon.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "report," in line 5, insert the words "to the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, I withdraw the motion that I made a few moments ago that the committee rise and report the bill favorably, because I think the phraseology of the bill had better be changed a little, since an amendment has been adopted in line 6. I ask to reconsider the vote by which the word "sustained" was stricken out of this line and the word "claimed" inserted.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then, how does the amended bill read?

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons to examine and report to the Secretary of War upon the amount of damages claimed by the following citizens of Lauderdale, etc.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to amend the bill by inserting after the word "claimed," in the sixth line, the words "to have been sustained;" so that it will read: "damages claimed to have been sustained." [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. That will not help it any.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, this amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman on my left suggests that I insert the word "and" in place of "to have been;" so as to read: "claimed and sustained."

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Wait a moment; there is objection.

Mr. MALLORY. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from the amendment just adopted the words "to have been" and insert "and;" so that it will read: "damages claimed and sustained by the following citizens," etc.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman could not insert the word "sustained," for it would be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That word has been inserted already by the committee, by consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been already inserted, on motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MALLORY. But the word "sustained" is not in there, Mr. Chairman. It was struck out by the amendment adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But it was put in by another amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

Mr. MALLORY. It was not voted upon.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The Chair stated when the amendment was offered that without objection it would be considered as agreed to, and there was no objection. The Chair then stated that the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. It was not put to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It was offered by the gentleman from Ohio, was stated by the Chair, and was adopted without objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that my motion be now put, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House as amended

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRACEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration bill H. R. 5930, had directed him to report the same to the House favorably, with certain amendments.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question on the amendments and the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, the question being on its passage.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAHON) there were—ayes 43, noes 18.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. MAHON and Mr. WHEELER of Alabama were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 15.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is made——

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made the point when the tellers were ordered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been amended——

Mr. REED. The previous question having been ordered on a bill, can it be withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, without unanimous consent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I think we will have to take the yeas and nays. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. MAHON as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 51, nays 90, answered present 6, not voting 204; as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COBB of Missouri, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HOLMAN, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOOLITTLE: A bill (H. R. 7753) to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the Interstate Fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILSON of Washington (by request): A bill (H. R. 7754) providing for the purchase of the railway and telegraph lines of the United States by the Government thereof—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRANCH: A bill (H. R. 7755) for the establishment of home or homes for the indigent colored people and colored orphans in the South—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: A bill (H. R. 7756) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collect information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital—to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 19, 1894.

Prayer by Rev. ISAAC W. CANTER, of the city of Washington.

On motion of Mr. MANDERSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 2d instant, information concerning the failure of due and prompt delivery of Senate mail; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimates for an appropriation of $28,560 for a new copper roof for the Pension Office building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the printing of the communication be made special, so that we may get it back by to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, a list of all judgments against the United States by circuit or district courts of the United States under section 11 of the act of March 3, 1887, providing for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States which have not heretofore been reported to Congress; which was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that a special order may be made for the printing of that document speedily. Let the communication and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I want it printed as quickly as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed, each with an amendment, the following bills:

A bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States; and

A bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers;

A bill (H. R. 2582) to authorize the appointment of James William Abert to the retired list of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Eugene Wells, late captain Twelfth Infantry and second lieutenant First Artillery, United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 4452) adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery; and

A bill (H. R. 6060) to amend section 4853 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of 28 citizens of Findlay, Ohio, and a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of Stockton Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Stockton, Cal., praying for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I present three separate memorials, one signed by a large number of citizens of Fulton County, in the vicinity of Farmington; another from the town of Sheridan, and a third from Watseka, all extensively signed by citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state, which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education, etc. As the bill to which this matter refers is now under consideration, I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM subsequently presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Savanna, Ill., remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state, which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5478) to authorize the Biloxi and Back Bay Ridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge over that portion of the bay of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi, known as Back Bay, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1686) granting a pension to Margaret English, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4322) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 636) granting the use of certain lands in Wallawalla County, State of Washington, to the city of Wallawalla for the purposes of a public park, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1688) for the relief of Enoch Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 528) for the relief of A. W. Wills, administrator, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2586) granting certain property to the city of Newport, Ky., reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report from the Select Committee on Ford Theater Disaster an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that this is to reach another case of those who were killed at the Ford's Theater disaster, the proof having just been made. We propose to add his name to the list of those who have been provided for in the amendment heretofore reported. I move that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2151) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, approved April 24, 1894, reported it with amendments.

PACIFIC RAILWAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution proposing an investigation by the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to report it without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

The SECRETARY read the resolution (reported by Mr. BRICE on the 13th instant from the Committee on Pacific Railroads), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Railroads be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, during any recess of Congress preceding the regular meeting thereof in December next, to make a personal examination of the roads and other properties of the bond-aided Pacific railway companies and their branches and the country through which they pass, or which is immediately contributory to their income, with a view to ascertaining their present status and their ability to pay their indebtedness to the United States, and how that indebtedness can be adjusted and paid. In pursuing their investigation said committee are hereby further authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable; and they shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer the necessary oaths, and to employ a stenographer and such clerical and expert assistance as they may deem necessary. Said committee shall have authority to cause its proceedings and testimony taken to be printed from time to time as they may see fit; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Any subcommittee appointed by the committee shall have all the powers of the full committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Where does the resolution come from?

Mr. BLACKBURN. From the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. FAULKNER. And indorsed by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought we had passed one or two such resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was referred to that committee—on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. FAULKNER. After having been reported from the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we are laying out a pretty big field for expenditure here.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

TARIFF STATEMENT.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report a comparison of the tariff act of 1890 and the bill H. R. 4864, as it passed the Senate, with the rates of said bill as it passed the House of Representatives, and of the Mills bill in 1888; which I ask may be received and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and ordered to be printed, if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2237) requiring a patent to be issued to Edmond A. Lorbeer of certain land in Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2238) for the relief of Edward M. Agee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2239) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KYLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL AGENTS OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the names of all persons acting in the capacity of special agents of the Treasury Department, designating the nature of the employment and the compensation of each such special agent.

BUREAU OF INFORMATION FOR IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if a station or bureau has been established on Ellis Island, in New York Harbor, or elsewhere on territory belonging to the United States or islands adjacent thereto, by the Italian, or any other Foreign Government, for the purpose of furnishing information to intended immigrants to this country on the subject of employment in the United States, if so, by what authority, and if the Government of the United States is bearing the expenses thereof, in whole or in part; also, that he be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all letters, communications, and documents bearing thereon in any manner.

FISH HATCHERY IN FAIRMOUNT PARK.

Mr. QUAY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the desirability of establishing a fish hatchery in the Zoological Gardens, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, Penn.

PROPOSED INCOME TAX.

Mr. HILL. Some time since I requested Mr. Worthington C. Ford, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, to make an estimate in regard to the anticipated revenue that might be derived from the proposed income tax. He has completed that estimate, and his statement contains much valuable information. It has been only partially published. I now present it, and move that it be printed as a document.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is complete now?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANDERSON. We had better have it printed in the RECORD, unless it will take too much space.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed as a document. That is better.

Mr. MANDERSON. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The statement will be printed as a document, in the absence of objection. It is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 73) for the relief of William J. Cornell and Joseph M. Cornell.

An act (S. 1694) granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitabo Railway Company the right of way through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian Reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6108) "making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their rspective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 9, 14, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 48, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 8, 11, 12, 13, 16, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 67, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$365,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$54,275;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$394,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Belize (British Honduras);" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and in lines 16 and 17, page 20 of the bill, strike out the words "eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$94,750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Commercial Bureau of American Republics, $10,000: Provided, That any moneys received from sale of the Bureau publications, from rents or other sources, may be paid into the Treasury as a credit in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Bureau."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES B. McCREARY,
ROBERT R. HITT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

JOHN M. RICE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 3978) for the relief of John M. Rice. I am sure it will not occasion a moment's debate, and there can be no difference of opinion about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800 to John M. Rice, to be in full of expenses incurred by him as contestee in the Forty-first Congress.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say, Mr. President, that this bill has passed the House of Representatives unanimously and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate. It simply allows $1,800 for expenses incurred in this contest. The party in whose interest the bill is to be passed had a contest for his seat in the House of Representatives, and it was decided in his favor. The contestant was paid $2,000 for his expenses, and the contestee has never been paid anything. The committee of the Senate has agreed to the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, allowing the contestant $1,800 for his expenses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severely read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers;

A bill (H. R. 2582) to authorize the appointment of James William Abert to the retired list of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Eugene Wells, late captain Twelfth Infantry and second lieutenant First Artillery, United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. 6060) to amend section 4833 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 4452) adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 126) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the meetings of the International Geodetic Association.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith the bill S. 1105, entitled "An act for the relief of Albert E. Redstone."

GROVER CLEVELAND

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 19, 1894.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1191) making an appropriation for the completion of the light-house at Cape Arago, in the State of Oregon. It is a local measure, which I think will occasion no debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must insist that we take up the Indian appropriation bill, and finish it. It is the only appropriation bill we have before us, and there will be no appropriation bill ready for the action of the Senate for two or three days, so that we shall have that time for the consideration of bills on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw his request until we can get the appropriation bill passed. I do not want to object to it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I withdraw the request.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I trust that those of the Senate who were not present during the concluding hours of the session yesterday will have an opportunity to understand what the question is, and I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," line 25, on page 49, it is proposed to insert:

That all lands heretofore constituting a part of the Puyallup Indian Reservation situated near the city of Tacoma, in the counties of Pierce and King, State of Washington, now held in severalty by the Puyallup Indians, patents to which have heretofore been issued by the United States to said Indians, said patents containing certain restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of said lands, are hereby declared to be the property and the estate of each of said allottees or their heirs in fee simple, free and clear of each and every restriction as to the sale, conveyance, or other disposition of the same heretofore imposed by the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That no sale of said lands shall be valid until the parties shall appear before the United States district judge in the district in which said lands are situated, and thereupon submit to him all the terms and conditions of such proposed sale for his approval, and if approved by such judge, he shall indorse his approval on the contract or other instrument evidencing such sale; thereupon such sale may be executed and completed in accordance with the terms and conditions so approved by said judge: Provided further, That the purchase price agreed upon, and as before mentioned, approved by said judge, shall be secured and paid as follows, namely, one-third of the purchase price shall be paid at the date of the final execution of said sale to said allottee, and the other two-thirds shall be secured by eight promissory notes of equal amount, each bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and payable, respectively, in one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight years from the date thereof. Said promissory notes and each of them shall be secured by a first mortgage and lien upon the land sold, and neither said notes nor said mortgage shall be assignable or transferable to any person whomsoever, but shall remain the sole property of said allottee and his heirs until the indebtedness of said purchaser is fully discharged in accordance with all of the terms and conditions herein.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not desire to tax the patience of the Senate at any length this morning, but I wish to call attention briefly to one point, which was not referred to in my remarks yesterday, and that is the language of the proposed amendment in reference to the times of payment. The impression conveyed by some of those who spoke yesterday might not have been quite in accordance with the terms of the amendment. Let me state them as found in the amendment itself:

One-third of the purchase price shall be paid at the date of the final execution of said sale to said allottee, and the other two-thirds shall be secured by eight promissory notes of equal amount, each bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and payable, respectively, in one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight years from the date thereof. Said promissory notes and each of them shall be secured by a first mortgage and lien upon the lands sold, and neither said notes nor said mortgage shall be assignable or transferable to any person whomsoever, but shall remain the sole property of said allottee and his heirs until the indebtness of said purchaser is fully discharged.

That provision in the amendment is in accordance with the suggestion and recommendation made by the Drake commission, which made a thorough examination of the Puyallup Indian Reservation and all the circumstances and conditions connected therewith. I beg to read a sentence from their report on page 24, as follows:

Our judgment is, that it would be promotive of their welfare (referring to the Indians) if Congress would, as a condition of the removal of the restriction in any case of a sale, require that the purchase money payable to an allottee should be deposited somewhere at interest, and be paid to him in annual installments, with interest, through such series of years as Congress should prescribe—we would suggest at least ten.

Two or three of those years have passed away since then, leaving about eight years now remaining, and certainly under the provision proposed there is no chance for the Indians to be defrauded, nor that they shall be left impoverished after a short time, as has been erroneously suggested, because they can not get the last of this money until after eight years. They can get only one-third of it when the sale is made, and one-eighth of the remainder thereafter for each of the eight years. They can not dispose of those promissory notes secured by mortgage. These Indians are absolutely protected in that way. After the eight years have expired, under the present law the Indians can alienate their property without any restriction whatever.

Is it not the best plan to permit them, under the supervision of the United States district judge, who is well acquainted with those Indians and with the reservation, who knows the whole history of it, a man who is persona grata to them, a man whom they admire, whom they choose, whom they desire—is it not best that this judge shall have the supervision, and that the other restrictions shall be made in the manner provided in the amendment? Would not the Indians in this way be amply protected, and is not that all that we want?

All we desire to accomplish by means of suitable restrictions is that these Indians shall be carefully guarded from wrong, from deceit, from fraud, from injustice, and this Drake commission over and over again in their report has testified to the character of those Indians, their intelligence, their cultivation, their schooling, their ability to read and write and to converse. All those things are stated over and over again in the report and collateral documents. I could read them for the edification of the Senate if it were necessary, but I think it is not necessary——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator let me read one sentence?

Mr. SQUIRE. I know the Senator might select some sentence, and in one place it is stated that these Indians are inclined to spend their money freely, which is probably true; but that is not truer of them than it is of many whites in that section of the country, and in other sections for the country. It is also stated in the report that these Indians know how to make good bargains.

If you do not give responsibility to people, you do not educate them in the line of their care for property. Intrust them with responsibility, intrust them with property, and they will learn to take care of it. That is true of Indians as it is of white men.

Mr. President, there are only two or three points of view to be noted carefully. The first, and the main one, is the suitable protection of the Indian afforded, as I have stated, by the terms of this amendment. First, the supervision of the United States district judge; secondly, the provision relating to their inability to alienate their land until after the lapse of eight years: that is to say, they can part with the title to the land, but they can part with the consideration therefor only gradually, and not entirely, until the entire eight years shall have passed; and, thirdly, the question what ought to be done relative to the interests fo the city of Takoma and the counties of Pierce and King, in the State of Washington.

The bulk of the property is unproductive; it is paying no taxes. Therefore the present situation is seriously detrimental to the people of those counties. The valley of the Puyallup is the most productive land in the county. Perhaps there is no more productive land anywhere when it is cleared and cultivated.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SQUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand from what I have heard of this debate, that the Government wants these lands sold, that the Indians want them sold, that the people there, especially in the city of Tacoma, want these lands sold, that a plan was devised by the committee a year ago to sell these lands, and that that plan has been a failure. If that be true, I am for adopting some other plan, and shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SQUIRE. I thank the Senator from Virginia for his good, hard sense and the decision to which he has come. I hope that the Senate generally will understand the matter in the same light as does the Senator from Virginia.

It is a fact—and I was coming to that—that the commission now there on the ground, going there in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress from three different States of the Union, far distant, far remote, thousands of miles away, going there entire strangers, undertake to know all about these Indians, to pick out the lands they shall sell, and say "You shall sell that, or you shall keep it," etc.

The law was passed, and it was the best we could do at that time. There is no reason for its continuance if it has not met our full expectations in the operations attempted under its provisions. Since the commissioners have gone there, as I understand, there has been absolutely no sale made and nothing done with respect to the allotted lands, except perhaps some surveys.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] yesterday said something indicating that he thinks the commission attended to the granting of patents of the lands to those Indians. I do not understand that they have anything of that kind to do. That business has all been disposed of, unless some adjustments as to the descent of the property of deceased Indians has required attention.

The patents were allotted in 1886. They were definite in number; there were 166 patentees at that time; and when the report of the Drake commission was made in 1891, 42 of those patentees had died, and probably to-day there are not 100 adult Indians remaining of those original patentees. True, there are altogether something like 600 men, women, and children constituting the entire population of that tribe of Indians.

The fact exists that this commission is not agreeable to those Indians. They state in their letters and dispatches, and they ask their representatives to protect their interests. They say, "We know the lands we want to sell, and we are able to make fair terms about them. If there is anybody going to supervise sales, let us take Judge Hanford, who is a man we respect and a judge whom we know all about; he will be fair."

If this commission had gone on and accomplished something in the way of sales of the allotted lands, if it were satisfactory to the Indians, I should not say a word. In that case, there would have been no effort to bring this question before the Senate of the United State at this session, but for the fact that progress is stopped because of the lack of coöperation and satisfaction on the part of the Indians in respect to this commission. That is the truth about it.

The commission has gone on, and, as I understand, has made some progress; but, as I am informed, that progress has been limited to its investigation, and, perhaps, to the arrangements that have been made by the commission in respect to the lands not allotted. The land not allotted is a very valuable tract of land, worth $585,000, which is reserved for agency, school, and cemetery purposes. The cemetery proper contains only 15 acres, being only a small portion of the large and beautiful agency tract of 585 acres, which was once appraised, as was stated here yesterday, at $1,000 an acre. The average value of the remainder of the land was appraised at a time when land of that character was held very high, on account of its suburban character, at $273.50 an acre.

Now, aside from the mere question of not having gone through the modus operandi of having the bill referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and having had their favorable report, there is nothing in the way. It is a mere question of technicality. It seems to me we all have sense broad enough to do the right thing. Why, after all, should Congress insist upon such a course as is detrimental not only to the Indians but to the white people of that country?

If the Indians will not sell their land to the commission, if they will not coöperate with the commission, why not make an arrangement whereby they will coöperate and under which they will go on and make the sale of the land and thus secure it for somebody who will cultivate it? The Indians can not even lease it now. It costs from $75 to $150 an acre, according to the report of the commission, to clear the land for agricultural purposes, and the Indians have not the means to do it.

When we send an ambassador to a foreign court we try to send a person who is pleasing to that court, in the technical language. Now, when we are talking about the Indians and are treating with them, why should we not send someone pleasing to them? If you are going to have anyone supervise their affairs, why not have some competent authority, who is pleasing to them, instead of a commission which is displeasing and with which and under which they will not act to carry out the purposes of the law?

The people of the city of Tacoma and the people of the county of Pierce wish that the land shall bear its share of taxation. There is no land in the vicinity of Tacoma equal to it for agricultural purposes except as you go further on in the valley. If you go in the other direction you have hill land, whereas this is very rich valley land, suitable for the cultivation of fruits and hops and all kinds of vegetables and market supplies and for truck farming. It seems to me that it is time that this millstone about the neck of that people and that city should be removed. Of course, we wish to act in a manner satisfactory to the Indians.

It seems to me that any objection which may be made here to-day can be only a technical objection, a mere question as to whether the Congress of the United States is going to maintain for an indefinite length of time this commission composed of three citizens from three different States, whom the people of the United States are paying to stay there, and whom the Indians do not want. Is it for the purpose of keeping men in office? Is that what you want to do? Is that why you decline to act upon this matter? Is it because the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Department of the Interior have condemned the proposition?

I think not. I do not think they have condemned it at all. I think the Interior Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs prefer to keep the control, perhaps. That is natural. What bureau officer did you ever hear of who voluntarily declined to maintain an existing state of things when his power of appointment would be interfered with by a change of the law? I have no doubt that the Department is interested in it. I have no fault to find with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I merely say that the people of the State and the Indians are primarily interested. What would a Senator from one of the States of the East think of me, for example, if he had an Indian reservation in his State of the importance of this one and a similar state of affairs, and I, on the ground of public policy or through some sentimental notion, should object, should say, "No, you do not know what you want; your people do not know what they want?"

I should defer to that Senator if he had an Indian reservation in his State under such circumstances. I should say "Probably you know what your people require; you know what is right about it; you ought to know. You have studied the affairs of your State, and the interests of all your people. At least the presumption is strong that way."

There is only one voice from the people there so far as I have heard from them. All the communications I have received have been in the line of seeking the accomplishment of this needful legislation. I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not object to the amendment. I know his heart is not against us. I believe from the remarks he has made in my hearing that, while perhaps I ought not to say he is in full sympathy with this movement, he sees the justice of our position. The objection is based on a question of technicality.

Now that he has administered the castigation which he did yesterday, and has vindicated the dignity of the committee so far as relates to their action in failing to indorse a matter which has not gone through the mill of the Indian Bureau and the Indian Department, and has cleared the skirts of the committee, it seems to me he can acquiesce in what seems to be the general desire on the part of Senators, irrespective of party, to allow the amendment. I know that as a general rule of courtesy the members of the committee stand by the action of the committee, and we have an uphill road as relates not only to the Committee on Appropriations, but perhaps also as to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Senators have heard what has been said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], and I have heard statements made to me by several others. I am sure the good sense of the Senate is in favor of the adoption of the amendment, if its members free themselves from unnecessary technicalities. The object to be accomplished is the substantial good of the people of the State of Washington, including the Indians of the Puyallup Reservation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a few words in favor of the pending amendment. I am quite sure an impression has gotten abroad in the Senate that the purpose of the amendment is to enable a lot of speculators to get some advantage of the Indians, and perhaps the impression still further obtains that if this amendment should be adopted it would have the effect of enabling men who are disposed to take advantage of the Indians to take advantage of these Indians. I am quite sure that if those impressions can be dissipated every member of the Senate, including the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will see the justice and propriety of the proposed legislation.

For one I do not believe there is any purpose on the part of the promoters of the amendment to get any advantage of these Indians. In the second place, if any such purpose exists in the mind of any person favoring the amendment, then it occurs to me that the proposed legislation on its face shows conclusively that no person would be able under it to get any undue advantage of these Indians, or any of them.

Mr. President, these are not a roaming band of Indians, or Indians of the plains. They are civilized Indians. We treated with these Indians forty years ago exactly. In 1854 the Government of the United States made a treaty with them, and the treaty on its face shows that the Government then supposed they were dealing not with wild savages, but with men who are civilized. They have been brought in contact with the whites for over seventy-five years. They and their ancestors first came in contact with the Northwestern Trading Company and subsequently with the people of the Hudson Bay Company. So, when in 1854 the United States came to treat with them, there were provisions put in the treaty, as Senators will find by looking at it, similar to provisions which we put in treaties with civilized nations. For instance, one clause in the treaty provided that these Indians should not go farther north than 101 miles across the waters of Puget Sound and the Straits of Fuca, for the purpose of trading with the Hudson Bay Company and other white traders in the British possessions. They were thus restricted by the provisions of the treaty. They had been in the habit of carrying on an immense trade there just as the whites subsequently carried on trade with the Hudson Bay Company and with the people of the great Northwest and the British territory.

Therefore I say provisions were put in the treaty not ordinarily put in treaties with Indians, because the Government felt and knew that they were dealing with civilized men. Under that treaty the Indians were to be paid a certain amount of money, $34,000, I think, in installments. The last installment fell due and was paid in 1875, and from that day to this the Government of the United States has never paid a dollar for the subsistence of these Indians. The Government has appropriated for their schools.

It is a notable fact in connection with this matter that these people have had schools on their reservation continuously for over thirty-odd years. When the children of the white settlers, the pioneers in that country, could not get three months' schooling, the children of the Indians had schooling ten months out of the year every year. That has been the case for over thirty-four years. Consequently they have grown up an intelligent, civilized people. As long ago as 1871 the agent in charge of the agency reported to the Department here that the Indians had acquired the habits of the whites, that they had the customs of the whites, and wore the costumes of civilized people, and even as long as thirty-one years ago they conducted schools there.

In 1875 the agent in charge reported that about three-fourths of the marriageable people belonging to that tribe were married according to the laws and the usages of the country, and there was a record made of their marriages. In all respects they had then conformed to civilized customs and civilized usages, and were virtually a civilized, intelligent, bright people. In 1885 the agent in charge made a report that these Indians were, in his judgment, better educated and infinitely better qualified to assume the duties of citizenship than one-half of the foreigners who came to this country and become citizens. That is the character of his report.

This, then, is the kind of Indians we are talking about. Now, is it likely, is it at all probable, that Indians who have had all these advantages, who have been in contact with the whites from their infancy, as these Indians have, and who have assumed all the habits of the whites, wearing the dress and conforming to the laws and usages of the whites, are going to be taken advantage of by a set of white men in any trade they may make with them? But I will come to that again. When the treaty of 1854 was made it was simply applying the provision of the treaty then existing with the Omahas, in which there was a provision that there should be a restriction in the deeds issued to the Indians to the effect that they should not sell their land for a certain length of time.

But there was this other provision, that the State at any time might, with the consent of Congress, remove the restriction. Why was that put in the treaty? It was done for some purpose, and the purpose evidently was to cover an exceptional case which might arise; just such a case as this is. It had some purpose. It was put in there for some purpose. It was evidently thought that a case might arise where the State in its good judgment, by presenting the matter to Congress, and getting the consent of Congress, would think the proper thing to do was to remove the restriction. Now, I undertake to say that this is such a case as was contemplated by the framers of the treaty when they inserted the provision, to the effect that the State might, with the consent of Congress, remove the restriction.

Here is a great city of between forty and fifty thousand inhabitants. This agency includes land which within the next twenty years will undoubtedly be covered by a portion of that city. It comes up to the very boundary of the city. According to one report it is within 1¼ miles of the city now, but I understand certain portions of the reservation come right up to the boundary or about that of the city. It is right there in sight. Those who are familiar with that country know the location of the reservation.

The State of Washington, I understand, by unanimous vote of the Legislature, on the 22d day of March, 1890, passed this act:

> Whereas all the conditions now exist which said treaties contain and which make it desirable and proper to remove the restrictions in respect to the alienation and disposition of said lands by the Indians, who now hold them in severalty: Now, therefore,
>
> Be it enacted, etc.,
> All deeds, conveyances, incumbrances, or transfers of any nature and kind executed by any Indian, or in any manner disposing of any land or interest therein shall be by deed executed in the same manner as prescribed for the execution of deeds conveying real estate, or any interest therein, except that the same shall in all cases be acknowledged before a judge of a court of record. In taking said acknowledgment, the said judge shall explain to the grantor the contents of said deed or instrument, and the effect of the signing or execution thereof, and so certify the same in the acknowledgment, and before the same shall be admitted to record shall duly examine and approve the said deed or other instrument.
> That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the consent to such removal of the restrictions shall have been given by the Congress of the United States.

There is the voice of the State removing these restrictions so far as it was in the power of the State to do it and calling upon Congress to give its consent. Here is the Senator from that State, who was governor of the Territory while it was in a territorial condition, and is perfectly familiar with all the conditions. He is here earnestly advocating and maintaining this proposed legislation.

Now, what is the objection to it? I presume it will be said that it would enable somebody to get some advantage of these Indians. I insist not. This proposed legislation is to the effect that no Indian upon that reservation shall be permitted to sell a foot of his land until the provisions of the contracts of sale, the terms, the amounts, everything connected with them, are submitted to the United States district judge of that State for his examination and approval.

Is there a Senator on this floor who believes that a man occupying a position like that will permit any advantage to be taken of these Indians by any speculative man, by any person desiring to obtain some undue advantage of the Indians? Certainly not. Then what is the objection to the amendment? In view of the fact that these lands lie right in the shadow of the great and growing city of Tacoma, is it not advisable that there should be some provision by which the Indians may be permitted to sell their lands?

Mr. HILL. The question has been raised as to the power to impose that duty upon the district judge. I should like to hear what the Senator has to say upon that point.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no doubt from the universality of the feeling on the subject that the district judge of Washington is perfectly willing to assume this obligation. He might not regard it as a duty that Congress had the absolute right to impose, but there can be no doubt that he would assume the duties. He has already indicated, I understand, that he is perfectly willing to assume the duties.

Mr. HILL. Can Congress impose any other than strictly judicial duties upon such an officer?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have already answered that question by indicating perhaps not; but other than judicial functions have frequently been conferred by Congress on the judiciary.

Mr. HILL. I only desire to hear the Senator's suggestion on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There may be some question about that so far as that is concerned; but, as I have said, I understand the judge is perfectly willing to perform the duty required. It is a matter that will not take any great deal of time.

Mr. DOLPH. If my colleague will allow me, I will state that it has often been done.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It has been frequently done.

Mr. DOLPH. For instance, in the appointment of inspectors of hulls and boilers a district judge of the United States acts in connection with the collector of the district and the supervising inspector.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not understand that there is a single solitary objection from any citizen of that great State to this proposed legislation. The only objection, if there is objection at all, is perhaps some suggestion from the Department.

I submit that the judge of the United States district court living in the State of Washington, performing his official functions in that State, perfectly and thoroughly familiar with these Indians, with their rights, with the value of the land and everything acquainted with it, without casting any reflection at all upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, is infinitely better qualified to judge as to what is the proper thing to do in reference to these matters than either the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, as far as that is concerned. There is a disposition, I suppose, on the part of the Department to hold on to everything connected with these Indian matters, especially the few offices connected with them, some commissioners to send out, etc., making some pap for somebody. That can all be dispensed with.

The legislation of the last Congress is a failure. It is a dead letter on the statute book. I understand that the Indians will never consent to the provisions of that law, and their consent is expressly required, as I found, after the remark I made yesterday, by an examination of the statutes providing for a limited sale of the lands.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I asked the question yesterday why the Indians would not consent. I did not get any very definite answer to the question. If the Senator from Oregon can inform me why it is that the Indians will not consent to sell their lands under the supervision of the commission that has gone out there I wish he would do so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There may be several reasons. In the first place, I understand under that statute the money is to be brought to Washington and deposited; that it is taken away from that part of the country. And there may be other considerations.

Another reason why the amendment should be adopted is because these valuable lands are there in that new State and not a foot of them is taxable to-day. The State receives not a dollar of revenue from these lands. They are not taxable as long as they remain tied up in the hands of the Indians.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take time, but I say, in view of all the facts, in view of the character of these Indians as to intelligence, and as to being able to take care of themselves, in view of the fact that these lands lie immediately adjacent to a growing city, in view of the fact that they are valuable lands and are not taxable at this time, in view of the action of the Legislature of the State, which is unanimous in favor of this proposed legislation, and in view of the earnest appeal of the Senator from that State, who understands thoroughly the whole situation, it seems to me that the amendment ought to be adopted. I am quite sure for one that if the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations could be fully satisfied that no advantage can be taken of these Indians, or would be taken of them under this proposed legislation, he would have no objection to the amendment; at least, I do not think he would, because I believe that is what is operating in his mind. He wants to do what is right, and he wants to protect the Indians. If I thought any advantage was to be taken of the Indians, or any of them, I would not support the amendment for one moment. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I will vote for the pending amendment for reasons which I shall attempt to give in brief fashion.

Some years ago in pursuance of an order of the Senate certain members of the Committee on Indian Affairs visited the Puyallup Reservation. They did so at the request of the Indians themselves. The members of the Committee on Indian Affairs at that time who were in the town of Tacoma were its very efficient and much beloved chairman of that day, Senator Dawes of Massachusetts, Senator Stockbridge of Michigan who has lately left us, Senator JONES of Arkansas, and myself.

The first communication we had with those men was in a room in the town of Tacoma to which we were invited. I remember how strongly we were all impressed with the fact that we were meeting men well able to care for themselves. They were dressed in the usual garb of the American citizen. They were intelligent men, evidently with business experience. I would no more hesitate to see them traffic and trade and have due regard for their own interests than I would hesitate to see the most intelligent white men do the same thing. They desired full citizenship. They urged upon us that they should be taken out of the strait-jacket the Government had imposed upon them; that the swaddling clothes should be taken from them; that they were no longer infants, but that they were able to stand up for their own rights and protect them.

They urged then upon us the action that is proposed in general terms by this amendment; that is, that they should be permitted to step outside of reservation limits as to their right to traffic; that they should be allowed to deal with those who wished to purchase their lands; that such of them as desired to sell might be permitted to sell without impediment and use the proceeds for the bettering of their condition. I for one saw no reason why that should not be done, and I think the unanimous feeling of those who were present, not only the members of the committe, but many white men who had gathered in to hear us, was that those Indians were able to stand upon their own feet and protect their own rights.

As the pending amendment is in that direction I shall vote for it.

Abundant reasons have been given by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], supplemented most ably by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], why this action should be taken.

Mr. President, how long is it to take in the natural order of things before an Indian is to be civilized? The object of our appropriations for the care of Indians, the purpose of all treaties which we make with them, is for their advancement in civilization, that they may become self-reliant, fairly educated, able to protect themselves.

The Indian in his natural state is no mean trader. Any man who has seen the Indians of the plains particularly and observed the traffic that they have between the members of the tribe and between different tribes is forced to the conclusion that the Indian is a good natural trader.

No commission goes out to treat with Indian tribes and gathers with their headmen in council chamber which does not find that they usually drive with the Government of the United States an extremely hard bargain. They stick persistently to that which they believe is proper to demand. Aye, they even go further; their demands will exceed that which they believe is proper; and they reach for all they can get.

I think that in this process of civilization we have thrown about the Indians too many safeguards. We have kept them too long in leading strings. We give them the rights of citizenship; we give them the right to vote, and they vote, too, in very large number in the State I have the honor in part to represent; and yet we throw around them none of the duties of citizenship.

There came to me within five minutes in my mail a petition of the board of supervisors of Knox County, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the taxation of land held by Indians in severalty. We allow Indians to take their lands in severalty; and we have said to the Indians who have thus taken the lands allotted to them "You shall not be permitted to alien these lands for twenty-five years; you shall not make contracts for sale." In many instances we do not permit them to make contracts for the leasing of their lands; and we do not permit them to pay their fair proportion of the local taxes they do so much to increase.

Mr. President, I will read a part of this petition before asking to refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs. At a session of the county board of supervisors held in Niobrara, Knox County, July 13, they passed the following resolutions unanimously, addressed to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas a large portion of Knox County, Nebr., covering about 120,000 acres of its most valuable land on what are known as the Santee and Ponca Indian Reservations, is held in severalty by Indians, and is therefore exempt from taxation; and

Whereas the fact that said Indian land so exempt works a great hardship to the taxpayers of said Knox County, as an expense of more than $4,000 has been incurred on said Indian reservation in the last three years for roads, bridges, and lawsuits caused by the Indian settlers residing on said reservation. One case alone, known as the State of Nebraska vs. Benjamin Joseph Young, incurring an expense to Knox County of $2,135.64, said Young being an Indian; and

Whereas, there is now a bill pending in Congress making such Indian lands subject to taxation: Therefore

Resolved, That we, the undersigned members of the board of supervisors of Knox County, Nebr., in regular session assembled, ask and pray that said bill or such other measure as may accomplish a similar object be enacted into law for the relief of said Knox County, Nebr.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the honorable Senators and Representatives of the State of Nebraska.

Signed by the members of the board.

And: the county officials S. Draper, county attorney; J. T. Lindsay, jr., clerk of court; Chas. Crockett, sheriff; B. F. Chambers, county judge; Aug. C. Filter, county treasurer; Chas. Van Camp, county clerk.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Knox County, ss:

I, Charles Van Camp, county clerk, and clerk of the board of supervisors, hereby certify that the above and hereto attached copy is a copy of the original resolution as it appears of record in my office.

Dated this 14th day of July, 1894.

[SEAL.] CHAS. VAN CAMP, County Clerk,
By P. B. CLARK, Deputy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON. In the State of Nebraska there is another county, Thurston County, having within it 250,000 acres of land; 240,000 acres are occupied by Indians. Part of it has been taken by them in severalty. They are citizens. They vote at every election. The vote of every individual Indian counts just as much as the vote of any white man within the State. The white settlers in that county occupy the remaining 20,000 acres of land. Roads are maintained, schools are established, bridges are built, courts are run, and yet this handful of white men living on the 20,000 acres foots all the bills incident to such expenditure, and the Indians who receive the benefit of that civilization pay no part of it. The expense of the county organization, I see by a report I have in hand, is between ten and twelve thousand dollars a year, and between eight and nine thousand dollars of it annually is caused by the needs of the Indians themselves and the needs of the land upon which they live.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is time for us to take steps in the other direction. With the rights and immunities of citizenship there should come some of the obligation and duties of citizenship. I think the best way to civilize Indians rapidly is to make them assume some of these obligations and get out from that condition of wardship and vassalage which keeps them as children.

For forty years, we are told, these Indians have been in contact with civilization in a greater or less degree. The good results of their residence near a thriving, growing Western town was readily seen when I visited them a few years ago. There is no reason, it seems to me, under the heavens why they should not be permitted to do that which they insist they ought to be permitted to do—traffic with their own, just as white men traffic with their own.

While I regret that this amendment has not had the consideration directly of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and while I regret that the legislation which has been had heretofore on the suggestion of that committee has not worked out its work, I shall vote for the amendment, believing it to be a move in the right direction, and I shall vote for it in the interest of the Indian himself as taking him rapidly yet safely out from under this condition of wardship to stand erect as an American citizen, exercising all the privileges of citizenship and at the same time paying his tribute and assuming his part of its duties and obligations.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the arguments urged in support of the pending amendment prove too much or too little. It is said that these Indians are intelligent, and that they are entirely capable of managing their own affairs. If that fact is established, why the remaining portion of the amendment? If it is established by logic, which I suppose ought to be regarded as irresistible, for it comes from a number of sources, that the Indians are entirely able to take care of their own affairs and manage their own property, and that the burdens of citizenship based upon property and intelligence, for those are implied, ought to be imposed upon them, why is it not done? The provision of the amendment which proposes to place the interests of these Indians under the extrajudicial authority of the judge of the district court concedes that they are not capable of managing their own affairs. Now, which horn of the dilemma will those who advocate the amendment take?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think, as far as I am concerned, and I only speak for myself, that it is simply a concession to the sentimentalism which exists on this side of the Rocky Mountains to a very great extent, I am sorry to say, and I think it exists owing to the fact that the people on this side of the mountains know very little about the Indians, their habits or customs or anything else, which causes a great many men on this side, and some Senators, perhaps, to think that the Government must in some way or other have a supervisory control over anything and everything that the Indians do, no matter how capable they may be to manage their own affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are as many Indians on this side of the Rocky Mountains as on the other side.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Oregon concedes entirely too much to us who live on this side of the mountains. In conceding so much to our sentimentality he belittles our judgment. An intelligent man on this side of the mountains is very much like an intelligent man on the other side of the mountains. We are not more humane than they. I do not think we have more liberality toward the unfortunate. But the fatal fact I have pointed out is conceded in the amendment.

I should hesitate very much before voting for the amendment, in view of the facts. There is a large and valuable tract of land almost adjoining the city of Tacoma, in Washington. I know it has been an object of very great interest. I know that gentlemen who speculate in lots and lands are exceedingly anxious to put their hands upon it.

I suspect very much that this is one of the schemes dictated much more by the cupidity of men who want to buy the lands than upon any theory of benefiting the Indians. That is my deliberate conclusion.

I realize the difficulty of watching the Indians in their transition from barbarism to civilization. In almost every instance, whatever may be said of Indian intelligence (and I was delighted with the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who has found the Indians to be so shrewd), I know as a matter of history that they have been the victims of white cupidity from the day that the Pilgrim fathers landed upon the rock until the present moment. I know that pretexts have often been urged to justify the habitual, constant, ever continuing, and never ceasing plunder of the Indians.

I insist that if the Indians are as intelligent as is claimed, that they themselves are capable of devising some system by which their lands may be disposed of for their separate and their common benefit. I distrust schemes which have been devised by benevolent white men, good men whose hearts bleed for the Indians, and who are longing to see them in the enjoyment of their rights. If these Indians are as intelligent as Senators claim them to be, why do not the Indians themselves devise some scheme for the sale of this land?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. They have done so, I can say in all candor to the Senator from Illinois. I live not very far away from Tacoma, and I understand from many sources that this proposition comes from the Indians.

Mr. PALMER. Then why is not this proposition coming from the Indians put in some authentic form?

Mr. MANDERSON. I fear the Senator from Illinois did not do me the honor to listen to the statement I made, that this suggestion, practically (not as to the detail of it, that the judge of the court should intervene by any process, but the proposition that they should be permitted to sell their lands) came from the Indians to the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs several years ago when a subcommittee of that committee visited them on their reservation at their request. There was no complaint from them which prompted the committee to visit them. The committee being in the town of Tacoma received an invitation from the Indians to go out and visit their reservation, and after that there was a talk in which they suggested substantially what is in the amendment, that they may be permitted to trade their land and act just the same as white men act with reference to their property.

Mr. PALMER. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska to-day with that attention which I always give to whatever he may choose to utter on the floor of the Senate; but after all the Senator from Nebraska is not able to make that definite and clear which is in itself indefinite and uncertain. The Senator has not relieved the difficulty I have suggested. It is said that here are lands which belong to a number of intelligent, educated persons, I take it for granted, upon the indorsement which has been given to them by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Washington. I understand they have had schools, and that they have had advantages not enjoyed even by the whites around them. Is it not remarkable that those people, thus educated, thus intelligent, are not capable of themselves formulating some scheme for the disposition of these lands, or some scheme for the disposition of their own rights?

Is it supposed that in the State of Washington a court would undertake to act upon information so vague? It is a matter of mere partition. The courts require that the parties in interest in such a case shall file some formal statement setting out their rights and asking judicial action in aid of the rights of the parties. But the Senate is asked upon mere rumor, without any authentic information from the only persons who own these lands, to formulate a scheme for them. Not a single name is here of one of these proprietors who approves this formulation.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. PALMER. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. SQUIRE. Of course it is impossible to arrange papers with reference to the action of Indians as we might do if they had the organization of white men sitting like chambers of commerce and boards of trade. But these do hold their meetings; they do confer; they do speak to their friends; they do write letters to their representatives in Congress, and even telegraph to them. We have all of that evidence, and in addition I remind the Senator that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] a few moments ago stated that when the Committee on Indian Affairs visited Tacoma and met these Indians for the purpose of listening to their statement it was exactly in the line of the proposition now submitted to the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I understand the difference between a town meeting, either of Indians or white men, where individuals express their wishes in regard to the common property and the formal presentation of a case by the Indians. The Senator from Nebraska has not yet gone to the extent of asserting that the tribe, or the Indians, or the persons who were interested in this property, submitted to the committee any formal plan for the disposition of their several or their common property.

This large interest—worth a million or more, I am told—has not been made a subject of deliberate thought by anyone, so far as we have authentic information, or by any number of the parties who are interested; but Senators mature a plan satisfactory to themselves by which these lands are to be referred to the large discretion of the judge of a district court, who is, I suppose, to devise a scheme for the sale of these lands or for recognizing the sales already made; and the time of payment is to be extended over the period of eight years, without interest or with interest, as the case may be. It is a juggling scheme, and obviously one that will admit of infinite injustice.

Senators are committed as to the intelligence of these Indians, and I submit in all seriousness, when it comes to a settlement of this question as to their property, that it is remarkable that that intelligence has never been consulted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. This is not the first time this matter has been up. During the last Congress the Puyallup Indians selected three of their most intelligent men, and instructed them to come to Washington to do what they could to secure some such legislation as this; and they did come here, and were here for a considerable time. They called on me personally and urged legislation providing for the removal of these restrictions.

Mr. CAFFERY. These Indians?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. These Puyallup Indians.

Mr. PALMER. There were a number of Puyallup Indians here during the last session of Congress. I met one of them and learned something of their general plans; but I knew nothing of their representative character, and there was no scheme matured, according to my recollection, so far as it was disclosed to me nor disclosed to the Senate.

The point I want to make is that these people who have attained this state of intelligence ought to be consulted, and that the Senate, before it practically breaks up the reservation and turns it over to the tender mercies of speculators, should have before it some authentic information as to the wishes of the parties interested. I would no more trifle with the rights of an Indian than with those of a white man.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator please inform me what were the restrictions for the alienation of the land held by the Indians in severalty by the terms of the treaty between them and the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. Twenty-five years. The words of the statute show upon their face that they were prohibited from alienation for twenty-five years. It was changed by a subsequent act to ten years, and two years of that time have elapsed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; two years have elapsed, and there are about eight years to run.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Louisiana, I trust, is answered.

I say I would treat the rights of these Indians with the same respectful care that I would the rights of every man or woman, white or black, and I would not do so important a thing as practically to remove the power of alienation, subject to this cumbrous machinery, which does not by any means, to my mind, insure a careful regard for their rights. I would not consent to do it, because it may be and probably will be abused in its administration.

Therefore I complain, as I have done before, of the loading down of appropriation bills with these special provisions. This amendment is not germane to anything contained in the bill. It is simply thrust in here because of the occasion.

I suppose it is an occasion which grows out of the loose interpretation of the rules of the Senate. It is thrust in here, because if it were presented singly and separately, certainly something more would be required from those who advocate it than these loose declarations by means of which the rights of the Indians are to be affected in a most important degree. I would not submit to it in the case of white or black men, and I see no justice in the application of it to these red men. Consult them; let them make their own schemes for the disposition of their property, and after the matter has been deliberately settled and decided by them, it will be time enough for Congress to act. It is said they are intelligent. Then let Congress express its approval of what they have themselves determined upon after a full consideration of their rights and the value of the interests affected.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, one of the main objections made to the amendment consists in the fact that by its terms the ratification or approval of the contract is left to the judge of the district court, which is a mere descriptio persona, and makes it a duty imposed on an individual, which he may or may not accept. To avoid that criticism upon the amendment, I have prepared an amendment which I submit for the consideration of the friends of the measure, by striking out and interlining the amendment, so that it will read:

That no sale of said lands shall be valid until the parties shall appear by petition before the United States district court of the district in which said lands are situated, in term time or vacation, and thereupon submit to said court all the terms and conditions of such proposed sale for approval, and, if approved by such court, the approval thereof shall be indorsed on the contract or other instrument evidencing such sale; thereupon such sale may be executed and completed in accordance with the terms and conditions so approved by said court: Provided further, That the purchase price agreed upon and as before mentioned, approved by said court, shall be secured and paid, etc.

The Senator from Illinois criticises this amendment because he says there is no evidence that the Indians want this mode of selling their lands, and by implication he agrees that if the Indians were here ratifying and consenting to this mode of selling the lands, he would not object to it. If this amendment be adopted, there can be no sale of the land belonging to any given Indian without the approval of this plan by the Indian, because the first step to be taken must be a contract between the purchaser and the owner of the land, and when that contract is made, which goes before the district court, it is an approval of the plan set out by this amendment; and I make it necessary to go into court, because that imposes an additional judicial function upon that court which the court is obliged to discharge. I believe my amendment is satisfactory to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SQUIRE. I will modify my amendment in the way suggested by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington will be so modified.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary for me to add anything to the full presentation of this case by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] and by my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon], but I do not like to let a statement made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], which I can not repeat verbatim, but which was substantially that the Indians have been the victims of the cupidity of the white people of this country from the time this continent was discovered up to to-day, go without some answer.

When this continent was discovered, it was occupied by straggling Indian bands, who did not cultivate the soil, who lived by fishing and hunting, who were engaged in perpetual warfare, and if they had been permitted to occupy this continent undisturbed until this time, all the then great undeveloped resources of this continent would have remained undeveloped, and the continent would have been still as unfit for the habitation of civilized man to day as it then was.

Whoever asserts that the Indian tribes had the same equitable and just rights to the soil of this vast continent that civilized nations have to the territory they occupy, is governed by sentimentality, and not by reason.

The causes which brought about the settlement of this continent by civilized man, and which have impelled the wave of civilization which has swept from the Atlantic to the Pacific, were as imperative as the causes which impel the planets in their orbits. The principle which was early established in this country by this Government, and upheld by the courts, that the lands of this country belonged to the discoverer, that the United States would not permit individuals to purchase title to lands from the Indians, but would itself extinguish the Indian title and sell the lands, was a just, a proper, a reasonable, and the only practical solution of this question.

Whatever may have been the character of the dealings of the colonies with the Indians, or whatever may have been the character of early treaties between this Government and the Indians, since I have been old enough to know anything about the transactions of the Government with the Indian tribes, those tribes have been paid whenever we have purchased their lands, not only the full value, but in many cases double or even treble the value of the land, and to-day and ever since I have been in this body, whenever Congress authorizes a railroad company or a ditch company to acquire a right of way over an Indian reservation, instead of allowing a jury to determine the value, the companies are compelled to treat with the Indians, and that treaty has to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. So far as my observation and knowledge go, the result is that the Indians receive two or three times the value of the rights acquired.

Besides that, we have been annually for many years appropriating large sums of money for the education and support of the Indians, largely for sentimental reasons. I do not know how much the pending bill carries, but six or seven million dollars, I believe, for an Indian population of 250,000 in the United States, many of whom are self-supporting.

These Indians upon the Puyallup Indian Reservation are to-day worth individually and collectively many times what the same number of white American citizens would be worth if all the wealth of this country should be divided and distributed per capita.

You may take all the Indians upon all the reservations in the United States and they have more property and they are worth more money to-day than the white citizens of the United States would be if the property of this country were to be divided per capita among them.

Mr. President, I think we are making a mistake. I believe that the Indian Bureau—I do not speak particularly of its conduct here in Washington, but including the agencies and schools—has become topheavy. I believe there are too many employés for the services to be performed. I believe that the enthusiasm and the sentimentality of the people who are advocating Indian education have caused us to enter upon too elaborate a system of Indian education.

The education the Indian needs is a practical education; he needs an industrial education; he needs to be taught how to work, how to utilize his means, how to cultivate his land. He needs to be instructed in the duties of citizenship, and his book education ought to be that which will tend to fit him for these practical duties. I have always, however, voted for the largest sums for Indian education. If there have been wrongs in the past against the Indians I am willing to help make amends now to the present generation, and this Government is dealing with the Indians with a liberality unparalleled in the history of any country.

A few years ago this Government, after failure to civilize Indians by the course which was being pursued, after the expenditure of large sums of money, and when it became apparent that the reservations must be cut down, that they must be opened to the settlement of white men; that they must give away before the advance of civilization, determined to adopt a new policy, a policy of allotting lands to the Indians in severalty and making them citizens, giving them, when the lands were allotted, the right to citizenship, but absolving them from many of the duties of citizenship, giving them a right to vote, but exempting their lands from taxation and exempting them from the necessity of educating their children, proposing to still continue to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for their education, and passing no sufficient laws for the purpose of compelling them to cultivate their lands.

For fear that they would not be able to take care of their lands when they were taken in severalty, and might be defrauded out of them, a general rule was proposed in the law for the allotment of lands in severalty that the lands should not be alienable for twenty-five years. As a general rule that was a necessary precaution, but that prohibition can not be continued indefinitely.

The sooner the Indians are absorbed in the body politic the better; the sooner the duties of citizenship are imposed upon them the better; the sooner their children are sent to the district schools with the children of white citizens the better; and we shall never be able to solve the Indian problem until that is done.

Mr. President, the limitation of twenty-five years was a reasonable limitation probably, as a general rule, for all the Indian reservations in the country, but here is an exceptional case. Here are Indians who have been educated at the expense of the Government for a generation; here are Indians who have been in close contact with the whites for half a century; here are Indians, according to all the testimony, who are civilized and enlightened and intelligent; and their case was so exceptional that a few years ago Congress passed an act that their lands might be alienable at the end of ten years more. They were allotted in severalty about eight years ago. That would make about sixteen years that they would be required to hold their lands in this condition.

As has been said, this reservation is valuable. It lies right abutting one of the great growing cities of the West, and there is not a Senator upon this floor, if this was a case of a city in his own State, who would not see the justice of removing this bar to the settlement of these lands and expansion of that city; who would not see the justice of doing something which would secure the cultivation of the lands and the addition to the wealth of the State which would be caused by their cultivation and productiveness, and who would not see the justice of subjecting them to taxation.

This is a good case to make an experiment with. This is a case of a tribe of Indians far more advanced in civilization than many of the other tribes in the United States will be at the expiration of the twenty-five years after they have got their patents to their lands. This is a case in which the rule that the land shall not be subject to alienation for twenty-five years might be relaxed, and we can see what the effect will be of allowing these Indians to sell their lands, of allowing white men to go upon the lands within this reservation and build homes and cultivate the lands and establish schools, and of allowing the children of the Indians to go to the public schools with the children of their white neighbors. Let us experiment with this case, and then we shall know better what to do with the other tribes when the twenty-five years' limitation upon their power of alienation has expired.

The Indians want it. They have come here to present their case to Congress. Like my colleague I met them and I heard their story; like my colleague I have been interviewed by the authorities of Washington and of the city of Tacoma. I know the situation well. I have been for many years personally acquainted with the most excellent agent formerly on that reservation, and I know that all that has been said about the intelligence of these Indians, about the propriety of placing upon them some of the duties of citizenship when we have given them the privileges of citizenship, is true.

The Senator from Illinois complains about the eight years deferred payments. I hope Senators will observe that the eight years of the deferred payment make up the eight years that are to yet run under the existing law before these lands will be alienable. That provision is placed there for the benefit of the Indians. It is provided that neither the notes nor the mortgage shall be negotiable, but that this money shall be paid to the Indians. It is a proper provision to prevent the money being squandered and these Indians being left penniless; I think it is a very wise provision.

I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment is absolutely indefensible under all the circumstances that exist. Some three or four years ago there was a contract made with these Indians by certain parties who wanted to buy certain parts of this land, and as I remember the contract—I do not undertake to state it accurately—but as I remember, it was a contract to lease the lands, and they had the authority to lease it for one or two years, and the leases were to be renewed indefinitely at the expiration of each lease, and by the operation of the paper that was given at the time, it was to revive itself and carry on the leases indefinitely until such time as the Indians should be allowed to dispose of their land absolutely, when the conveyance was to become absolute, and convey the property without further action on the part of the Indians.

It seems to me that if there is any effect whatever in this amendment, it is to make the approval of this contract, made between these people and these Indians three or four years ago——

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. Does the Senator believe that those contracts could be enforced under the law by any court of competent jurisdiction? Does he believe that contracts of that kind would be in accordance with public policy?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have heard some of the best lawyers of my acquaintance say that those contracts could be enforced. Those contracts I believe would be void. I do not believe they could be enforced; but why do you now propose to make an amendment here that would start this controversy? Why do you want to begin this sort of thing? There are people who, as I said awhile ago, are much better lawyers than I, who believe that these contracts can be enforced whenever the time shall come that the Indians have the right to convey absolutely; but if I should be wrong, and these better lawyers than I am should be right, it would be then too late to undertake to protect the Indians from their own indiscretion.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator allow me to interpose a word there?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I believe it is generally admitted now that there is no intention to try to enforce those contracts. It is so understood, at least, by those who have communicated with the Representatives in Congress here, who are getting communications from the people of Tacoma, and who tell me, privately of course, that it is not proposed to endeavor to enforce these contracts. The legislation I now propose is to cover the proposition of new contracts.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me ask the Senator, in that connection, have those contracts made with these Indians been returned by the parties?

Mr. SQUIRE. I am not informed as to the details.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Until the contracts have been returned, we can not get rid of the assumption that this thing is being done for the benefit of those parties. It seems to me it would be easy enough for them to put the information in the hands of their friends that these contracts had been given up and canceled, for if they remain in existence it would be an exceedingly improper thing, in my opinion, for Congress to do anything which would make it possible that there should be any controversy about their ratification.

Mr. SQUIRE. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas whether under existing law, relating to the action of the commission which is now in existence and is there in communication with the Indians, whether the suggestion as to the legal status of these contracts would not be equally applicable in case of contracts made under the supervision of that commission exactly as it would be in the case of the United States district court? Would there be any difference in regard to that feature of the matter? Not a particle. Then, again, let me say to the Senator that I do not believe any very great injustice would have been done the Indians if those contracts had been carried out. I have not gone into the details of that, but the Drake commission state in their report that for 9,000 acres or thereabouts the sum of $700,000 was to be paid practically in cash or nearly cash.

That sum of money distributed among 140 or 150 of these patentees (and there was not that number at the time the commission was there; there were then 166 less 42, leaving 124 patentees) would give each one of them an average of between five and six thousand dollars. Even then they would have had a great part of the allotted lands, nearly half, still left, besides the agency land, 585 acres of which were ascertained to be of the value of $1,000 an acre. Under such circumstances how is it possible to bring up this matter as an objection to the amendment? I can not see how it can be done with any show of reason. The Senator imputes a motive for the proposed legislation that, I am satisfied, does not exist. It is not right to assume for one moment that the beneficiaries of the proposed legislation would be the persons who made those contracts with the Indians several years ago, which he himself now believes are of no force or effect. It is quite doubtful if the Indians could make at the present time so large a sale of lands on such favorable terms.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from Washington will allow me to interrupt him long enough, I will suggest that there certainly is a difference between him and the people who undertook to negotiate this arrangement, because they have made most extraordinary efforts to have a ratification or to put this matter in such shape that it should be ratified. These extraordinary efforts would not have been made if there had not been some result to come to somebody in connection with it. I have very little doubt that those men are more familiar with the facts and know the value of this property better than does the Senator himself from his own personal inspection.

But I wish to state, in connection with some other statements which have been made here, that this question has been before Congress in one shape or another for years. Contracts after contracts with the Puyallup Indians have been brought here for ratification. They have been brought here to be examined. Committee after committee has been sent to the Puyallup Reservation to investigate the facts. I myself on two occasions have gone to the reservation for the purpose of examining the statements on the one side of the alleged greatest fairness and of the friends of the Indians on the other of the greatest unfairness.

I was with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] at the time of which he has spoken, when we were at Tacoma some years ago with Senator Dawes and Senator Stockbridge. There was one striking circumstance in connection with the meeting we had there then. We did not meet the Indians over on the reservation. The proposition was that we should meet them. We met them in a hall in the city. There were in the hall more of the real estate people who live in Tacoma than there were Indians. There were perhaps a dozen Indians, well dressed and intelligent, who were there to speak for their people, and they were all exceedingly anxious that they should be empowered with the absolute disposal of their property and should be allowed to do what they pleased with it.

I have never seen a man, I do not care how weak-minded he is, who would believe he was incapable of taking care of himself and defending himself; but I was satisfied by what I saw that night that those people would be absolutely helpless if they could alienate their property, and they would soon find that they did not know half so much as they supposed they did. They were surrounded by people who knew a great deal more. I left the room that night with the firm conviction that if we did not intend that the Puyallup Indians should become paupers, while they have one of the most valuable reservations on this continent, we ought to be exceedingly careful about allowing them to have the absolute disposal of their property while their surroundings were such as they were then. I have not changed my opinion on that point.

There are some other things in connection with this matter. The statement has been made here that these Indians are men of high character, that even as far back as 1854 they were evidently men of great intelligence. Now, there are a good many circumstances connected with this matter, and I recall just now one in particular, which prove very clearly how thoroughly these people understand the force of a moral obligation; and I say, to their credit, that they have shown the highest sense of obligation.

On one particular occasion a good man went down there and made a contract with them by which he got certain valuable rights. He had succeeded, I believe, in getting a bill passed through Congress for its ratification, provided the Indians approved it by a majority of their male adults. When that was done the present Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was then an Indian inspector, was sent on the reservation for the purpose of holding the election. After he had talked to the Indians for some time, one of them stated that he was inclined to vote against the proposition, but that he supposed he could not. The inspector asked him why he could not so vote.

He said because the gentleman (calling his name) had given him two dollars and a half to vote the other way. When the election was held the next day, with the party in interest at one end of the table and the Indian inspector at the other, more than half of these people went in there and put down on the table their money, from $2 to $6, as I remember, returning it to the man who gave it to them, and voted the other way. That is a pretty high degree of morals. I have heard of cases of that sort, where such things have been done in this country.

Mr. SQUIRE. It shows the Indians had good sense and good morals.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It shows that these people are influenced by considerations which ought not to influence them. It shows that they have no conception of the value of what they possess, and that they ought not to be trusted with the absolute control of it.

The truth is that this reservation and the city of Tacoma lie side by side. A straight line divides the city of Tacoma from the reservation. The Indians have the water front on that great bay, which is invaluable. Nobody can estimate its true value.

I am willing for all of that property to be disposed of and to have it go into the hands of citizens of the United States to be used for the purpose of building up cities and so on; but I think it ought to be done with care and circumspection. It ought to be kept under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior and the Government of the United States until they know that justice has been done and that such arrangements have been made with regard to these Indians as will prevent them from becoming paupers; and money enough should be kept in their hands to support the Indians and educate their children and their children's children after them.

I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment. I think it is utterly wrong in every respect.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the necessity exists which compels me to talk on this case, and to talk plainly and frankly. The question before the Senate is not whether a distinguished gentleman shall be renominated for Congress. It is not a question whether Senators' importunities shall prevent other Senators from speaking and voting their honest sentiments and convictions. It is a question as to the present status of these Indian matters, and why shall they be changed?

In the first place, the Puyallup Indians had their lands allotted to them in severalty, except a certian reservation, and there was a clause in the deed prohibiting the alienation for twenty-five years. That was before the town of Tacoma was built up. Then the city was located there. It has extended its borders right up against the reservation, against the part held jointly and the allotments. Now, the people of Tacoma are very anxious to get it. They want the town to extend in that direction, and for years efforts have been made to get the disposition of the lands into the hands of the individual Indians. The proposition in different forms has been here before Congress for years. By the law of August 19, 1890, a commission was appointed. I will read from that law, as I wish Senators to understand exactly the situation. By the act of August 19, 1890, President Harrison was authorized—

To appoint a commission to consist of three persons, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, and not more than one of whom shall be a resident of any one State, whose duty it shall be to visit the Puyallup Reservation, in the State of Washington, and to make full inquiry and investigation regarding such reservation; the nature of the title to and value of the lands allotted in severalty; whether there are any common lands which have not been allotted, and if so, the value of the same, and of the interest of the Indians therein; whether such reservation embraces the land on Puget Sound, between high and low water mark; whether any restrictions now existing upon the power of alienation by Indians of their allotted lands should be wholly or in part removed; as to the manner in which lands shall be disposed of when the Indian allottees shall be vested with power to dispose of their individual tracts; in what manner, if at all, individual Indians shall be indemnified for damage to their individual holdings, if railroads shall be granted a right of way through the reservation; in what manner the tribe shall be compensated for the damage consequent upon the granting of such right of way through any tribal or common lands belonging to said reservation; in what manner and by whom the legitimate heirs of deceased allottees shall be determined; under what circumstances and upon what conditions contracts have been obtained from Indians for the sale of their allotted lands; and regarding all other questions and matters bearing upon the welfare of said Indians, and the wisdom or necessity of the disposal by the Indians of their interest, in whole or in part, in any individual or tribal lands belonging to said reservation.

There is the law. A commission was selected by President Harrison, composed of whom? I will read the names of the members of the commission. The members were Charles D. Drake, once a Senator from the State of Missouri, and for many years chief justice of the Court of Claims; George B. Kincaid, and B. F. Harness. They made a full and elaborate report. What do they say as to the condition of these Indians, and so on? I suggested the reading of their report on this point, but the Senator from Washington did not want to hear it at that time.

With every kind feeling toward the Puyallups, we can not disregard the testimony of many who know them well, that they have no just appreciation of the value of money, are prone to squander it, and many of them are easily duped, and many are prone to strong drink.

Mr. SQUIRE. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. COCKRELL. From page 23.

Such being the case our judgment is, that it would be promotive of their welfare if Congress would, as a condition of the removal of the restriction in any case of a sale, require that the purchase money payable to an allottee should be deposited somewhere at interest, and be paid to him in annual installments.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is that not exactly what I ask the Senate to do?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; but the Senator wants it left in the hands of the Indians, and not in the hands of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me? I am glad the Senator read the extract from the report, but I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether at any place in the report the commission report against removing the restrictions?

Mr. COCKRELL. They do not report against removing the restrictions, but they suggest a modification to ten years. If the Senator will wait I will cover the whole ground, so that there will be no necessity for any questions to be asked.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the finding of the commission?

The first question, and in our opinion the highest in immediate importance, is connected with their disposal of their lands. We have shown that the total amount agreed to be paid them for the lands which they have contracted to sell is about $700,000, all of which is to be paid them within ninety days, or other short period, after the restriction is removed.

For how much land? If the Senator from Connecticut is correct, and according to my recollection, it is estimated to be worth about $4,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. Four million seven hundred thousand dollars in all, and more than half of this land was contracted to be sold.

Mr. COCKRELL. More than half of the land was contracted to be sold. I wish to read from pages 82, 83, and 84 of the report of the commission. Let us find what the commission recommend. They give a table showing the number of acres which each Indian ought to keep, the number of acres he ought to be allowed to sell, the value of the land, and the value of the land to be sold.

The aggregate number of acres which the commission recommend the Indians should keep is 4,684.27, and its value is $1,419,224.70. Much of the land was appraised, some at $350, some at $425, some at $500, some at $200, and some at $250 per acre.

Now, what did they say could be sold? They stated that the quantity is 12,778.45 acres. What did they appraise it at? They appraised it at $3,322,184.50. Some of that land was appraised at $500 per acre, some at $1,000 per acre, some at $700 per acre, some at $400. Scarcely any of it was appraised below $50 an acre.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator from Missouri kindly state how the appraised values were arrived at?

Mr. COCKRELL. They were arrived at by the three disinterested commissioners selected by President Harrison, men of the highest character and standing.

Mr. SQUIRE. How did they arrive at the values?

Mr. COCKRELL. They arrived at them from information derived from the people there.

Mr. SQUIRE. They took thirty people in that vicinity, perhaps some of them land-owners or speculators, who valued land highly and took their estimates.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. As a matter of course the commissioners went to the honest, good citizens there and asked them to tell the commission how much the land was worth; and this is their report of the result.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is it not true that at that time the prices of real estate were very high, abnormally so?

Mr. COCKRELL. Will they not be so again?

Mr. SQUIRE. I hope so.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the justice of compelling a sale now at depreciated prices?

Mr. SQUIRE. There is no compulsion to sell.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the question.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Indians have never had an opportunity to sell the land at that appraisement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is the list of the tracts contracted to be sold and the amount contracted to be paid for each. Here is tract No. 3. It contains 120 acres and was appraised at $60,000. Eighty acres of it were contracted to be sold for $8,000. A tract of land appraised at $40,000 and under contract to be sold for $8,000! Senators may run through the list. Here it is. Each tract is given and the price, and the difference between the appraised value and the price at which each tract was contracted to be sold corresponds in about the same proportion.

This was the condition at that time. Here is a commission appointed by President Harrison, reporting back to Congress a full statement of their report. Their report is given in full in Senate Executive Document No. 34, Fifty-second Congress, first session. All the facts are there set out.

Now, what did Congress do? An effort was made to permit the Indians to sell their lands. What was the result? I will tell you. I shall not take time to read the law, but in the act passed in the last Congress, when the Senator from Washington was a member of this body with his colleague, provision was made for the appointment of a commission of three persons, almost in the same language as the other act.

That commission was to go there and to divide the lands adjoining the city of Tacoma into town lots, to lay off streets and to sell the lots. It was to ascertain how much land each allottee could part with, to appraise it, and then to sell it. It was to put into the hands of the Indians such part of the money as would be necessary and to deposit the rest in the Treasury, so that interest upon it could be paid to the Indians. There was the condition; that was the result.

We have been remarkably friendly to the good people Tacoma in these provisions, in granting extensions. In that law we limited the period in which the Indians should not alienate the land to ten years instead of twenty-five. We struck off fifteen years from the time specified in their patents during which the lands should not be sold and reduced it to ten years. Nearly eight years of that time has yet to run.

The commission was authorized to investigate the whole question from beginning to end, to settle the matter, and to lay this land off into town lots and sell them; that is, the land held in common. It was then to determine how much each allottee should sell, the price at which the land should be sold, and to sell it subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. So it was an open transaction, and everybody could know it and understand it. There could be no very great delay, and no delay which would be deleterious to the Indians in the depressed condition of real estate there and elsewhere.

Why was the commission appointed? It was in consequence of the recommendation of Secretary John W. Noble, a man certainly not inimical to the people of Tacoma and certainly disposed to do justice to the Indians. He says in his letter of transmittal of the report of the Drake Commission:

> In view of all the facts set forth in the report of the Commission and the other communications herewith transmitted, I have the honor to recommend that Congress be advised to authorize the appointment by the President of a commission of three, no more than two of whom should be of any one political party, to appraise, in appropriate parcels, the lands determined best to sell, and to superintend the sale, at not less than the appraisement, at public auction, on due notice; the appraisement and sale to be subject to approval of the Secretary of the Interior: to attend to the matter of ascertaining, through the proper courts of Washington, who are the heirs of deceased allottees, and have guardians appointed for minors: to make deeds of the lands to the purchasers thereof, which, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall operate as a full conveyance of the land, subject to such terms of payment as may be authorized by Congress: to obtain the full value of this land the trustees should be authorized to sell either for cash, or, in case the purchaser desires it, for one-third cash and the balance in one and two years, with notes secured on the land sold, bearing interest at 5 per cent per annum: the whole amount, as collected, to be placed to the credit of the individual Indian entitled, and to be paid to him in such sums and at such times as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may determine best.

That is what that commission was appointed for. The commission was appointed by President Cleveland in September last and is now upon the ground discharging the duties imposed upon it.

I wish to read something about the commission. I hold in my hand a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, dated May 5, 1894. The Commissioner says:

> On October 30, 1893, a commission consisting of three individuals was appointed by the President to select and appraise certain portions of the lands in the Puyallup Indian Reservation, in said State, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., 612). The Commissioners were instructed on November 6, 1893, the instructions being approved by the Department, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees; and also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes in the Puyallup Indian Reservation, and when the agency tract shall have been selected to plat or cause the same to be platted under their direction and supervision into streets and lots as an addition to the city of Tacoma, and appraised at a certain value per lot, to obtain the written consent of the Indians in a certain manner to the sale of the same at a sum not less than the appraised value thereof, which written consent should constitute the said commission, or a majority thereof, trustees to sell said lands and make deeds therefor.
> The commissioners were given full and explicit instructions in the premises and furnished with all the information in the possession of this office pertaining to the matter under consideration with a view to carrying out the provisions of the act last mentiond, to which I also specially invite your attention. The mission of those commissioners is one of great importance, not only to the Indians themselves, but to the city of Tacoma and State of Washington, and in fact to the whole Western country; and it is confidently believed that they will bring to the consideration and adjustment of the matter the most careful, intelligent, and conscientious judgment and from recent reports as to their labors it is thought that they will, in all probability, meet with success in their mission.

I read from another part of the same report:

> It appears from information in possession of this office that certain parties at Tacoma, Wash., and in the vicinity thereof, are using their influence and putting forth certain efforts to prevent the Indians from giving their consent to the sale of the allotted lands, and to retard, in various ways, the progress of the work of the Puyallup commissioners among the Indian allottees.

Do the good people of Tacoma want this land sold at public auction to the highest bidder? Do they want these reserved lands laid out into town lots, with streets and alleys, and the lots sold to every man with a fair chance? If they do, then they want the commission to continue. If they want to get some advantage of the Indians, the only way they can do it is to destroy the commission and place the matter in other hands.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, if he will permit me. Does he think the best way would be to advertise and have a public sale of lots to the highest bidder in the manner he has described, or would the more prudent and thrifty way be for individual owners of land to make sale in the best way they can? Why make a difference in this respect between the white man and the Indian? Why sell the Indian's property for him when he does not want to sell it, and not let him sell that which he wants to sell?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt but there are from fifty to one hundred town sites in the State of Washington that have been sold at public auction after flaming advertisements all over the States, and as a rule they bring higher prices in that way than any other.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to state most emphatically that the Senator is in great error. I have never heard of such a sale in the State of Washington, and I do not believe the Senator ever did. He is certainly drawing on his imagination very largely for this class of facts.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then if I am mistaken, that it is not best to sell it at public sale, the commissioners were right to sell it at private sale. How can you get around that point?

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask the Senator if he has heard of a single instance where they have perfected a sale?

Mr. COCKRELL. They have not done it, because influences at work here and there have prevented them from agreeing to anything the commissioners might do.

Mr. SQUIRE. That statement is not well founded. There are no influences here against it, and I have heard of none there, except what the Senator read from the record in his hand. I do not know the authority for that statement. I have no doubt that many citizens of Tacoma are of the opinion that there is not justice being done either to the Indians or to the people of their city in the manner the business is now being carried on.

I have no doubt the people feel uneasy. Of course they do, or they would not send their representatives to us to endeavor to get a modification of the plan of conducting the business for the Indians. The Indians are not satisfied under it. They are not acting under existing law. They will not have it.

The result is that you are retarding the sale; you are retarding the development of the country, and you are keeping the city of Tacoma "cribbed, cabined, and confined" there with this great Indian reservation occupying the most fertile land in its vicinity, and with no means of getting help, because they can not compel the Indians. Yet Senators talk about trying to protect the Indians!

Mr. COCKRELL. I must ask the Senator not to repeat his speech, which he has already made three times.

Mr. SQUIRE. I beg most respectfully to resent both the impatience and the dictatorial manner of the Senator from Missouri. I am in the pursuance of a duty to the people of my State. He has no right to press me unfairly. It is true I have repeated some things, because Senators have come in who had not been present to listen to points presented by me heretofore in this debate. I desire only a minute longer. I do not think that the disposition of the people of Tacoma is at all as intimated by the Senator from Missouri. I do not so understand it. I understand the people of Tacoma to be very glad to have the Indians accept terms and make sales of the land.

Mr. COCKRELL. I read again:

It appears from information in possession of this office that certain parties at Tacoma, Wash., and in the vicinity thereof, are using their influence and putting forth certain efforts to prevent the Indians from giving their consent to the sale of the allotted lands, and to retard in various ways the progress of the work of the Puyallup commissioners among the Indian allottees.

In view of this fact, and all other circumstances in the case, I think that the commissioners should be encouraged in every proper way possible in the prosecution of their work, and that further legislation embracing the recommendation of the commission and embodying the desires and wishes of the Indian allottees as to the payment of the purchase money arising from the sale of their allotted lands should be had to facilitate their work, lessen the difficulties which seem to surround them, and make their mission a success and satisfy the Indians.

Mr. President, there is the whole case. The act was deliberately passed by the last Congress. A commission was constituted, and it is the second commission which has been sent there. The plan was sanctioned by Secretary Noble, and the proposed innovation upon it is opposed by the present Secretary of the Interior. We are simply carrying out the recommendations of Secretary Noble and the preceding Administration. These commissioners have been appointed. They are upon the ground. They have authority to adjust every solitary question, to sell all the lands held jointly, and the allotted lands, and then pay the Indians whatever amount is necessary for them and keep the balance in the Treasury. Now, can anything more be done for the Indians?

I admit that the good people of Tacoma want these lands. They look with longing eyes to them, and justly and properly so. Do they want this legislation to enhance the happiness and the wealth of these Indians? Certainly a white man will take care of himself. Is it anything more than their interest pecuniarily that this shall be done? There it is in a nutshell. It is to their pecuniary interest, and if it be to their pecuniary interest it is to the pecuniary loss of the Indians.

Why should we sell those lands now in this depressed market?

I am no sentimentalist about the Indian. If I had my way I would have the Indians agree to this matter, and agree to it promptly, and I would have the lands sold, as they should be sold, to the best advantage.

But, Mr. President, this matter is here in a peculiar shape. It is first proposed to the Committee on Appropriations. It has never had the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The distinguished chairman of that committee will tell you so. The distinguished member of that committee from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], one of the oldest members, will tell you so. It comes to our Appropriation Committee without the recommendation of any head of a Department. It comes without the recommendation of any committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does not the Senator from Missouri make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I intend to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment comes to us in that way. It is not in order. It is legislation, pure and simple. It is legislation modifying and cutting in twain the work of an existing commission before its labors are completed. It is putting a gag upon the commission authorized by the law of 1893, signed by President Harrison.

Now, Mr. President, why did not the Committee on Appropriations report the amendment? Could we, with all these facts before us, dare to report it as an amendment to the appropriation bill—pure, simple, and unadulterated legislation, opposed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; legislation not recommended by any standing committee of the Senate, and legislation which we believe will be to the detriment of the Indians as it may be to the pecuniary advantage of the whites?

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself, he having been taken as a member of the subcommittee in the absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], gave this matter the fullest consideration. We heard the Representative from Washington longer than we heard all the Senators put together upon the pending bill. We both wanted to do something to relieve him and his people, if it could be done decently, and honestly, and properly. After we had gone into the matter with that disposition and had heard everything he had to say time and again, we told him frankly that the Committee on Appropriations could not report it as an amendment to this bill; that it was legislation; that it was legislation which had not received the consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs; that we could not sanction it in the form it was in.

Now, notwithstanding all that, it is pressed here upon the Senate. We have had it discussed now for nearly a whole day. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment proposes legislation pure and simple, and that it is not in accordance with the rules of the Senate, not being recommended by any standing committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask the Senator from Missouri to withhold the point of order for just one moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is not to be an hour's discussion. I have been very patient.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Missouri to withdraw, for the present at least, his point of order, and allow me to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will do that.

Mr. HARRIS. But I will yield for a moment to the Senator from Washington. I shall seek the floor immediately upon the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. SQUIRE. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to protest against the imputation expressed here against the citizens of Tacoma. It seems to me that it is very unfounded and very unfair. The people of that city are as clean and loyal and honorable as citizens of any other city in the United States. They are a progressive, active people. They find themselves in a condition now where their growth is interfered with. The Drake commission, of which much has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has testified in its report, and has spoken of the disadvantages to the city of Tacoma.

If the Senator thinks it will be proper I would like to read a paragraph of that report. I shall not take up much time. The report says:

That it is a serious detriment to the city of Tacoma to have such a body of unoccupied land blocking its growth and hindering its commercial, manufacturing, and social development seems to us incontrovertible.

I read on page 16:

Ought this state of things to be permanent? Our judgment is that it ought not. We can not see any good reason why, for a community of only 600 Indians, there should be held a great body of land that stays the growth of a city of 40,000 people, if a way can be devised, without injustice to the Indians—

If a way can be devised, without injustice to the Indians—to open it to the acquisition and occupancy of all who may be able and willing to pay a fair price for it, particularly when the Indians are very desirous to sell.

I omit one passage and come to another, which is as follows:

And now the grave question is presented, whether the state of things we have described ought, for the sake of either the Indians or the surrounding white population, to be allowed to continue. That it is injurious to the Indians seems to us clear, for they have on their hands a great quantity of wild land which they can neither make available for cultivation nor convert into money. If they could by the sale or mortgage of the wild land obtain money to apply to the improvement of their homesteads and the purchase of personal comforts and conveniences, they would have the means of bettering their condition, and the sale and improvement of that land would greatly enhance the value of the rest; but the terms of their patents bar sale or mortgage. They are therefore owners of a large territory which in the hands of white men could and would be made productive and valuable, but which in the ownership of the Indians, under the terms of their holding, may be said to be practically almost worthless, and which they are ready and desirous but unable to sell.

I ask the Senate if there is not enough reason for the people of the city of Tacoma to desire through the representatives of their State that additional legislation shall be enacted to relieve them from this condition of things without imputing motives which are discreditable to that people?

Is it right to impute motives that are unworthy of them when such great motives as these are apparent in the report of the commission, the great commission headed by Judge Drake that made such a painstaking and thorough examination? It seems to me that is reason enough. That is the reason why I have put forth my voice here in advocacy of this amendment. I have endeavored to find out what that people want. I have done my best. I have no motive in the world except to serve the people of my State and every part of it. I do not believe the people who make these reports to me are actuated by selfish motives. I believe they are actuated by motives that should actuate American citizens in promoting the interests of their State, of their county, of their city, in every honorable and proper way.

The state of things is admitted to be bad. The commission say so. We all understand it. There is no need of multiplying illustrations in regard to it. The question is how are you going to get out of it, the difficulty? As the Senator from Missouri has stated, there is a commission there which has been engaged in its function only about a year, and during that time it has been ascertained that it is a failure. It is a failure so far as relates to the land that has been allotted.

It has not been a failure in regard to the immensely valuable agency tract of 585 acres worth about $600,000. Nobody objects to anything it has done about that; but so far as relates to inducing the Indians to part with their allotted lands upon terms that are mutually satisfactory and agreeable to the commissioners and Indians the commission has not succeeded.

Now, it having been shown that it is a failure, why continue this state of things? That is the position we have to confront. The question simply is, what are we going to do about it? Are you going to leave a useless appendage of the Government there, an agency that is not working out successfully the plan which was conceived by Congress? Are you going to leave the commission there doing nothing, comparatively idle? The Indians dissatisfied. That is all there is of it.

If the Indians are willing to sell their lands upon such terms as are provided in this amendment, taking eight years for the payment, one-eighth each year (and at the end of the eight years they would have the land without any kind of restriction under the present law), they would simply have one-eighth from year to year until the expiration of the eight years.

If they are satisfied with such a provision as that, and then with the supervision of an eminent jurist, a man who has jurisdiction over the most important interests of that State, a man high in the esteem of everyone, whose decisions are notable for their power and accepted value among great lawyers—if such a man as this, a man raised there from a boy, who has known these Indians and who has been known by them, is the man acceptable to them to supervise their interests—what is the reason why we can not accept their wish and carry it out?

That is all there is of it. If we were trying to do it against the wishes of the Indians it would be a different thing. It is what the Indian wants, and it seems to be the only practicable solution of the question. That is the main point. The present commission is not a success in its work. The Indians are not working in harmony with it. They are not selling their lands under the scheme now inaugurated and existing, but they would be willing to work in harmony under such an arrangement as is proposed in the amendment.

Now, for the sake of the people of Tacoma, for the sake of the people of the county and State who want this land improved, who want the opportunity that the city may expand, who want the land to be improved and to pay its fair share of taxes, and for the sake of the Indians who want to dispose of a part of their land, so that with the means thereby derived they may improve the rest of their property that is now lying idle and unproductive—I say, all these things considered, it seems to me these merely technical objections are of small account, and I hope the Senators will not press them.

It is no matter if they have not had the opportunity to try our case fully in committee. There were reasons for that. We all know that the committees of the Senate have not been doing their customary work owing to the time which has been occupied in considering the tariff and other proposed legislation. With the Senate sitting for eight or nine hours a day committees did not convene in the morning; there was not the time to bring these matters up and have them properly discussed in committee; but the Senate of the United States is considering this question in committee.

It is considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole, and Senators have had information enough on the subject, just as much as would be needful to impress any committee with the value and importance of this proposed legislation. I submit from the facts here presented and the arguments and appeals made by distinguished Senators, there has been enough said to satisfy reasonable men that this legislation ought to be enacted.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. No one has cast a particle of reflection upon the people of Tacoma. They are just like any other good white people anywhere. They want to develop and expand their town, and they want to get this land. That is all there is about it. I do not blame them for it. I am not censuring them for it. The best way for them to get the lands is through the commission which is upon the ground with authority to lay the lands out this day; and whenever the people of Tacoma ascertain that they can not get the provisions proposed here, then the Indians will very quickly consent to the other plan. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] on the table.

Mr. SQUIRE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I agreed with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that I would pair with him upon this question. I should vote "yea" if the Senator from Rhode Island were present.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. Has the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask whether the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. In order to make a quorum, notwithstanding my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], I will record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. With a view to make a quorum I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN. I inquire if a quorum has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will vote in order to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS. I have the privilege of voting in order to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I feel privileged to vote to make a quorum, notwithstanding my pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. McPHERSON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	George,	Kyle,	Turpie,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4864), to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in section 4, line 5, to strike out the word "of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is a mere verbal one, and will be considered as concurred in if there be no objection. It is concurred in.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged question. I ask that the communication received from the House of Representatives a few minutes ago in regard to a further conference on House bill 4864 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am instructed by the committee of conference between the two Houses to state that we have had House bill 4864 under consideration in full, free conference; that we have not agreed in regard to the amendments adopted in the Senate; and that the Senate conferees insist upon the amendments of the Senate. Having made this announcement, and after consulting somewhat with Senators who expect to take part in this matter in the way of discussion, I ask that the communication from the House of Representatives lie on the table, to be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HILL. I desire to give notice that at that time I shall move to instruct the conferees on the part of the Senate to place coal and iron on the free list, and that I shall submit some remarks upon the question.

Mr. MANDERSON. In connection with the conference report, let me inquire if there is any message from the President of the United States which should be published in connection with it?

Mr. VOORHEES. None that I have.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps the Senator from New York can answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Indiana is that the matter lie on the table until to-morrow morning, when the message from the House of Representatives is to be taken up. That will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I give notice, it being a privileged question, that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I shall call up the matter for consideration.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to offer a few minor amendments. On page 35, line 1, after the word "exceed," I move to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 1, after the word "exceed," it is proposed to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to read:

For subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,000,000: Provided, That a sum not to exceed $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used in completing three artesian wells at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Agencies, this amount in addition to the sum appropriated for that purpose by act of March 3, 1893.

Mr. KYLE. The reason for this amendment is very plain. I have been out through that region recently, and found that the appropriation which was made for digging artesian wells is not sufficient for the purpose. A year ago an appropriation of $15,000 was made for the purpose of putting down three artesian wells. I believe the lowest bid which was received for this purpose was $5 per foot. It was given out by the Geological Survey that in that region it would be necessary to go down 1,800 feet, and therefore $9,000 will be required for each well, and the three wells, one at Pine Ridge, one at Rosebud, and one at Standing Rock, will require $27,000, instead of $15,000.

It was thought when the bill was under consideration in the House of Representatives that $5,000 additional would be sufficient, but on further consideration it is found that it will require $7,000 more. Therefore I take it there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. On page 36, at the end of line 6, after the word "buildings," I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, at the end of line 6, after the word "buildings," it is proposed to insert "at such points as he may think best for the Indians interested."

Mr. KYLE. This amendment refers to the location of ordinary schools around the reservation, and allows the Secretary of the Interior to proceed to erect such school buildings as he may think best for the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. On page 69, line 20, after the word "market," I move to strike out "may" and insert "shall, as far as practicable;" so that the sentence will read:

Provided further, That purchase in open market shall, as far as practicable, be made from Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

I offer this amendment because I think it is right that the Government should purchase the stock which is raised by the Indians in preference to letting contracts to white people; in other words, to encourage stock-raising and the raising of ordinary agricultural products by the Indians.

Mr. CAREY. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, line 20, after the word "market," it is proposed to strike out "may," and insert "shall, as far as practicable."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. On page 70, at the end of line 5, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

And the Secretary of the Interior may, when practicable, arrange for the manufacture by the Indians upon the reservation of shoes, clothing, leather, harness, and wagons.

Mr. KYLE. The manufacture of shoes, wagons, harness, and such things, is already carried on on the reservation to some extent. I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That Indians to whom lands have been allotted in severalty shall be permitted to lease their lands for a period of five years when thought best by the Secretary of the Interior, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. KYLE. I think that is a proper safeguard to throw around such a lease. There are lands which are not specially fit for cultivation, which are taken up in severalty by the Indians, and which might be leased for stock purposes and some of them might be leased, perhaps, for agricultural purposes.

Mr. PLATT. I believe that amendment is liable to a point of order, and I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut raises the point of order against the amendment. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate. The question is: Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota in order?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the practice and custom is, I believe, to allow the point of order to be stated by the Senator who makes it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done, if the Senator will allow me, I should be glad to hear the amendment read in connection with the text so that we may understand what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so read.

The SECRETARY. The clause beginning at line 5, on page 50, reads:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock-raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $70,000; and no person shall be employed as such farmer or stockman who has not been at least five years immediately previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming.

To which the following is proposed as an amendment.

Provided, That Indians to whom lands have been allotted in severalty shall be permitted to lease their lands for a perion of five years when thought best by the Secretary of the Interior, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut makes the point of order that the amendment is not in order. That question the Chair submits to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this is a proposition to put on an Indian appropriation bill legislation which entirely changes the allotment law as it stands upon the statute book, known as the Dawes allotment act. That law provided that Indian lands should be inalienable for twenty-five years. This amendment provides that any Indian to whom land has been allotted——

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will allow me, I do not wish to violate the rule of the Senate, and I will withdraw the amendment. I thought it had passed as part of the Yuma bill

Mr. PLATT. It did.

Mr. KYLE. And on the strength of that I supposed it might be admitted in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. I wish simply to say another word about it.

This is a matter which, if it could receive the full consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and have proper restrictions put around it, might possibly be not so very objectionable; but we have a law now which allows the lands of minor Indian allottees and of female Indian allottees to be leased, and this amendment proposes to provide that all lands allotted to Indians may be leased under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. It is, therefore, clearly general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. KYLE. I withdraw it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill to come in after the words "per capita," in line 13, on page 55.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 55, it is proposed to insert:

For payment in full to the treasurer of the Chapter of Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., for amount due for two quarters ending, respectively, December 30, 1891, and March 30, 1892, for board and tuition for Indian pupils at the Hope Indian boarding school at Springfield, S. Dak., as per contract duly executed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs dated July 1, 1891, $2,430.

Mr. CALL. We make no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question would be necessarily as to whether this is a private claim or not. The rule of the Senate reads:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

As I understand this case, there was an Indian school at that place, and the agent of the Indian school appointed by the claimant was guilty of misconduct and was removed. He was the agent, but made the contract in his own name, and not as trustee. The bishop claims that he notified the Department that this man had been removed and that another man had been appointed as trustee, and that the Department after that sent this $2,430. The Treasury Department deny that they had anything to do with any other person, and in the committe report, which was submitted here, there is nothing to show that any notice was ever received by the Treasury Department. There are letters there addressed by the bishop to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I do not wish to be captious about these matters. This amendment has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not hold, however, that that makes it in order. It may not be in the nature of a private claim in the full sense of the word, but if it is, as my colleague on the committee in charge of the bill has accepted it, I shall not make the point of order. I do not, however, want it understood that I waive any point of order about private claims going on appropriation bills, for they have no place there.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], in charge of the pending bill, accepts the amendment, and I understand that my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] makes no objection to the amendment other than he has stated. In view of that I shall not detain the Senate by responding to the argument submitted by the Senator from Missouri, further than to say that he is mistaken as to the facts in this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I drew my facts from the report which was made and which is on file here, and I believe it was made by the Senator himself.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hold the report in my hand, and I state that my friend from Missouri is mistaken as to his statement of the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as a separate paragraph after line 13, on page 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 22, it is proposed to insert:

OMAHAS.

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," approved March 3, 1893, as amends an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," approved August 7, 1882, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians of that tribe, to allot in severalty, through an allotting agent of the Interior Department, to each Indian woman and child of said tribe born since allotment of the lands were made in severalty to the members thereof under the provisions of said act and now living, one-eighth of a section of the residue lands held by said tribe in common, instead of one-sixteenth of a section, and to allot in severalty to each allottee under said act now living who received one-sixteenth of a section thereunder, an additional one-sixteenth of a section of such residue lands, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the necessity for the adoption of this amendment. On the 7th of August, 1882, Congress passed an act authorizing the allotment of the land belonging to the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska. The fifth section of that act is to be found on page 342 of volume 22 of the Statutes at Large. It provides that:

To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section; to each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section; and to each other person under 18 years of age, one-sixteenth of a section; which allotments shall be deemed and held to be in lieu of the allotments or assignments provided for in the fourth article of the treaty with the Omahas, concluded March 6, 1865, and for which, for the most part, certificates in the names of individual Indians to whom tracts have been assigned have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as in said article provided.

The sixth section pertains to the issuance of patents to the allottees. The eighth section, which is important, I desire to read. It is as follows:

That the residue of lands lying east of the said right of way of the Sioux

City and Nebraska Railroad, after all allotments have been made, as in the fifth section of this act provided, shall be patented to the said Omaha tribe of Indians, which patent shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus patented for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the said Omaha tribe of Indians, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Omaha tribe of Indians, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That from the residue of lands thus patented to the tribe in common, allotments shall be made and patented to each Omaha child who may be born prior to the expiration of the time during which it is provided that said lands shall be held in trust by the United States, in quantity and upon the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations as are provided in section 6 of this act, touching patents to allottees therein mentioned.

That is perhaps all that is necessary to be read to show the condition of the law in 1882.

In 1893, on March 3, the following law was enacted and made a part of the Indian appropriation bill:

That the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882—

The act from which I have just read—entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians of that tribe, to allot in severalty, through an allotting agent of the Interior Department, to each Indian woman and child of said tribe born since allotments of land were made in severalty to the members thereof under the provisions of said act, and now living, one-eighth of a section of the residue lands held by that tribe in common, instead of one-sixteenth of a section, as therein provided, and to allot in severalty to each allottee under said act, now living, who received only one-sixteenth of a section thereunder, an additional one-sixteenth of a section of such residue lands: Provided, That the allotments so made shall be subject to the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations provided for in sections 6, 7, and 8 of said act, touching allotments and patents to allottees therein mentioned: And provided, That the expenses incurred in making the allotments hereby authorized shall be defrayed out of the funds appropriated for surveying and allotting Indian reservations.

The necessity for this law is made apparent when it is remembered that by the act of 1882, 25,000 acres of these lands were set apart in a body and were to be held as sacred property for Indian children who were born after the year 1882. They were to be held in trust by the Government. The title to such land was to pass immediately to the Indian tribes. By the act of 1893 an attempt is made to divest the Omaha Indians of their land by an act of Congress, and to grant to each previous allottee one-sixteenth of a section more than he took under the act of 1882.

It will be observed that this is an attempt by legislation to take the title out of the tribe of Omaha Indians as placed there by the act of 1882, and give to certain individuals of that tribe additional property. In addition to that, it creates the office of an allotting agent, and authorizes that allotting agent to take of the residue land 25,000 acres, I think, lying in a body there, some of the finest land in the State, and allot it to these little children and the widows of annuitants of certain Indians, and by that means, under the act of 1882, passing the title of these lands out of the tribe of Indians and out of the Government into the names of the allottees, thereby placing these lands entirely beyond the control of the National Government. Under the act of 1882 these lands were allotted and set apart for the allottees, and from that moment they become the private property of the Indians.

It is for the purpose of preserving the interest of the minor Indians who have been born since 1882, or may be born before the period of twenty-five years from that time, that the provision in section 8 of the act of 1882 was adopted. The act of 1893, which I seek to repeal by my amendment, destroys the safeguard that those Indian children had under the previous law.

I have on more than one occasion talked to the officers of the Indian Bureau as to the propriety of repealing that act, and no later than last night I addressed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a letter, to which he responded this morning in a memorandum as follows:

Memorandum by Indian Office in reply to letter from Senator Allen, dated July 18, 1894.

Senator ALLEN'S communication is as follows:

"Calling your attention to the Omaha Reservation in Nebraska, I desire to state that in 1893 an amendment was attached to the Indian appropriation bill by which the law of 1882 was amended to the extent of authorizing a reallotment of the Indian lands among the Omaha Indians, and provide for an allotting agent. I understand that such an agent has not yet been appointed, and hope that no appointment will be made.

"Much compliant has reached me from the Indians that this amendatory act is entirely unsatisfactory, and if executed will work practical injustice to the Indians. I wish you would furnish me, by bearer, your opinion as to the propriety of repealing this amended act."

The law to which Senator ALLEN'S inquiries relate may be found in the 27th Statutes at Large, at the bottom of page 630 and the top of page 631.

This item of legislation, excepting the words "Indian women and," in the seventh line of the paragraph, was prepared in this office at the earnest solicitation of a small delegation of Omaha Indians then in this city, having one Mr. Peebles as spokesman. This was during the last Administration. The delegation, as I understand, represented that it was the earnest desire of the Omahas that such legislation should be enacted. This Office did not heartily indorse the measure, but in view of the fact that the consent of the Indians was required, it did not believe that any harm could come by the enactment of the law. Moreover, it was looked upon with favor by some members of Congress with whom the delegation had conferred.

No steps have been taken to make the allotments and readjustment of allotments as provided in this law, although a year and four months have elapsed since its passage.

Statements have repeatedly been made to this Office to the effect—

I call the attention of the Senate more particularly to this language—that there are big schemes underlying this whole plan, one of which is to have allotments made to minor children and married women, when they would be subject to lease under existing law for agricultural purposes; the main object being to secure voters in the interest of county improvement plans. Senator ALLEN himself will perhaps be better able than I to explain these things.

My own idea is that the law referred to (relating to additional allotments to the Omahas) might be repealed without damage to the interests of the Indians.

Under the act of August 7, 1882 (22 Stats., 341), the Omahas hold their surplus lands in common, and there is a provision authorizing allotments of lands (40 acres each) to children born during the trust period, which runs for twenty-five years after the date of said act. No allotments have as yet been made to children born since the original allotments were made, but this can be done at any time. If the clause in the last Indian appropriation act to which Senator ALLEN refers should be repealed, the whole subject could receive the most thorough and painstaking investigation and consideration and new legislation devised to carry out any further beneficent plans that may seem proper in regard to the Omaha allotments. Therefore, I say that I do not think that any harm could come from the repeal of the existing provision, and it might be altogether desirable that it should be repealed in view of the confusion and complications growing out of the illegal leasing both of allotted and unallotted lands.

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The Commissioner says here that statements have repeatedly been made to his office to the effect that there are big schemes underlying this whole plan. That statement is not entirely without foundation. There is organized in Thurston County, in the State of Nebraska, a company composed of two or three persons who are financially irresponsible, backed, perhaps, by some who are financially responsible, but who are not in sight, which has leases of thousands of acres of these allotted lands, and which has leases as well of the unallotted lands. But it requires the approval of the Interior Department to make the leases of any validity as to the unallotted lands.

I am safe in saying that there is an organized attempt upon the part of some persons, whom I shall not undertake to name, to have all of these unallotted lands of the Indian children and women allotted under the act of 1893, and after that is done to enforce their leases against them and turn over the lands to white settlers at $1.50, or possibly $2.00, per acre, because they are very valuable lands. They will then seek to settle upon the county of Thurston a great indebtedness. The Indian vote since the organization of that county has prevented certain persons from settling upon the people of that county immense debts. Repeatedly there has been an attempt to vote bonds to the amount of hundreds or thousands of dollars upon the settlers in and the property of Thurston County, where this reservation is, and in each instance it has been the vote of the voting Indians which has saved the settlers from that great debt.

Now, if these men who scheme to put the county in debt for the purpose of themselves making money out of it can have this great body of 25,000 acres of land allotted under the act of 1893, they having leased it of the Indians for 10 cents an acre, and if they can enforce their leases against the lands, as they are trying to do in the courts to-day, they can people this great body of land with irresponsible white settlers. Then, through their votes they can put upon the people of the county and the Indians of the county a debt which it will take them years to pay. Not only that, but if under the act of 1893 the 25,000 acres which are held under the act of 1882 for twenty-five years as a sacred trust fund, can be cut up and partitioned out to the children born since 1882 and the widows of the tribe, and that is all the act covers, any one can readily see that it will require guardians to handle the estates of these children and the women.

There is an opportunity for the guardian, to use the pat language of the day, to stand in with the man who wants to lease the land and approve the leases which have been made at 10 cents an acre. There is no more valuable land in the State of Nebraska than the Omaha reserved lands, and yet thousands and thousands of acres of that land are held under leases by these persons professing to be a corporation, on a rental of 10 cents an acre. The moment the lands are allotted and pass out of the hands of the General Government to the allottees and come under the law of the State, these persons expect to enforce their leases.

I might at this point, without consuming much time, call attention to another fact.

There is now pending in the circuit court for the district of Nebraska an action against this company or these irresponsible persons who hold the leases to the Indian lands. The Interior Department having repudiated the leases and having refused to ratify them, these men have gone into court and have enjoined Capt. Beck, the agent, who has undertaken to enforce the regulations of the Interior Department, from exercising his authority in keeping off the lands white settlers who were put there as sublessees.

Notwithstanding that the Interior Department refused to approve the leases, notwithstanding the fact that they are void upon their face, yet the people holding the leases have taken into that county and put on the land irresponsible white settlers, exacting from them a large rental. When Capt. Beck undertook to eject them from the land, in accordance with the instructions of the Interior Department, the lessees went into the Federal court and enjoined him from executing that authority, and the injunction is pendente lite to-day. Something must be done in reference to these lands. Something should be done to save the interest of the little children born since 1882. The act of 1882, I understand from the substantial men of the Omaha tribe, is entirely satisfactory.

I might refer in this connection to another matter which has been stated. I can not vouch for it, but I think there are witnesses in this city who know that one of the persons who was interested in having these leases ratified or in getting the land out of the control of the Government, so that the Government could no longer exercise its control and wardship over these little children, was instrumental in bringing a few of the younger and wilder spirits of the Omahas to the city at his own expense. He took them before the Indian Department with representations that they were desirous of having the act of 1893 passed. He brought them from the State of Nebraska; paid their railroad fare and their hotel bills here, and took them home.

If I am informed correctly he paid them for coming here. It is perhaps that to which the Commissioner refers when he says a delegation came here and it seemed to be their desire to have the act of 1893 passed. But the old men, the substantial men of the tribe, and the women are protesting and protesting daily in the interest of the little children who are involved under the act of 1882 against the enforcement of the act of 1893; and it is the provision in that act which my amendment seeks to repeal.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I might upon full inquiry into the question find myself in entire accord with my colleague in his desire to repeal the section of the act of 1893. It is a matter, however, with which I have very little acquaintance, and I am lacking in that knowledge which would teach me to vote intelligently upon his proposition. It is an effort to repeal a piece of legislation which had its origin outside of an appropriation act, but finally had its due course in the appropriation law of last year. I wish I had that complete knowledge of the matter which my colleague seems to have; but unfortunately I have not. It is a matter which concerns a very large number of the constituents represented by my colleague and myself.

It is certainly, however, an unusual course of procedure that on an appropriation bill there should be an attempt to repeal such an enactment. The matter of the proposed repeal should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which committee my colleague and I are both members, and there should be that full, calm deliberation and consideration which is given to matters of proposed legislation in that committee.

I always hesitate, unless I have exceptional knowledge in regard to a subject, to vote for that which is in the nature of general legislation upon appropriation bills. This is general legislation beyond a peradventure. It proposes a repeal of existing law, and it is not only subject to the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, but it is also subject to the point of order that it is an amendment which has not received the sanction of one of the committees of this body. Although I feel loth to combat my colleague on a matter of this kind, my combat is because of my lack of knowledge and information upon the subject, and I feel it my duty to be informed in the regular methods and by the regular process. I therefore make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope my colleague will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I withdraw it, so that my colleague may be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that when my colleague thinks the matter over he will realize the importance of the amendment becoming a law.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is what I wish to do—to examine into the matter.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that I have had an opportunity for knowing what has transpired on the reservation superior to that of my colleague. We both live about an equal distance from it. I do know, however, from talking with the attorneys on both sides of the case I mentioned, in which Capt. Beck, the agent, has been enjoined from ejecting these interlopers, that it is admitted that leases were obtained at 10 cents an acre. That is not disputed in the case, as I understand from counsel upon both sides.

It is maintained on the part of the claimant who brought the bill for the injunction that the leases are valid notwithstanding the Interior Department refuses to approve them, and especially so far as they apply to the allotted lands. I am inclined to think that that contention on the part of the plaintiff is true, because when the lands are allotted the title passes to the allottee as completely and is as free from all restrictions as the title of a grantee under a warranty deed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to his colleague?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. Is the injunction proceeding now pending in court?

Mr. ALLEN. It was pending when last I heard from it.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does it not strike my colleague as an abundant reason why there should be no disturbance of the existing condition by legislation that the court shall have an opportunity to decide the pending case?

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all, because it does not involve the precise point reached by the amendment. The injunction reaches the cases where allotments have already been made.

Under the act of 1893 there is an attempt by legislation to take a 40-acre tract of the residue lands, the title of which by the act of 1882 was vested in the tribe at large as a legal entity, and give it to the former allottees under the act of 1882. Certainly no man will claim that the Legislature has the power to take the legal title of property out of one man and transfer it to another, especially when the act of Congress provides that the legal title shall rest in the tribe.

But, as I say, by the act of 1893 there is an attempt to take 40 acres of that land and transfer it by legislative enactment to the former allottees of other portions of the reservation. What does that mean? It means that of the allotments made under the act of 1893 by the new allotting agent the lessees of the fraudulent leases, or the leases which at least are void, get under the leases 40 acres more of the Indians who had taken their allotment under the former act. But that is not the particular point. The point I contend for, which is not involved in the lawsuit of which I speak, is that Congress ought to exercise some precaution as to control over the lands which were set apart for twenty-five years, to rest in the Government as a trust fund for these children and the widows of that tribe. There it was specified that the title to 25,000 acres, a great body of valuable land, should rest in the tribe for the benefit of the women and children. The Indians were content with it; they were satisfied with it.

In 1893, without the Indians knowing a thing about it, without their knowledge or consent, if their chief men are to be believed, this provision was placed in the Indian appropriation act. By that means this great body of land, reserved to the children and the widows for twenty-five years, where the Government should be responsible for it, where the Government should stand sponsor to the child and responsible to the tribe for it, is to be reallotted among the children and the widows and guardians appointed over them. I suppose that land also would be leased for 10 cents an acre to these fortune hunters.

Let me call attention to another matter. The unallotted lands can not be leased for agricultural purposes. They can be leased only for grazing purposes. But if these lands can be reallotted to these little children and the widows, these wards of the nation, and title pass out of the Government, the trusteeship of the Government cease and guardians be appointed by the State courts, how easy it is to avoid the law and to take the lands, rented for 10 cents an acre, and through the instrumentality of the private guardian lease them to some person for a dollar and a half or $2 an acre or more for agricultural purposes; and land in that country is worth that much for agricultural purposes. Not only that, but the entire fortune of these women and children is turned over to the tender mercies of the sharks who are among them and are endeavoring to get their land from them as rapidly as possible.

I appeal to my colleague to withdraw his point of order. If the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had been here he would have attended to the matter. He is a member of the Indian Committee and has looked into this question. But unfortunately he is not here now. I offer the amendment, and I hope my colleague will withdraw the point of order so that the Senate may vote upon the amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, if anything were needed to emphasize the value of my point of order upon the amendment it has been afforded in the forcible and emphatic speech made by my colleague. It is so very evident that there are two sides to this controversy, it is so very evident that it is a matter needing deliberate exploration and calm deliberation, that I feel constrained to insist upon the point of order I have made. Therefore I renew it, and ask the decision of the Chair upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. MANDERSON. The point of order I make is, that this is in the nature of general legislation upon an appropriation bill; and further, that it has not the sanction or the favorable report of one of the committees of the body.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the Chair rules upon the point of order I wish to say a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see how it can be claimed that this is general legislation. My understanding is, and I think all agree upon it, that general legislation is that which applies generally as distinguished from particular or special legislation, which pertains to a special individual or a special subject and which is merely tentative in its character. I do not know whether the distinction that is ordinarily observed in courts of law is to be observed in the construction of the rule, or whether the rule is to be taken as a mere matter of convenience, like a special appearance to enable a man to stay out of court when he does not want to go into court and meet the merits of his case.

There is nothing in the very nature of the amendment that is legislation in the sense of creating a new law. It does not create a new law. It is germane to the subject-matter of the bill. The bill pertains to Indian affairs, to the making of appropriations for the manifold Indian necessities recognized by law. The amendment, instead of being general legislation, as it is called—and I do not know exactly what that means—is the undoing of an act that was passed in 1893, and it is not the creation of law at all. It is the reverse of the creation of law.

It proposes to undo that which has been done before. It proposes to destroy, not to create, not to make law. As it pertains not to a general subject, not to all Indians under like circumstances, but pertains to the specific subject of repealing an allotment with reference to these particular Indians and a particular portion of them, it is not a general law. There is no rule known to our jurisprudence by which anyone can determine that it is general legislation. Certainly it is germane to the bill and certainly the merits of it require its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The purpose of the present amendment is to repeal a part of a general law, "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894." The point of order raised by the Senator from Nebraska is under Rule XVI, section 3, which provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The Chair thinks that legislation is as active in repeal as in enacting a law, and is of opinion that the amendment is subject to the point of order raised by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to insert between sections 16 and 17 what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 16 insert:

To pay the amounts found due by the Court of Claims, as hereinafter set forth, for supplies furnished the Indian service in 1873 and 1874, and reported to Congress by Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 105, Fifty-first Congress, first session, to wit:

To Edward N. Fish & Co., $1,800.

To Edward N. Fish & Co., assignees of W. B. Hugus, $2,400.20.

To Bowers & Richards, assignees of James M. Burney, $3,534.76.

To Sutro & Co., assignees of William B. Hooper & Co., $3,479.32.

The payments to the assignees in each case being at the request of the original claimants as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. PERKINS. These amounts are for rations furnished the Indians in Arizona at the request of a Government officer. The claim has been passed upon by the Court of Claims. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and favorably reported. A bill to pay the claim was passed by the Senate in 1890, I think, but failed to become a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator a print of the proposed amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish he would send me a copy. On what page of the bill does the amendment come in?

Mr. PERKINS. Between sections 16 and 17, page 138.

Mr. PLATT. What is the name of the first claimant to be paid by the amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. Edward N. Fish & Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment, Mr. President. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the point of order stated.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from California as soon as the point of order is stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point of order is that the amendment proposed by the Senator from California does not belong to this bill. It is a private claim which was taken to the Court of Claims, and there determined in favor of the claimants. It has no business on this bill. It is a deficiency. Such things are always considered on the deficiency appropriation bill. Clause 4 of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

I hope the Senator from California will not press the amendment on this bill when it properly belongs to another bill which has not yet been considered in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PERKINS. I had reason to believe that the committee would accept the amendment at this time without raising the point of order. I think I could convince my friend from Missouri that perhaps his point of order is not well taken in this instance, but I will withdraw the amendment for the present and offer it on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will withdraw the point of order that the Senator may make an explanation of the amendment. I do not want to do him any injustice. If it properly belongs on this bill, if it is connected with Indian affairs, I have no objection to its going in; but I should like to see the document. Where is the executive document recommending the payment of the claims?

Mr. PERKINS. So much time has been occupied in the discussion of the various amendments offered to the bill, and as there are half a dozen other amendments yet to be submitted, if my amendment is to elicit any discussion I will withdraw it and let it go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me see the document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. I am not quite sure whether it is withdrawn or not. I remember about this claim in the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from California has withdrawn his amendment for the present. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California is withdrawn for the present.

Mr. SHOUP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 19. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons to allot in severalty to the Uncompahgre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows:

"Allotments in severalty of said lands shall be made as follows: To each head of a family one-quarter of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-quarter of a section; to each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each other person under 18 years of age, born prior to such allotment, one-eighth of a section, with a like quantity of grazing land: Provided, That with the consent of said commission, any adult Indian may select a less quantity of land, if more desirable on account of location:" And provided, That the said Indians shall pay $1.25 per acre for said lands from the fund now in the United States Treasury realized from the sale of their lands in Colorado as provided by their contract with the Government. All necessary surveys, if any, to enable said commission to complete the allotments shall be made under the direction of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 20. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States: Provided, That after three years actual and continuous residence upon agricultural lands from date of settlement the settler may, upon full payment of $1.50 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered. If not commuted at the end of three years the settler shall pay at the time of making final proof $1.50 per acre.

SEC. 21. That said commission shall also negotiate and treat with the Indians properly residing upon the Uintah Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Utah, for the relinquishment to the United States of the interest of said Indians in all lands within said reservation not needed for allotment in severalty to said Indians, and if possible, procure the consent of such Indians to such relinquishment, and for the acceptance by said Indians of allotments in severalty of lands within said reservation, and said commissioners shall report any agreement made by them with said Indians, which agreement shall become operative only when ratified by act of Congress.

SEC. 22. That said commissioners shall receive $6 per day each, and their actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses while on duty, and to be allowed a clerk, to be selected by them, whose compensation shall be fixed by said commissioners, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the cost of executing the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $16,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make one inquiry about the amendment. It provides that certain lands forming part of an Indian reservation shall be sold. It reserves the mineral lands for sale under the general law. The asphaltum lands are reserved, I understand, to be disposed of under the general mineral laws of the United States. I should like to know if there is any provision as to the price which is to be paid for mineral lands. I ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], who is familiar with the mineral-land laws of the United States, how the mineral lands are disposed of? Is there a specific price which has to be paid for them?

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, yes; there is a mineral-land law. I would not be quite certain, however, whether the law refers to asphaltum.

Mr. PLATT. How much has to be paid for mineral lands—$5 an acre?

Mr. DOLPH. I think from $5 to $10 an acre, I do not recollect the exact amount; I think it is $5.

Mr. PLATT. I have an impression that Government mineral lands can be obtained by individuals for $5 an acre.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are different prices fixed, I think. For coal lands, lands containing precious metals, and other mineral lands, there are different prices.

Mr. DOLPH. Coal lands which are not within ten miles or twenty miles of a railroad are sold at $10 an acre, and if within ten miles of a railroad $20 an acre; but I think gold and silver placer lands are sold for $5 an acre.

Mr. PLATT. Whether asphaltum and gilsonite deposits would make these mineral lands I do not know.

Mr. ALLISON. I think they are excepted in the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me read section 19 of the proposed amendment—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons to allot in severalty to the Uncompaghre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows:

It then describes the land.

Said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided.

Then section 20 of the amendment, proposed by the Senator from Idaho, provides—

That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States.

So these lands are absolutely excepted, the way I read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. All that I ask about the matter is that if the amendment passes the committee will pay careful attention to it in conference so that no one is going to get this valuable asphaltum and gilsonite land for a song.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would this language include it?

Mr. PLATT. I can not tell.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can add to it and make it certain by inserting "except those lands which are reserved from sale."

Mr. COCKRELL. I will put in that clause. The amendment reads—

That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances—

I will insert the words:

Which are hereby reserved from sale.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes clear the point the Senator from Connecticut makes. I was not sure but that the amendment did read that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the second section of the amendment so as to read:

SEC. 20. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation, except lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, or other like substances, which are hereby reserved from sale, shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the amendment to the amendment is accepted by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHOUP. The amendment to the amendment is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is accepted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 28, immediately after line 2, as a part of the matter relating to the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after line 2, page 28:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be allotted, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," to each and every child born of a recognized member of the Sac and Fox of Missouri tribe of Indians since the completion of allotments to said tribe, 80 acres of land within the reservation of said tribe in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and upon the completion thereof to offer for sale the remaining lands of the said reservation, at the proper land office, upon such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may determine: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall inquire into the correctness of the appraisement made under authority of an act of Congress approved August 15, 1876, of lot 8 of the southeast quarter of section 19, township 1 north, range 17 east, Sac and Fox Reservation lands in the State of Nebraska; and if he shall be satisfied that said lot was appraised at more than its actual value, he may cause the same to be sold upon the same terms as the other lands are sold: And provided further, That before any sale shall be made of said lands the consent of a majority of the male adults of said Indians shall first be obtained.

SEC. 2. That the net proceeds arising from the sales of lands, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be used for the benefit of said tribe or shall be paid to said Indians per capita, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine. The cost of the advertisement and sale of said lands shall be defrayed from the first proceeds arising therefrom.

Mr. PEFFER. In explanation of the amendment, I will state that some two years ago an allotment was made of the Sac and Fox lands lying on the northeastern portion of Nebraska and the northeastern portion of Kansas. Since that time some fifteen children have been born to the tribe. There are something less than 2,000 acres yet remaining of the reservation to be disposed of. The amendment proposes that to the children who have been born since the last allotment, there shall be an allotment the same as was made to their ancestors, and that what is left, which is estimated at the Indian Bureau to be about 600 acres, shall be disposed of as the rest of the lands have been disposed of.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have all the correspondence with the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in relation to this matter. My information is that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs favor this proposition; and they state that after an allotment of 80 acres each is made to fifteen children, amounting in all to 1,200 acres, there will be about 600 acres left, as I understand, but the Senator from Connecticut thinks it will be a very small number of acres.

Mr. PLATT. I think 33 acres.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Connecticut suggests that there will be a small quantity left.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much?

Mr. PLATT. Thirty-three acres will be left.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, there are about 1,600 acres now, and when these allotments are made there will be about 575 acres left.

Mr. PEFFER. Then my information was correct. I put it at about 600 acres. This is all I have to say at the present time concerning the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I believe I consented that this amendment should be reported pro forma by the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I think I told the Senator from Kansas I did not know that I should agree to the amendment. It raises a pretty important question in dealing with Indian lands. It is almost precisely such a provision as was put upon the Indian appropriation bill last year in regard to the Omaha Indians lands, which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] has just attempted to have repealed this year by an amendment to the pending bill and which was ruled out of order.

I will state the question presented by the amendment: When a tribe of Indians concludes to avail itself of the provision of the act called the Dawes allotment act, and takes lands in severalty for all the members of the tribe, leaving a portion of the lands undistributed and still held in common by the Indians, and the land thus remains for a series of years until the Indians think they would like to dispose of the whole of it, or until they think they would like to have a new allotment of a part of it, shall there be a new allotment to children who are born after the first allotment takes place? There is no occasion for it in this particular case, probably, except what would exist in regard to every Indian reservation where allotments have been made under the Dawes act.

Mr. COCKRELL. And surplus lands have been left.

Mr. PLATT. And surplus lands have been left undistributed. It will be observed that where lands have been allotted under the Dawes act there are surplus lands left in all cases, unless there has been some special provision made by Congress for the sale of the lands. Where allotments are made under treaties with the Indians there is usually included an agreement with the Indians that the land shall be purchased by the Government and opened to settlement; but upon the lands of almost all tribes where allotments have been made there are still undivided lands held in common. The amendment raises the question, What is to be done with those lands?

There is no provision in the Dawes allotment act which determines what shall be done with the lands which are left undistributed when an allotment takes place. The amendment seems to proceed upon the principle that so long as there are any lands left in common there are to be successive divisions or allotments made as children shall be born to the tribe. Of course this particular amendment provides for selling the lands which are not now to be alloted to the children who have been born since the first allotment, but that probably would not be done in all cases. So, under this principle we should have successive allotments at intervals of a few years, alloting to the children who should be born from time to time specific portions of the land. Whether that is what should be done in such cases, or whether one allotment having been made, it should be considered that the right of allotment and the power of allotment have been exhausted, and the rest of the land sold for the benefit of the whole tribe, is the question.

I do not like to dispose of this question on an appropriation bill. It is quite a large question, as Senators who are listening to me will see. When this allotment to the Sacs and Fox took place all the living Indians got an allotment, and there were left 1,600 acres of land. That land belonged to the whole tribe, including those who had received allotments. Now, it is proposed to take the greater part of it and give it to thirteen or fourteen or fifteen children, who have been born since. It seems to me that that is scarcely fair to the remaining members of the tribe who do not happen to have had children born to them since the first allotments were made.

I do not wish to decide that question now. That is my difficulty about it. I have not thought of it sufficiently to be fully determined in my mind which policy should be pursued, whether one allotment having been made, if the Indians want to dispose of the remainder of their lands, they should be sold for the benefit of the whole tribe, or whether allotments should be made as children shall be born until such time as the lands are fully disposed of. These allotments, of course, will go to the children of persons who received allotments originally, but there will be other persons who received allotments originally who will get no benefit of these lands.

As I say, my mind is not made up as to which policy should be adopted. My only reason for speaking at all is to say that I do not like to decide such a question upon an Indian appropriation bill without full consideration.

Mr. PEFFER. Just a word or two, Mr. President, in addition.

I have not personally given the point raised by the Senator from Connecticut very careful consideration. I have proposed the amendment because my information is, and I understand it to be entirely reliable, that the Secretary of the Interior recommends this disposition of the remaining land, recommends the course proposed in the amendment, and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs approves it and recommends it; and, what would seem ordinarily to be better than both, the Indians themselves, who are personally interested in the matter, have recommended it.

In addition to that, the amendment itself provides that nothing shall be done along the lines laid down in the proposed amendment except with the consent of the Sac and Fox Indians.

Mr. PLATT. All of them?

Mr. PEFFER. All of them, as I understand, It is so provided. That being true, I do not see how there could be any mistake made. It might be that if there was a very large proportion of the reservation yet remaining undisposed of, there would be an opening for fraud.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me to correct him with regard to what requirement is made for the agreement of the Indians, it is the consent of the Indian male adults. Without question the consent will be obtained of persons who have had children born, but it only requires the consent of a majority of the males.

Mr. PEFFER. I suppose that is the usual way. I have several times since my membership in this body proposed that the word "male" be stricken from bills and resolutions, but the motion has always been voted down.

Mr. PLATT. But it is a majority only that is required; it is not all of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I regret exceedingly that such questions as these have to be decided upon appropriation bills; but in view of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations did not propose the amendment, I regret that the Committee on Indian Affairs have referred this amendment to us, unless they wanted it to pass. We are in this predicament: We found the amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and found it recommended by the Department, and we left the Committee on Indian Affairs to present it.

Mr. PEFFER. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that in view of all this, the proceeding is not only regular, but eminently proper. Perhaps my excellent neighbor from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is quite as familiar with the subject as any of us, will be able to enlighten us about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, it seems to me the great difficulty about the consideration of this amendment is that none of us have that familiarity with the subject which we ought to have to legislate understandingly upon it. The lands proposed to be alloted here, as I understand, are in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and we have as yet no information as to the amount of land involved.

Mr. COCKRELL. Sixteen hundred and fourteen acres to be allotted to twelve or thirteen children, allowing 80 acres to each, will leave remaining 574 acres.

Mr. MANDERSON. I thank the Senator from Missouri. The Sac and Fox Indians are not living in either Kansas or Nebraska. Whether some remnant of the tribe has remained upon these old lands in Kansas and Nebraska and these children to whom lands have not been allotted are to be found there, or whether they are with the tribe, which has an agency in the State of Iowa, I confess I do not know. The Sac and Fox agency, for which I see there is an appropriation in this bill for the pay of an agent at $1,000 per annum, is in the State of Iowa.

Can the Senator in charge of this bill inform the Senate whether the children, to whom these lands are to be allotted, are in the State of Kansas or in the State of Nebraska, or whether they are with the tribe which seems to have its habitat in the State of Iowa?

Mr. PEFFER. I am not able to inform the Senator upon that point. I presume, however, it is safe to rely upon the knowledge and information of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In addition to that I will state to the Senator that I do not see how that can affect this proceeding one way or the other. There is nothing in the law requiring an Indian to live upon land which has been allotted to him. He may choose to live there, or he may choose to live somewhere else. So it may be with the children. If the parents are in Iowa, I have no doubt the children are there. The probability is that if they were born within the last three years they are not yet able to take care of themselves.

Mr. MANDERSON. That may be so. I do not take issue with my friend from Kansas on that proposition, and I do not antagonize his amendment. What I rose to say, however, and as I have proposed to say it sometime during the deliberation upon this bill—this is perhaps as opportune a time as any, although it is not strictly germane to this amendment—is that here is another instance of a very flagrant abuse pervading our Indian policy. I refer to the Sac and Fox Indians in the State of Iowa. At their agency there is an agent who is continued under the terms of the pending bill at a thousand dollars per annum, and there is about as much, I perhaps might say there is not as much, reason why they should have an agent as there is reason for a guardian for the person and property of the Senator from Kansas or for myself.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have a petition from the Indians at this agency dated:

SAC AND FOX OF MISSOURI INDIAN RESERVATION,
June 24, 1884.

We, your petitioners, members of the Sac and Fox of Missouri tribe of Indians, assembled in open council on our reservation in Kansas and Nebraska, being included in the Pottawatomie and Great Nemaha Indians—

The Nemaha Agency, I believe, is just on the border extending into both Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am speaking now of the Sac and Fox agency in Iowa mentioned in this appropriation bill, and making their case an instance only of many others like them. There is abundant reason why this Sac and Fox agency in the State of Iowa should be abolished. I simply give this agency as an example of numerous other Indian agencies that might well be abolished, and the best way to abolish them will be to abolish in the Indian appropriation bill the compensation to the agents. Shut off their supplies and they will cease to be.

I turn to a very valuable publication of the Census Bureau, not yet generally issued, and perhaps not to be given full light by that Bureau, prepared by Mr. Donaldson, expert special agent, and I see as to these particular Indians this fact stated:

The Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, should be at once abolished, as the Indians under charge of the agency are not reservation Indians in fact. The so-called reservation is owned by the Indians in fee, and no one has a right to invade or molest it. All requirements of law can be attended to by the United States district attorney for the district in which the Sac and Fox lands are located, or by an inspector of the Indian Office, and like matters at most of the other agencies when abolished could be so attended to.

Here is a small tribe of Indians, comprising but a few hundred—397 in all—living upon lands which they own in fee, deriving no rations from the Government. What possible use is there for the continuation of that agent?

We had in 1890 139 Indian reservations, and there were 54 actual agents under salary, with numerous dependents. I believe it to be a fact that from one-half to two-thirds of these agents could be abolished with advantage, not only to the Government in the way of saving the expenditures incident to their maintenance, but to the very great advantage and material good of the Indians themselves.

I know that a most convenient place to locate some superannuated, played-out, exolete politician is to send him to an Indian agency as an agent. He must, of course, be a man of very small caliber and light capacity who will thus exile himself for the paltry thousand or twelve or fifteen hundred dollars a year which he receives, and that is the class of men who are usually selected. There is no civil service examination. Those agents are not appointed upon their merits, but usually upon their demerits. If a small-bore politician is objectionable in the community in which he lives, and the desire is to get rid of him, the political Botany Bay for him is to send him to some Indian agency where there is nothing to do, and pay him the paltry compensation incident to the place.

Mr. President, one of the crying ills and great evils of our Indian system is that we are thus maintaining these so-called guardians but properly termed leeches of the Indians. We should wipe some of them out with a liberal hand; we should expunge from the appropriation bills the compensation which some of them are to receive, and that would result in their complete and perfect eradication and annihilation. Cut off from them that upon which they feed and they would soon expire.

Mr. President, there is abundant authority for the eradication of many of these agencies. Early in this session of Congress I introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to Congress a list of all Indian agencies, and to suggest to Congress what agencies might, in his opinion, with safety be abolished. The list came, and there was very cavalier disposition of the question by the statement from the Secretary of the Interior that at this particular time he saw no reason why any of these agencies should be abolished.

I now quote from much better authority, which I hold in my hand, and I propose before I get through to ask leave to insert it as a part of my remarks, for it is a very valuable contribution to our literature upon the Indians. It has not yet received publication except in very limited number. I have an advance copy, approved by Superintendent Porter, of this very valuable report, made to the Census Bureau by its accomplished agent, and I ask leave to attach it as part of my remarks. It is a part of the Report on Indians, Eleventh Census, 1890.

By so doing, I shall save much of the time of the Senate, for I am so filled with well-grounded antagonism and with righteous indignation at the way this subject has been treated, that I should feel warranted and tempted to expend much of the valuable time of the Senate in expressing that indignation. I shall not, however, do that, but shall ask leave to append this document to my remarks, reading just now, as pertinent to the matter in hand, one or two extracts from it.

Representative HOLMAN, in his report on the pending bill, says of this paper:

> The very exhaustive, able, and interesting report of Hon. Thomas Donaldson, of Philadelphia, Pa., as expert special agent to take the census of the Indian tribes, furnishes a vast amount of valuable information in relation to the Indian service and the condition of all the tribes. He recommends the abolition of a number of the Indian agencies. While these recommendations have not yet been fully considered, it is believed that the report will greatly facilitate in the early future valuable improvements and positive reforms in the Indian service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANDERSON. Hon. Thomas J. Morgan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his annual report for 1890, speaks of the present system of conducting Indian affairs under existing laws. Gen. Morgan continued as Commissioner of Indian Affairs for a time after he made this report, and I greatly fear that because of his contact with these officials and with those who had a deep and valuable interest in the maintenance of the present Indian policy of the Government, he never again used language so emphatic, so forcible, and so truthful as this that I shall now read. He said:

> The entire system of dealing with them (the Indians) is vicious, involving as it does the installing of agents, with semidespotic power over ignorant, superstitious, and helpless subjects; the keeping of thousands of them on reservations practically as prisoners, isolated from civilized life and dominated by fear and force; the issue of rations and annuities which inevitably tends to breed pauperism; the disbursement of millions of dollars' worth of supplies by contract, which invites fraud; the maintenance of a system of licensed trade, which stimulates cupidity and extortion, etc.

Mr. PEFFER. That is strong.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is strong, Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, but it is as true as it is strong.

I know our sentimental brethren in the East, who know little of the Indian except as they read of him in Leather Stocking Tales, who do not come in contact with him and do not know him as he is, who do not know his weaknesses and do not know his strength—for he has both weaknesses and strength—I know that these sentimentalists believe in the maintenance of the present system; they think there must be safeguards thrown about the Indians; they think you must protect him from the rapacious hand of his white neighbor.

Mr. President, there is no greater friend of the Indian, no man who desires his advancement more than the white man who lives by his side. The Senator from Kansas, the Senator from South Dakota, my colleague, and I, who have seen much of the plains Indians, know them for what they are worth; we know they have the capacity to make most excellent citizens if you let go the leading strings with which we hold him. We would teach him to swim and yet keep him out of the water.

Mr. President, you could take the best white men and put them under this sort of tutelage, this objectionable vassalage and weakening bondage, and you would degenerate them to such an extent that they would be hardly worthy the name of men, and yet as to the Indian we go on year after year in these appropriation bills appropriating money to maintain worse than useless agents. It is about time there was a turn in the wheel.

As I suggested in the early part of the day, we have given to the Indians who have dissolved the tribal relation, who have taken lands in severalty in their allotment, the right of citizenship. Let us impose upon them the corresponding duties of citizenship.

The contrast that is afforded in my own State and adjoining States, where the white man goes and takes 160 acres of land, and with wife and children settles upon it, and struggles for years and years for a bare subsistence, with the Indian, who right across the line of an Indian reservation, is allotted his lands, furnished the materials with which he shall build his house, furnished the implements with which he shall plow the soil, with the seed that he shall plant, the implements and tools with which he shall reap the harvest, aye, and even the horses and wagons receiving pay, as they do at Pine Ridge and at Rosebud, for hauling with them the rations to be consumed—the contrast, I say, between the Indian thus pampered and thus sustained, and the white man, who on the very next farm struggles for life is most marked and most significant, and we of the West are growing tired of it. We want no abuse of the Indian, we would protect him with our lives if necessary, but we want to give him the chance for self-sustaining manhood, a chance to struggle for his own advancement and to aid in his own progress.

Mr. President, I read further:

> The remedy of Kit Carson—
>
> A pretty good frontiersman—
> one of the bravest and most humane of Indian fighters, for the Indian question was to stop the Indian from running at large, place him on reservations of good land, and let him fight the problem out himself.
> The only true remedy * * * is to compel the savages to form settlements by themselves, then and there assist and teach them to cultivate the soil; in time they will be able to gain a maintenance independent of the General Government.

That is the object to be attained, a maintenance independent of the General Government, to stop being wards, to come to the time when reaching their majority they will take upon themselves the full responsibity of manhood.

> And to a certain extent they will become responsible for their acts.
> This is, as has been noted, the present Canadian Indian policy.

We afford a most marked and dreadful spectacle as compared with the course that has been pursued by our wiser Canadian neighbor. They owe no more duty to the Indian of Canada than we owe to the Indian of the United States, but they pursue the other policy. They said, "Work and you shall receive pay; take care of yourselves, and if necessity compels we will help you." That was the motto. As suggested by a friend near me, it was "Root hog, or die;" and it is a pretty good motto for either the animal or the man creature. I quote:

> The Indians of Canada are placed upon reservations of land which will maintain them, of course with a small area for each, and they are aided to a start in life. They are now practically self-sustaining. The Canadian Indian knows when he goes on the land that it is to be his; the American Indian knows, if experience is worth anything, that it is not to be his, or the chances are largely that it will not be, and in addition it may be a sand bank. Ninety per cent of the present American Indians on reservations are not agriculturists, but the most of them will work in other fields when paid for it. The Indian is too much of a child of nature to wait for slow-growing crops. He wants to see an immediate result from his labor. He will work as a laborer provided you board him and pay him cash besides. This has been tested. Money is an actual visible result to him. (See the reports of the special agents as to this.) The Navajoes did much of the work of grading the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad in Arizona and New Mexico.

A strange fact in connection with the administration of the Indian Office is, that as the Indians decrease in number and the civilized Indians become more numerous, according to the reports sent out, the number of employés and dependents and the expenditures for Indians increase.

I have a report here made by Mr. HOLMAN from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, showing the amount of the Indian appropriation bills. Here it is. The appropriations for the Indian service in the year 1891 were $7,262,016.02; in 1892, $16,386,284.86. That very large increase in that year was because of the payment under certain treaties for certain lands. I think it involved, perhaps, the payment of the lands that were in the Indian Territory that constitute Oklahoma.

But the next appropriation in 1893, when there was no such exceptional increase, but simply the natural increase referred to by the writer from whom I have read, the appropriation was $7,664,047.84; and in 1894, $7,854,240.38 by the bill as it came from the House, which is to be increased, I presume, by the bill as it will pass the Senate.

Mr. President, there is this constant ever-recurring increase, and it is an unnecessary and useless increase. We could bring it down very materially if we would abolish some of these valueless agents. Mr. Donaldson goes on to suggest:

In some cases the consolidation of Indian agencies, reduction of reservations, and the Indians' removal would be of service to the Indians and profit to the United States. This would better the Indians' moral and physical condition. For illustration: The Jicarilla Apaches of Northwestern New Mexico could be removed to the Mescalero Agency in the southwestern portion of the Territory. These are ration agencies and both reservations are wretchedly poor in agricultural resources, and are without irrigation. If combined the expense of one agency would be saved and civilization aided. The Jicarillas number 808 and the Mescaleros 513, which would be a total of 1,321 Indians for a combined agency.

Yet each one of this aggregate handful of Indians, the Jicarillas on one reservation and the Mescalero Apaches upon another, have an Indian agent with but 1,321 Indians on both of them; two Indian agents, with the farmers who do not farm, the blacksmiths who do not forge, the matrons, and all the attendants and employés incident to an Indian agency, that swell so enormously the amount of the appropriation in these bills.

The Rosebud and Pine Ridge Sioux Agencies in South Dakota, and the Brule Sioux Agency and the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Agencies are unfit for agriculture by reason of lack of water; and hot winds and drought also make them dreadful for living purposes. The Fort Berthold Reservation is also a miserable one for agriculture. * * *

Many agencies should be abolished, some reservations abandoned, and tribes consolidated and removed to localities where it is possible to make a living. Congress should at once take this in hand, as proper action in this will save millions of dollars, and tend to the bettering of the condition of the Indians. When agencies are ordered abolished the inspectors of the Indian Office can take charge and close them up.

The following agencies at different points, as shown by the reports of the special agents, should be abolished as useless—

Now, mark this language, Mr. President. These special Agents were sent out to view the land; have explored it, and it is upon their recommendation and conclusions, and personal observation and knowledge, that this writer says these agencies should be abolished—

The Six Nations of New York; Eastern Cherokees of North Carolina; Lapwai, Idaho; Pueblo, New Mexico; Round Valley, California; Hoopa Valley, California; Siletz, Oregon; Umatilla, Oregon; all agencies in Washington, viz, Colville, Neah Bay, Puyallup, Tulalip, and Yakima; Quapaw, Indian Territory; Osage, Oklahoma, and Sac and Fox, Iowa; all agencies in Minnesota; all agencies in Wisconsin. Some of the agencies named were recommended for abolishment by officials ten or fifteen years ago.

And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the Secretary of the Interior recommended the abolishment of many of them years ago, we maintain these useless places, these houses of refuge for those it is desirable to get rid of in other localities.

Mr. President, I have ventured to take the time of the Senate that I might emphasize these things, and that I might give them additional emphasis by publishing in the RECORD, that it may be seen of all men, this valuable contribution to Indian literature, and the abundant reasons that are here given for improvement in the direction of the bettering of the Indian himself, which I have advocated.

The Report referred to by Mr. MANDERSON, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

(ALASKA EXCEPTED.)

[By Thomas Donaldson, expert special agent, Eleventh Census.]

The history of the American Indians prior to European occupation of this continent is veiled in obscurity, and the theorist now finds abundant material for his speculations. This obscurity would be in fact total oblivion but for the remnants of nations or tribes found by the whites, and these were, by their own stories, the survivors of once great nations. While the pre-Columbian North American Indian* left no monuments of iron, stone, or brass, and but few if any carvings or inscriptions, he left a varied posterity whose descendants are now pregnant with stories, and constantly tell of the grandeur of alleged past Indian nations.

"One of the safest conclusions reached in the study of North American archæology is that graphic art on bark, bone, shell, or stone never reached a higher stage than simple picture-making, in which no attempt was made to delineate form in three dimensions, and in which hieroglyphs never appear."—J. W. Powell, 1890.

The Indian legendist, while not having the faculty or facility of expression of the otherwise cultured white man, excels him in most cases in improbabilities, and the amusing thing in this connection is, that this same white man frequently believes more of these improbabilities than the Indian, and sometimes enlarges on them and furnishes probabilities where the Indian fails to connect the links.

"Nothing is more misleading than Indian tradition, which is of the least possible value as evidence."—Francis Parkman, in A Half Century of Conflict, 1892.

Much of what is now written about the pre-Columbian period is but a repetition of old fancies, legends, and traditions; as a rule nothing new, simply a cunning rehabilitation of these old legends and theories, a dressing of them in stately and harmonious periods, and in some cases the application of recent rules to old facts. There are a few mud mounds, or graves, with their contents, some inscriptions (when or where made or their meaning no one knows), and some pottery resembling present tools and implements common to the world; excepting these and his descendants and their legends the pre-Columbian aboriginal stands a myth. Indian history begins with the memory of the oldest native first found by the whites.

"Man has dwelt in the United States, so far as we yet know, only during the latter half of pleistocene time. There are no evidences of races of people occupying the country anterior to the Indian tribes. Pre-Columbian culture was indigenous; it began at the lowest stage of savagery and developed to the highest, and was in many places passing into barbarism when the good Queen sold her jewels."—J. W. Powell, 1890.

Modern authors have searched the earth, dragged rivers, climbed mountains, contracted wasting fevers, and martyred themselves on sea and land to learn something of the American pre-Columbian period. The most thorough research finds only the things first known when the European arrived or which have been discovered from time to time as the country has been opened up. The aborigines could tell nothing of these things; but in view of the Indians' well-known secretiveness and love of mystery, it had best be said that they would not tell of them.

For several hundred years learned pundits have continued to threaten to astonish the world with revelations as to races of men who peopled the portion of the New World now known as the United States anterior to the present Indians. Mystery, myth, and superstition have been employed to impress the public with expectant discoveries in this line. Thus far these discoveries have not materialized, and each year adds to their uncertainty.

If one fact is now more apparent than another in relation to the North American Indians it is that those found by the Europeans were the legitimate descendants of an ancestry which Dr. Daniel G. Brinton has called "the American race," the original inhabitants of the American continent.

The mounds or earthworks of the Indians found by the Europeans in New York, Virginia, Eastern Tennessee, and Kentucky have been called by ethnologists military structures. The mounds of the river valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi basins were for defense, residence, or burial places. Being along streams, they were frequently in the vicinity of cornfields. The cave and cliff dwellings of the rivers, streams, and canyons of Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona and the ruins of towns or pueblos on the plains in the same regions were also for defense and residence. Some of the ancient ruins, which have been restored on paper from the foundation lines, are stated as having once been communal houses. These three grades or kinds of structures, each conforming to the demands of climate, were found by the Europeans on their entering the United States. The age or antiquity of any of these three classes of pre-Columbian structures was not determined by the first Europeans. The probabilities are decidedly against any age now being fixed.

The mounds in the central portion of the United States have frequently been cited as evidence of another (but an extinct) race on this continent. Much has been predicted, but nothing substantial has been discovered to prove that these mounds were built by a people other than the ancestors of the present Indians. Extinct nations usually leave something behind, a memory at least, if not language, traditions, buildings, excavations, ruins, or monuments. The alleged races of men anterior to or distinct from the ancestors of the present Indians left nothing visible.

Mr. Warren K. Moorehead, in Primitive Man in Ohio, 1892, says that "some writers have misrepresented and distorted field testimony to uphold theories previously formed."

The rocks lie not, neither do the mounds and burial places when opened. One of the most exhaustive researches thus far for testimony of a race of people prior to and not ancestors of the present Indians of the United States was made of the mounds in the Ohio Valley in 1890–1891 by Warren K. Moorehead. The result of these researches, given in Primitive Man in Ohio, 1892, was that the persons buried in the mounds, presumably their builders, were of the American race, and necessarily the ancestors of the present North American Indians.

Mr. Moorehead, in the work cited, states the purposes of his book and gives his conclusions, as follows:

"For many years the great majority of readers upon American archæology and ethnology have believed in the existence throughout the Mississippi Valley of a nation called, for want of a better name,† "the mound builders." Hasty explorations of tumuli and inclosures in various parts of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys have been made by those desiring to further the popular belief. Books and numerous articles have been published in which the imagination was permitted to range unchecked. Statements were made without proper authority, speculations freely indulged in, and hypotheses were built upon foundations as unstable as those of sand. As a natural result many persons were led to attribute a high degree of civilization to the mound-building tribes of the Mississippi Valley. Fine relics or carved images taken from the mounds, the signification of which the collector could not satisfactorily explain, were accepted as evidence in support of the high status of these people. In spite of investigation and publications upon the part of learned institutions and private individuals, tending to dispel such deceptions, many intelligent people still retain false impressions while reading works that treat of primitive man.

*Indian: One of the aboriginal inhabitants of America. In general, Indians have no political rights in the United States; they can not vote at the general election of officers nor hold office. In New York they are considered as citizens and not as aliens, owing allegiance to the Government and entitled to its protection (20 Johns., 188, 633); but it was ruled that the Cherokee Nation in Georgia was a distinct community (6 Pet., 515; 8 Cow., 189; 9 Wheat., 673; 14 Johns., 181, 332; 18 id., 505). The title of the Indians to land was that of occupation merely, but could be divested only by purchase or conquest (2 Humphr., 19; 1 Dougl., 546; 2 McLean, 412; 8 Wheat., 571; 2 Washb. R. P., 521; 3 Kent. 378).—Bouvier's Law Dictionary, edition 1890.

†We are in favor of Dr. D. G. Brinton's term, "the American race."

"It is the purpose of our book to do away with certain of these illusions. In attempting this we are aware that a herculean task has been undertaken. But the time has arrived when men prefer facts to flights of fancy. We are therefore quite confident that our material, so carefully collected and thoughtfully weighed, will not be cast aside and its place usurped by the rash statements of hasty and incompetent investigators. Why there should be so much speculation and uncertainty concerning the life of our aborigines is inexplicable to us. No question of equal importance could have been more easily determined had the early writers given as much care and patience to mound exploration as is given at the present time.

"Conclusions: The skeletons of the brachycephalic people in the collections examined from the Great and Little Miami Valleys and those of the Scioto and Ohio suggest that they were strong and well built, and in stature slightly superior to the dolichocephali.

"No skeletons of gigantic size were discovered, and there is but little doubt that the progenitors of the American race were in height subject to the same variations in stature which are to be remarked among our recent tribes.

"In anatomical peculiarities the people of the Scioto, Ohio, and Great and Little Miami Valleys closely resemble those of the stone-grave people of Tennessee, and are in all probability but a prolongation of that short-headed stock northward in the localities named.

"In some of the large mounds, especially those of Hopewell's earthwork in the Scioto Valley and mounds of the Little Miami Valley, the crania are remarkable for their great thickness and low, retreating, narrow foreheads, with heavy superciliary ridges, these at times being replaced by a flat plane * * * running backward somewhat horizontally, and then losing itself in the rest of the frontal bone as it mounts toward the parietals. * * *

"We can not overlook the fact that the crania and skeletons examined by us, many of them excavated by our own hands, approached somewhat the negro in their anatomical characteristics. They are those of an inferior race, with strong mesocephalic and brachycephalic affinities. None of the characteristics of the Mongolian or of Mongoloid types are present in any of the Ohio crania which we have examined. They are evidently those of a people whose racial type was created and fixed on the American continent; in other words, the American race."

The ruins, cave towns, and cliff dwellings on the plains, in the cliffs, or along streams in Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona, and in some cases adjacent to the present Moqui Pueblos and Pueblos, have long been peopled by romance with legends of a race anterior to the ancestors of the present Indians. Much mystery has therefore attached to these ruins or dwellings. They have been mapped, platted, described, painted, and photographed until nothing new can now be given about them. Investigation shows that the pueblos were built of adobe, or sun-dried bricks, or stone blocks broken from the sandstone adjacent, or rubble or bowlders taken from the rivers or streams, and never of dressed stones as known to the whites; that they were the homes of the ancestry of the present Indians of the towns of the vicinity, a part of the American race.

The great area of the country covered by these ruins or dwellings is no evidence that it contained a vast population, for the country itself, its resources and features, prevented a large population, and a small population, abandoning easily built houses from time to time for economical or natural reasons, or flying to cave or cliff dwellings for protection against a foe or to escape sudden inroads of water, will account for the great number of ruins or dwellings. The present Moqui Pueblo Indians of Arizona and Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, living in the region of these ruins, are not a mysterious people nor a more ancient people than other portions of the North American Indians. Six of the Moqui towns are inhabited by Shoshone Indians. The people of the seventh town (Tewa), originally from the valley of the Rio Grande, are probably also Shoshone, as well as the nineteen pueblos of New Mexico. They are all probably a portion of the down drift of the Shoshone movement of centuries ago, which came from the north and went south down the valleys on the east and west of the Rocky Mountains to the Rio Grande, thence to the Gila, and thence to the Pacific Ocean.

The uncertainty surrounding the origin of the North American Indian raises several questions of interest: Are the American Indians within the present area of the United States and the cognate tribes adjoining, now in the Dominion of Canada, an original people? If so, when and how and where did they originate? If created on this continent, where was their Garden of Eden? If spontaneous in origin, why on this portion of the American continent and not elsewhere and everywhere? Is the Turanian theory of origin correct? Is the North American Indian of the brotherhood and unity of man? If so, he is an anomaly, and his origin, considered broadly, must be recent, as his thought, progress, and the results therefrom were in the first stages of savagery when discovered; and if he is of the brotherhood, why generally a nomad? Besides, his color and habits indicate an entirely different class of aboriginal man from any yet known, for he is the highest type of the wild man. Is he a proof that man first began about the north pole by reason of that portion of the earth cooling first and becoming tropical and inhabitable, and that from that point man spread over the world.

The great variety of life among the various tribes or peoples on the American continent when first noted by the whites is confusing on review, and furnishes but little ground for comparison. The varying degrees of progress or of detail of daily tribal life are perplexing; still, the climate of the several sections in which the aborigines were found in these varying conditions will account for much of the difference in customs, forms, and modes of life. Was the continent populated at different points by a different ancestry? The ruins of buildings in Central America are puzzling when compared with the tepees, or wigwams, of the aboriginal population to the north. The Mexican condition of life presents a problem not easily solved by comparison with the ruins of Central America. The life and government of Peru and Chile present another phase, and so on until Cape Horn is reached.

From the Arctic regions to Patagonia on the American continent human life, when viewed beneath the surface, defies dates as to its origin, duration, or any positive knowledge from whence it sprang in its great variety, and after all study, investigation, and the acquirement of and deductions from all possible knowledge, the safest conclusion as to the North American Indian is that at the advent of the whites he was and in 1890 he is.

It is in evidence that many Indian nations have become extinct from various causes, especially war, famine, and disease, since the European has been on the continent; others were described by the Indians, as having become extinct long prior to the white man's arrival, and since the white occupation not one Indian tribe has been made, save where tribes or bands have been consolidated; so that by observation and tradition, as well as their own statements, the thought is forced that the Indian nations or tribes or bands were on the decline at the date of the arrival of the whites under Columbus. Still, with all this presumably large aboriginal population in the United States, not a column of an aboriginal architectural structure is kissed by the sun; not a certain ancient ruin rises up to attract the traveler; not a vestige, except now and then a mud mound, a fort, or a grave; only traditions and legends remain to tell of the so-called pre-Columbian men and women.

As to the origin of the Indian, in 1836 Albert Gallatin, in his Synopsis of the Indian Tribes, wrote:

"The uniformity of character in the grammatical forms and structure of all the Indian languages of North America which have been sufficiently investigated indicates a common origin. The numerous distinct languages, if we attend only to the vocabularies between which every trace of affinity has disappeared, attest the antiquity of the American population."

Nothing to seriously change this view of a common origin for the North American Indian has been presented from 1836 to 1890, except the published opinions of Maj. John W. Powell, United States geologist and ethnologist. Maj. Powell, after a study of the North American Indians of more than twenty years, in the seventh annual report of the Bureau of Ethnology, of which Bureau he is the chief, gives as to these Indians the following conclusions, which are entitled to much consideration. It will be noted that Maj. Powell differs essentially from several other authorities:

"First. The North American Indian tribes, instead of speaking related dialects originating in a single parent language, in reality speak many languages belonging to distinct families, which have no apparent unity of origin.

"Second. The Indian population of North America was greatly exaggerated by early writers, and instead of being large was in reality small as compared with the vast territory occupied and the abundant food supply; and, furthermore, the population had nowhere augmented sufficiently, except possibly in California, to press upon the food supply.

"Third. Although representing a small population, the numerous tribes had overspread North America and had possessed themselves of all the territory, which, in the case of a great majority of tribes, was owned in common by the tribe.

"Fourth. Prior to the advent of the European, the tribes were probably nearly in a state of equilibrium, and were in the main sedentary, and those tribes which can be said with propriety to have been nomadic, became so only after the advent of the European, and largely as the direct result of the acquisition of the horse and the introduction of firearms.

"Fifth. While agriculture was general among the tribes of the eastern United States, and while it was spreading among western tribes, its products were nowhere sufficient wholly to emancipate the Indian from the hunter state."

Some scientists class the Indians at the date of European occupation as being in the lowest condition of man, some in a state of savagery and barbarism, the next highest condition, and others (notably the Atlantic coast tribes) as just touching in habits and methods the verge of the shadow of civilization. These classifications are useful, even if not true; but for a comprehensive view, having in mind the history of all the tribes, the one generic statement of a "wild man" best applies to these Indians. There is no evidence since European occupation that the Indian within any reasonable time would have developed into a civilized man, as the Anglo-Saxon defines it. He had no incentive to such a development. The country was large, and its resources natural and varied. Here and there may be isolated instances of Indian sagacity or ingenuity which promised something of advance, but, as with other races, an Indian to show progress usually had to be of a different tribal parentage. Keokuk is said to have had a French father and a Sac mother; Tecumseh, a Shawnee father and a mother of another tribe; Logan, an Iroquois father and a Delaware mother; Osceola, an English father and a Creek mother.

So of the Sioux of to-day. When they are leading men they are usually of a cross of blood within the bands of Sioux or with one parent from a different tribe. Have our ethnologists given this the weight it deserves? If probable that this mixture of blood is an essential element of Indian progress or greatness, why, then, are not the several tribes of different origin? The degrees in the original condition of the Indians at the advent of the whites are not essential to ascertain their condition in 1890, but if the fact be conceded as established that he is a "wild man," and fearfully wild at times, and the entire horizon of Indian life shows this, then much is gained toward changing and improving his condition. It is a matter of no moment for the purpose of improving his condition, whether he dropped from the clouds, came out of the ground, just grew, is the result of evolution, came from Asia by way of Bering Sea, or came from Europe across the Atlantic over a dike now out of sight.

The facts of his origin are not now so essential to a proper future treatment of the North American reservation Indian as the one fact yet to be ascertained, and his condition demands it, which is, "What shall the Government do with him?" His physical condition is of more moment to the National Treasury than his origin. His present and continued existence is serious enough to occupy attention without the theory of his origin, for theory it must always be, the witnesses on this point being as silent as Memnon, and Memnon speaks not. The North American Indian is one of the few races of man who has not a reasonable theory of his origin. Indians seldom, if ever, in their legends, account for their origin from a single individual or a pair of individuals. It is usually, if not always, by nations. At present the most of the 133,417 reservation Indians are more troubled about what the Government of the United States is going to do with them than who their ancestors were or from whence they came.

The Indian's daily bread is now his serious burden. The past or the future weigh little with him compared to the wants and needs of the present. His origin is vague and unknown to himself, his future the same, while tranquilly he leaves the present in the hands of the Government and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives; yet he scans the newspapers to learn who the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is, as his rations largely depend on that chairman and his colleagues of the Indian Committee. The North American reservation Indians sum up their origin in the words "I am" and their future in "I want."

The European found the Indians self-sustaining and self-reliant, with tribal governments* and many forms of worship, with ample clothing of skins and furs, and food fairly well supplied. In fact, they were in nowise in need of the white man's care, nor did they desire it. They were wild men and women, to whom the restraints of a foreign control became bonds of steel.

*The legal definition of an Indian tribe is: a separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. Such a tribe, situated within the boundaries of a State, and exercising the powers of government and sovereignty under the national Government, is deemed politically a State, that is, a distinct political society, capable of self-government; but it is not deemed a foreign state in the sense of the Constitution. It is rather a domestic dependent nation. Such a tribe may properly be deemed in a state of pupilage; and its relation to the United States resembles that of a ward to a guardian (5 Pet., 1, 16, 17; 20 Johns., 193; 3 Kent, 308-318; Story, Const., § 1096; 4 How., 567; 1 McLean, 254; 6 Hill, 546; 8 Ala., N. S. 49). No State can, either by its constitution or other legislation, withdraw the Indians within its limits from the operation of the laws of Congress regulating trade with them, notwithstanding any rights it may confer on them as electors or citizens (3 Wall., 407; 5 Id., 737, 761).—Bouvier's Law Dictionary, edition 1890.

RANK AND GRADES OF MEN IN INDIAN TRIBES.

In 1833 George Catlin, the eminent ethnologist, from observation, gave the rank and grades of men in the various Indian tribes, which, with some slight modifications for local forms and necessities, were general. The United States, since establishing the reservation system, has done much toward doing away with these grades. The United States Indian agents now approve or reject the selection of chiefs, if any be selected, and when there is a chief his power is nominal, no matter who selects or approves him. The constant hunt for the near necessities of life by the Indians has somewhat removed the old sense of dependence on the chief, because they find that instead of planning and executing raids on game preserves or other tribes for food and plunder, he is now as busy as they in hunting his daily bread. Indians are very much like other people; they know when their bread is buttered. The following are the grades given by Mr. Catlin:

"1. War chief: The first man of the nation; the first to whom the pipe is handed on all occasions, even in councils or treaties; the man who leads in battle, is first in war, speaks first in council of war and second in peace councils or treaties.

"2. Civil chief: The head man of the nation, except in times of war; speaks first and smokes second in peace councils; is chief orator of the nation.

"3. Warrior: A man who is not a chief, but has been on war parties and holds himself ready at all times for war excursions.

"4. Braves: Young men not distinguished as warriors, but known and admitted to be courageous, who stand ready at home to protect their houses and firesides."

As our Anglo-Saxon ancestor moved across the continent from the east to the west he met several types of the Indian; Indians living upon cultivated corn, grain, and vegetables, wild grains, fruits, and roots; flesh eaters, root diggers, and fish eaters. Everywhere he found the Indian conforming through necessity to his surroundings, taking advantage of the situation, and ingenious with the elements around him.

The highest intelligence was found among the Indians of the Atlantic coast and east of the Ohio River, this intelligence gradually decreasing, until the most squalid Indian was found beyond the Rocky Mountains and to the Pacific coast and northward, and in regions where the natural resources were limited.

Civilizations start to die, and to die where they are the oldest. So our Indian civilization, judged by this rule, began on the Pacific coast of the United States (being found virtually effete there 300 years ago), and proceeded across the continent to the Atlantic coast, where our ancestors found it fresh and vigorous, as indicated by the Indians they met.

Albert Gallatin, in 1836, wrote as follows of the North American Indians as agriculturists, hunters, fishers, and nomads:

"All the Indians of North America, north of the civilized districts of the Mexican Empire, may be arranged in two classes: those who cultivated the soil and those who derived their subsistence exclusively from the natural products of the earth and the sea. The territory over which cultivation had extended is that which is bounded on the east by the Atlantic, on the south by the Gulf of Mexico, on the west generally by the Mississippi, or perhaps more properly by the prairies; on the north, it may be said, by the nature of the climate. The northern boundary of cultivation was, near the Atlantic, that which divided the Abenakis from the Etchemins, including certainly the river Kennebec, and probably the Penobscot. With the exception of the Hurons and other kindred tribes on the northern shores of Lake Erie, there was no cultivation north of the Great Lakes; nor does there appear to have been any among the Chippeways, who occupied the country along the southern banks of Lake Superior. They and the Menomonies depended for vegetable food principally, if not altogether, on the wild rice or wild oats, as the plant is called.

"The few tribes west of the Mississippi which attend at all to agriculture have already been designated, as well as those which, extending thence to the Pacific, derive their principal means of subsistence either from the buffalo or from roots and fish. Nor were the inhospitable regions of the north destitute of those means. Innumerable lakes cover perhaps one-third of the inland country, and would afford an abundant supply of food to an industrious and provident population. The musk ox and the American reindeer are found under those latitudes where the buffalo and the common deer can not exist. Even along the shores of the Arctic Ocean and of its numerous bays, the Eskimaux appear to be as well provided as the more Southern Indians. Immense quantities of salmon are caught in the summer, and are easily preserved till the ensuing year. The seal, which is taken even during the winter, supplies the Eskimaux with food, fuel, light, and clothing; and even where there are neither trees nor driftwood, and where subterraneous abodes are not resorted to, or can not be excavated, the ice itself affords materials for winter dwellings as comfortable and as quickly constructed as the leather lodges or the bark huts of the erratic tribes.

"It is obvious that the population of nations which for their subsistence depend exclusively on natural products is necessarily limited by the quantity naturally produced. A nation of hunters, living exclusively on game, can not increase the quantity which a given extent of territory can sustain. All they can at most effect for that purpose is the destruction of carnivorous animals. If at any time their population should be so increased as to require a greater consumption of food than is afforded by the natural production of game, this would be checked, and the population would soon be diminished till the equilibrium was again restored. In order to keep up their numbers the Indians must resist any encroachment on their hunting grounds. They must fight in their defense against invaders as for existence. On the other hand, the great extent of ground necessary to sustain game sufficient for the subsistence of a very moderate population compels them to separate and to form a number of small independent communities. It may easily be perceived that the perpetual state of warfare in which neighboring tribes are engaged had its origin in the same cause which has produced the great diversity of American languages or dialects. We may also understand how the affections of the Indian became so exclusively concentrated in his own tribe, the intensity of that natural feeling, how it degenerated into deadly hatred of hostile nations, and the excesses of more than savage ferocity in which he indulged under the influence of his unrestrained vindictive passions.

"It is worthy of remark that the population of those hunting nations does not appear to have ever reached the maximum of which it was susceptible. We have the proof of this in the undiminished numbers of the buffalo in the prairies, and even of the deer in the north, and in the facility with which the numerous servants of the European and American trading companies derive their means of subsistence in those districts from the natural resources of the country, from the chase, or from the product of the lakes. The only species of animals which have decreased are those which supply furs and skins, for which commerce has created an extraordinary demand. The intestine wars of the Indians may have checked the increase of population, but this is not the only cause, and we may find another in their inveterate indolence, united, as it is, with that habitual improvidence, occasionally attended with the greatest privations, and even with famine.

"War and the chase are the only pursuits which the men do not think beneath their dignity. This is the uniform characteristic of all our Indian nations. When not thus engaged they sink into a state of mental apathy and physical indolence, from which strong stimulents alone can arouse them, and to this cause may be traced their excessive passion for gambling and for ardent spirits. Women are everywhere slaves and beasts of burden. Independent of that portion which naturally falls to their share, the cares of maternity and of the household, every other species of labor falls upon them; and this alone has prevented the beneficial effects which would otherwise have flowed from the introduction of agriculture.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

"It has already been seen that cultivation is exclusively confined to that portion of the country clothed with forests, which, between the Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico, extends from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, and hardly beyond it. This territory and Chile, in South America, might in some respects be considered as centers of an incipient civilization. But the Araucanians appear to have ceased to be hunters, and to have derived their subsistence exclusively from agriculture. Their long and successful resistance against the Spanish invaders proves them to have been a numerous and united people; they were not, like the Peruvians and Mexicans, under the yoke of a civil or religious despotism, and although they had not made the same progress in arts or knowledge, they may perhaps be considered as the most favorable specimen of the American race. The social state of the semi-agricultural nations of North America presents a very different picture. Cultivation among them appears to have been confined to the maize, some species of beans (phaseolus), and pumpkins (cucurbita), and in some quarters the sweet potato (convolvulus), the watermelon, and tobacco, all which plants were also cultivated in Peru. Maize, which constituted the most important article, is decidedly of Southern origin, but whether the cultivation first took place on the continent or in the West India Islands can not be ascertained. It would seem more probable that it originated in the favored elevated plains of the torrid zone, and that in its gradual progress it was introduced from the neighboring islands of the Gulf of Mexico into the country which lies along its northern shores. Its extension northwardly would be a natural process, and may have been favored by the greater difficulty of obtaining food where there is no fish, and the game, consisting principally of deer, is comparatively less abundant and obtained with greater labor than in the prairies. But the introduction of agriculture produced little alteration in the habits or manners of the men. They still continued to be hunters, and being too indolent to attend to the daily and tame labors of agriculture these were again thrown upon the women."

This last social condition continues, notwithstanding the efforts of the United States Government and philanthropists to change it. The North American reservation Indian is not a farmer.

THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS AT THE ADVENT OF THE WHITES.

Peaceful and genial at first, then murderous (on the Atlantic coast) at the advent of the whites, the Indians became more murderous, wild, and savage as our ancestors proceeded westward, this fierceness increasing and being aggravated by the advancing lines of Anglo-Saxon civilization.

The aboriginal American Indian furnishes a theme for poet and author. Most of the Indians of the present day furnish no theme save doubt and neglect. Cooper's novels, delightful and heroic, along with other Indian romance, have produced in the American mind a belief in a higher type of Indian than ever existed, or is even possible. So with all romance of Indian life. The high type demanded by false types in literature and poetry has worked gross injustice to the present North American Indian. It has created in the popular mind, in sections where he is not actually known, a false impression of his capacity, his manhood, and his fitness for the demands of Anglo-Saxon life. In fact, by reason of this false teaching, we expect too much of him. He has been placed upon a high pedestal in literature, story, and song, and at a distance, like the great statue, he shows neither defect nor lact of symmetry. On close inspection the present Indian clearly indicates a great decadence from his reputed ancestors, and convicts many of the writers contemporaneous with his forefathers of exaggeration. Most of the present North American reservation Indians are no credit to their ancestors of romance. If these ancestors were as pictured these modern descendants are certainly a most degenerate offspring.

As a rule, the present reservation Indian does not change unless compelled by necessity or force. Outside surroundings do not weigh upon nor affect him as they do other people. He welcomes death, but resists the tendered civilization. Indian life and civilization from his point of view are perfect, and have always been so. The continent was his, and he, an uncontrolled child of nature, the perfection of a wild man. What a life was his! He roamed without restraint. In early days he received cordially the few whites who visited him, and cheerfully divided his food with them.

Along streams in the interior prior to the advent of the Europeans the dugout canoe was the Indian's conveyance. He moved in his canoe, and the mounds of the Western and Southern States were his places of rest, defense, and burial. These mounds, generally along streams, are in the vicinity of rich alluvial soil, where corn or other crops were easily raised; besides, the streams gave fish and mussels for food.

The Spaniards brought the modern horse to America. Some of the horses escaped in the Southwest and ran wild in bands. The Indians soon captured and adopted them, and so after a time the canoe was partially abandoned, and as a result the roaming plains Indian followed. The new means of locomotion, the horse, became the Indian's inseparable companion. The interior of the country was thus easily explored, and tribes became migratory. The plains where the horse was found running wild became of value as horse-producing grounds, and almost incessant war was the result. In fact, if tradition was to be believed, war seems to have been the normal condition of the Indian tribes of North America. The horse, enabling him to follow the buffalo (used for food and clothes), and the claiming of the lands by the tribes encouraged his nomadic habits, and paved the way for his continued unsettled life. The buffalo grounds were also battlefields where the southern Comanche fought the northern Sioux and the Pawnee and the Cheyenne met in deadly conflict.

The wandering habits of many tribes and their varied manners and customs may account for the great number of tribal languages. Permanent and isolated tribal settlements also aided the growth of distinct speech. Then the ideal Indian life existed, for there was in fact no labor. The battle for the necessities of life was not a struggle as now, because game was abundant and people not so numerous. Skins and furs for clothing and for making lodges, tents, or tepees were plentiful; and the flesh of the fur animal was good for food. The streams abounded in fish, and the seasons brought the unfailing crops of roots and nuts. War, theft, and laziness in the males were virtues, and labor by the females a duty. The workers in the tribes were few, and the breadwinners were the decoy, spear, and bow and arrow.

Individuals, as a rule, knew no law of personal property. The patient squaw was then, as now, the stay of the family, being in fact a beast of burden and both camp guard and keeper, while the males loafed, hunted, stole horses, fished, or made war. Nature was supreme. Wants were comparatively few and easily supplied. Waste of flesh food was then the rule; still, with all his carelessness, the Indian had some idea of economy in the killing of beasts for food, as the buffalo herd or game preserves were invaded only in season.

In illustration of Indian life, consider the conditions and surroundings of lake and river Indians of the middle United States. The Pottawatomie, Chippewa, Ottawa, Huron, Wyandotte, Miami, Shawnee, and Kickapoo roamed along the lakes, rivers, and streams of what is now Ohio, Indiana, Northeastern Illinois, and Michigan. This was to them an ideal home. The water yielded fish, the trees shelter and fuel, the plains food and clothes. Why should man work in such a beautiful region? What use for labor where nature planted, reaped, and harvested? Why strive for more or for another life when abundance came with the seasons? The environments of civilization did not prevent the following of inclination. The Detroit River was then the favorite passageway and rallying point for the northwestern Indians. On it the canoes came and went, and it was an artery in the system of aboriginal life. Game was abundant, including bear, elk, moose, wolves, beaver, otters, muskrats, and rabbits. Wild berries were indigenous. The sugar maple contributed to the luxury of the savage taste.

The wild rose, honeysuckle, and clematis made the forest air fragrant, and along the waterways and lakes the lily waved its welcome of beauty in myriad blossoms. Night came as a time of rest, and while nature worked the Indian slept, and on the morrow, as the sun's rays kissed the longing earth, he arose to a bountiful repast not created by man. The incoming of the white man changed all this. The first sentence of the Latin tongue spoken in the Northwest ordained the death of the Indian. He felt it, and neither honeyed speech, tuneful song, nor gilded vestment and protecting church could reconcile him to the foreign invasion and control. The green wood soon echoed to the ax of the settler, and the stalwart son of the forest who had walked through his own possessions, alert and erect as the towering pine, became of necessity a stealthy or hiding outcast in the land of his fathers, and crawled by night amidst the groves where, prior to the advent of the whites, he had boldly walked by day as a man. Of this region Cadillac, who settled Detroit in 1701 (and was afterwards, in 1710, made governor of Louisiana), wrote:

"Its borders are so many vast prairies, and the freshness of the water keeps the banks always green. The prairies are bordered by long and broad rows of fruit trees which have never felt the careful hand of the vigilant gardener. Here, also, orchards, young and old, soften and bend their branches under the weight and quantity of their fruit toward the mother earth which has produced them. It is in this land, so fertile, that the ambitious vine, which has never wept under the knife of the vinedresser, builds a thick roof with its large leaves and heavy clusters, weighing down the top of the tree which receives it, and often stifling it in its embrace.

"Under these broad walks one sees assembled by hundreds the timid deer and fawn; also the squirrel bounding in his eagerness to collect the apples and plums with which the earth is covered. Here the cautious turkey calls and conducts her numerous brood to gather the grapes, and here also their mates come to fill their large and gluttonous crops. Golden pheasants, the quail, the partridge, woodcock, and numerous doves swarm in the woods and cover the country, which is dotted and broken with thickets and high forests of full-grown trees, forming a charming perspective which sweetens the sad lonesomeness of the solitude. The hand of the pitiless reaper has never mown the luxuriant grass upon which fatten woolly buffaloes of magnificent size and proportion.

"The fish are here nourished and bathed by living waters of crystal clearness, and their great abundance renders them none the less delicious. Swans are so numerous that one would take for lilies the reeds in which they are crowded together. The gabbling goose, the duck, the widgeon, and the bustard are so abundant that to give an idea of their numbers I must use the expression of a savage, whom I asked, before arriving, if there was much game there: 'So much,' he said. 'that they drew up in lines to let the boats pass through.'"

The North American Indians, in their aboriginal condition, had no slaves, and, in fact, no tribe had until about 1800. This fact largely accounts for their continued aboriginal condition and nonprogressive methods. Slaves from without their tribes, doing servile labor within them, and in sufficient numbers to be factors, would unquestionably have materially changed their condition. Of this and the possibilities suggested Albert Gallatin wrote in 1836:

"The annals of every nation of which we have any ancient and authentic records exhibit to us a state of society of which slavery constituted a component and important part. Such was the case with the Romans, with the Greeks, and with the Eastern nations, without excepting the Jews. It seems as if, after man had departed from the first ordinance given to him, conquest and slavery had become necessary ingredients in order to bring him within the pale of civilization.

"Had the Five Nations, or any other conquering Indian tribe, instead of murdering or adopting prisoners of war, reduced them to a state of slavery and made them their helots, they might have attained a Spartan civilization. That of Peru and Mexico was avowedly the result of conquest, and in both cases had for its foundation the abject servitude or submission of the many, the military power of the conquerors, and the yoke imposed by a false religion.

"The only well-ascertained instance among our own Indians of their having, at least in part, become an agricultural nation, meaning thereby that state of society in which the men themselves do actually perform agricultural labor, is that of the Cherokees [and Creeks], and it is in proof that in this case also cultivation was at first introduced through the means of slavery. In their predatory incursions they carried away slaves from Carolina. These were used to work, and continued to be thus employed by their new masters. The advantages derived by the owners were immediately perceived. Either in war or in commercial intercourse, slaves of the African race became objects of desire; and, gradually assisted by the efforts of the Government and the beneficial influence of the missionaries, some among those Indians who could not obtain slaves were induced to work for themselves."

That the North American Indian was a seafaring man prior to the advent of Europeans there is no evidence. He was not met with at sea or at a distance from the coast by the Europeans; he did not, as a rule, sail on the lakes, and his sailing on the rivers was in dugouts or rudely made craft. If he originally came by water across the sea his descendants early lost the trade of their fathers. Capt. Howard Stansbury mentions the launching of a boat in 1849 on Great Salt Lake, and the surprise it awakened among the Indians dwelling along its borders, and ventures the suggestion that it was the first boat they had ever seen. The North American Indian was a land lover. He held to the earth. The forest and plains had more charms for him than the roar of breakers and the crush of waves. He considered lands to be tribal, not individual property. He used lands he found vacant and fitted to his wants, but the individual use was merely possessory. The tribal lands, or claim for them, were held to most tenaciously, and the invasion of hunting grounds by other tribes was resisted, and frequently war followed. These national or tribal Indian land claims present a curious study of the beginning and protection of natural land rights.

"The lands of Indians, however, are owned, so far as owned at all, by the whole community, and in the case of the Algonquin tribes the chiefs had no real authority to alienate them without the consent of the tribesmen."—Francis Parkman, in A Half Century of Conflict, 1892, volume I, 214.

Investigation shows that the Indians prior to the coming of the whites had portioned out the surface of the country fairly well, and that by consent or tacit agreement separate sections of the country were occupied by tribes of the several stocks. In illustration: the Sioux, in a broad swath down the valley of the Mississippi, reached the far southeast; the Catawbas, of Siouan stock, were in North and South Carolina; the Biloxis in Louisiana, while the Tutelos, of the same stock, lived in Eastern Virginia. The Shoshonean stock roamed down through the middle basin between the Rocky and Sierra Nevada Mountains, in Idaho, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, to the Pacific Ocean, the Indians of the San Luis Rey Mission, in California, being of this stock.

Lands thus claimed were respected by the other tribes. The leagues of the Iroquois and the Dakotas seem to have been the comprehensive leagues, while in other instances adjoining tribes leagued as emergency required for attack or assault. Tribes were sometimes found in perpetual league, as for instance the Hurons and Shawnees.

Indian nomadic life prevented large families. The various Indian tribes were generally nomadic within the areas claimed by or conceded to them by other tribes. They moved with the seasons, following the game or going to corn-growing grounds, and large numbers of children would have been an incumbrance. Those who depended most upon agriculture were the most permanent, because the climate of the agricultural sections was unusually good, and the country, generally limestone, abounded in root crops and birds, and the streams contained fish.

These natural resources made this class of Indians less nomadic than those who were mere flesh eaters, depending on game. Indians were good judges of natural resources and possibilities, and they never of their own choice selected a desert on which to live. The Jesuits in North America never made a settlement which died out, except perhaps one, and that on the Missouri River. In fact, they almost all became cities. The prefix St. to a city in the present United States is pretty sure to designate an original Catholic location. These fortunate locations were due to the fact that the priests sought the Indian settlements or towns and always found them favorably located for fish, flesh, and water, and grain and root crops. If the Indian had not been so careful in his selection of the best lands he would not have so soon become an object of attack by "land-hungry" people. It remained for the white man to discover that the Indian was fitted for deserts and mountain tops, as is shown in many of the reservations upon which he is sojourning at present as a ward of the nation (leaning heavily upon the Treasury meanwhile) in some of the Western States and Territories. It may be asserted, as a rule, that the Indian has thrived fairly well upon lands where a white man could make a decent living.

INDIAN LANDS AND THEIR PURCHASE.

The early European doctrine was, that although the Indian was placed on the land by the Almighty it was only his to use until the white man should come over and claim it. This curious doctrine the Indian did not seem to understand, and does not understand to this day. The Supreme Court of the United States solemnly declared that the Indian had the possessory or occupancy title merely (though he was born on the land), and so he only held the fee in keeping for his white brother beyond seas.

After the reservations were established by executive order or by law they were and are still being diminished, by an actual decrease of reservation lines, either by the demans of settlers, forcing reduction, or by the modern method of allotment, the Indians, by the latter method, being paid for the excess of the reservation they occupy. When reservations are diminished in gross the Indians are paid for the area of the reservation which the Government takes possession of and disposes of under the various laws. The Indian does not, as a rule, get paid for the areas claimed originally by him, but for the area fixed for him as a reservation by the nation. There have been some limitations to this, however, prior to the days of reservations, when grants of money (divided pro rata) were made to small bands of Indians for civilization and support by reason of cession of lands, etc., and removal to other lands belonging to the Government; these removals were generally called "perpetual and permanent." Many of the tribes have had several such removals upon the same fiction of permanent homes.

The land that the nation now buys is not the lands embraced in the original claim of the Indians, but reservations, upon some of which the Indians have been arbitrarily placed. Some tribes, notably those in California, did not receive one dollar for their lands. Of course the Indian had to assimilate or remove. He could not assimilate, so he removed, and is now being allotted.

The Indian nations were divided into clans or gentes. Of this Albert Gallatin wrote in 1836:

"The Indians, as individuals, have preserved a much greater degree of independence than is compatible with a more advanced state of civilization. They will hardly submit to any restraints, and it is well known that the nominal title of chief confers but little power, either in war or peace, on their leaders, whose precarious authority depends almost entirely on their personal talents and energy. Yet we find that nominal dignity of chief, sachem, mingo, or king to have been, with but few exceptions, among all the Indians, not only for life but hereditary. But another institution belonging to all the southern, and of which traces may be found among the northern, nations deserves particular consideration.

"Independent of political or geographical divisions, the division into families or clans has been established from time immemorial. At what time and in what manner the division was first made is not known. At present, or till very lately, every nation was divided into a number of clans, varying in the several nations from three to eight or ten, the members of which, respectively, were dispersed indiscriminately throughout the whole nation. It has been fully ascertained that the inviolable regulations by which those clans were perpetuated among the southern nations were, first, that no man could marry in his own clan; secondly, that every child belongs to his or her mother's clan. Among the Choctaws there are two great divisions, each of which is subdivided into four clans, and no man can marry in any of the four clans belonging to his division. The restriction among the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Natches does not extend beyond the clan to which the man belongs.

"There are sufficient proofs that the same division into clans, commonly called tribes, exists among almost all the other Indian nations; but it is not clear that they are subject to the same regulations which prevail among the southern Indians. According to Charlevoix most nations are divided into three families or tribes. One of them is considered as the first and has a kind of preëminence. Those tribes are mixed without being confounded. Each tribe has the name of an animal. Among the Hurons the first tribe is that of the Bear, the two others of the Wolf and the Turtle. The Iroquois Nation has the same division, only the Turtle family is divided into two, the Great and the Little.

"The accounts are not so explicit with respect to the Lenape tribes. Mr. Heckewelder, indeed, says that the Delawares were divided into three tribes, but one of them, the Wolf or Minsi, had altogether separated from the others and was a distinct nation or tribe, and not a clan in the sense now under consideration."

Much study has been given this subject since Mr. Gallatin's time and most satisfactory results have been reached.

Wild and free life made the Indian improvident. It gave him no care for the future. Even now a week's rations is consumed in two days, for he eats prodigiously, and besides he is not certain there may be any on the morrow. Nature has also conspired to make the Indian thriftless and unstable. In his free condition he was the ideal wild man, pure and simple, and to this day many of them are but little changed in their wild instincts. Then the restraint upon his appetite, physical or otherwise, was satiety, and death was met with nerve and as a condition of life. Cunning and ingenious, and with some mechanical skill, he placed nature under tribute for arms, weapons, decoys, and game traps. As a hunter he was more adroit than the wildest game, more fleet of foot than the elk or deer, and more stealthy than the wolf.

The Indian camp life was then ideal, or almost so; but now the ideality has fled and only dirt remains. Peace reigned amid trees, which bore acorns or pine nuts for food and furnished shade and rest; in the mountain fastnesses or along the sides of valleys fern and flower joined hand in never-ending sleep; down moss-covered rocks trickled gleeful streams to join the music of children's laughter, and warriors planned murder, theft, and attack on rich and distant foes. The nights were lurid with the light of camp fires and the air shook with the shouts of men, as, in the dance, they invoked all powers to aid their designs.

The Indian village is the unit of organization in almost all the tribes. The individual is merged in the village. All classes of North American Indians had a village life. With the agricultural Indians the villages were of a permanent character. With the nomadic Indians lodges or tents, with their live stock and property, composed the village.

In peace the nomadic village was placed in a favored retreat, and here the Indians remained until war or the seasons forced them to remove. By marks or signs a band could tell what Indians had preceded it. As a rule, the bands of a tribe had their well-defined camping grounds, which were sacred to them. A tribe seldom, if ever, camped or lived in a compact mass. The villages were frequently remote, and in war were signaled with fires or alarmed by runners. In war old men and women cared for the camp and protected it. When a war party returned, one of their number was selected to bear a pole upon which were suspended the scalps taken from the enemy. Victorious Indians do not bring banners back to camp, because tribes have none; they bring scalps.

The Indian village or camp (town it was called by the Creeks) was and is now the seat of education, culture, comfort, and power with the Indian tribes. The individual who led a band was the head of the village, and his power in the council of his tribe depended upon the number of warriors in his village, just as civilized nations have their influence in the world by reason of their armies or navies. This Indian village life, the growth of centuries, is now partially perpetuated on large reservations, and the love of it is one of the chief causes of the Indian's resistance to the white man's customs. The Indian does not like to live isolated.

Dances preceded and followed all their movements, good or bad. There was then no right, by the Saxon rule, with the Indians. Necessity and inclination made laws for them, and with some of them it is the rule to this day. From the camps or villages the warriors sets out to acquire new honors or to meet death (killing and stealing then made honors). To them he returned alive, or his story came with the survivors. This was the life of the ancestors of the present North American Indians, and with some tribes it still continues.

The Latin and Anglo-Saxon life which poured in upon the Indian has been to him invasion. The pale face to him was a robber, who despoiled him of his lands and game, and so became for all time his enemy. From the Indian standpoint, Sitting Bull's bleached and upturned face, dead on the plains of Dakota, was the face of a hero, a patriot, who died for his race. The Indian's first impression of the white man was not very favorable, and to him the white man has not changed, except to be looked upon as more grasping. He found in the first white man the same instincts of trade and desire to oppress the lower orders of men that he finds now, together with much assertion of personal goodness.

How hard to make some white men understand the necessities of the age and to consent to changes essential to the march of progress, progress meaning in the case of the Indian, as in the case of other people, the engrafting of ideas, habits, and manners of one people upon another. Such a thing can not be done in a day.

The Indian of romance and story is an ideal Indian; the Indian of to-day is real, a serious problem, and a decided matter of fact. While not a producer in the economic sense, he is intensely alive in producing disorder at times, keeping the frontier in terror and the army in motion.

While the Indians in past ages had all the benefits arising from contact with beautiful scenery, all that bounteous nature could give to please, ennoble, or entrance, in an area so great that all climates were within his domain, and all altitudes, from the towering mountain sublime in its upreaching to the low and poetic ranges of hills where verdure lay the year round and the wild flower blossomed with each succeeding rain, no Indian was ever inspired to great deeds or excited to the softer ways of life by these grand effects of lavish nature. None of these beauties seem to have raised an Indian to ways of refined peace by the unrolling before him of nature's golden stores. Always the materialist, he seems to be ever content with material things.

It may be asserted that Indian eloquence has been aided by the beauties of nature, and his love of his country, as depicted in his interpreted speeches, shows the influence of scenery. Interpreters are usually ignorant men, and their interpretations may be correct or not; still there is the curious fact that this wild man has a love for the spot on which he was born, even though it be but a rock, and he sticks to it most tenaciously.

The Navajo women in 1867–1868 saved their tribe from being deported to a distant country by reason of their love of country and appeals to Gen. W. T. Sherman and the famous peace commission of 1868. The incident is given in the report of Special Agent Marmon, page 376.

Experience shows that the Indian's so-called eloquence lies chiefly in his gestures. Words are usually put into his mouth by interpreters, and his speeches are carefully edited before being put in print. The Indian vocabulary does not admit of much true oratory in speech, but his tones and gestures are always eloquent. Except an Indian be educated out of the Indian tongue, his periods are not musical and his ideas do not come forth in the compact Saxon method. An Indian is frequently eloquent with his eyes and hands, but seldom in his ideas, as expressed in the Indian tongue. Still, metaphors are much used in the speeches and conversation of Indians, particulary the Iroquois in New York.

When the weather is very cold the Iroquoian says "it is a nose-cutting morning;" of an emaciated person, "he has dried bones." A steamboat is "the ship impelled by fire." A horse is "a log-carrier." A cow is "a cud-chewer." In old times these Indians kept warm by covering themselves with boughs of hemlock; and now if an Indian is about to repair his cabin he says "I will surround it with hemlock boughs," meaning that he will make it warm and comfortable. When a chief has made a speech he finishes with saying "the doors are now open, you can proceed." The Iroquois call themselves "the older people" and the white man "our younger brother."

Indian graphic art shows the meagerness of his constructive power or idea, and his lack of mathematics accounts for his want of power of concentration.

As individuals the Indians sometimes show virtues which the whites could imitate with profit. Scores of incidents can be related of their faithful friendship to the whites during the present century, and many of them are capable of becoming good and industrious citizens with proper encouragement and aid, provided usually that the Indian father and mother are of different tribes.

Angeline Seattle in 1890 (supposed to be more than 100 years of age) resided in a cabin at Seattle, Wash. She is a type of the Puget Sound Indian. The illustrations of the Puyallup Indians show the irregular features of these Indians. Angeline is the daughter of Chief Seattle, whom Governor I. I. Stevens made a chief, and after whom the present city is named. She is known as the friend of the whites and as being the person who saved the early settlers of Seattle, along in the fifties, from massacre. The Indians of the region had confederated for an attack on the town. Angeline pushed her way into the settlement and informed the people. The man-of-war Decatur, lying in the harbor, shelled the woods about the town and drove the concealed warriors away. This old Indian woman has since been the favorite of Seattle, and is called the "Princess Angeline." Visitors look upon her with awe and wonder, both in respect to her person and her garments. She roams about at will, a general and welcome town charge. "Old Betz," a famous squaw in the Minnesota Sioux massacre of 1862, saved scores of whites from murder, and is gratefully remembered by the people of Minnesota. She died in 1873.

VARIOUS OPINIONS AS TO THE INDIANS.

A great variety of opinions, curious, quaint, and vague, can be found in historical travels and ethnological works upon almost all the Indian tribes. It is almost impossible to form a correct judgment from published opinions as to the Indians of the whole country, especially of those west of the Missouri River. The following as to the Shoshones is the opinion of Hubert H. Bancroft. (Native Races—Wild Tribes, 1886, volume 1, pages 440, 441.) The grass-eating Shoshones, whom he mentions, would be singular kind of men, and their exact location would be of value to ethnology at this time:

"The character of the better Shoshone tribes is not much worse than that of the surrounding nations; they are thieving, treacherous, cunning, moderately brave after their fashion, fierce when fierceness will avail anything, and exceedingly cruel. Of the miserable root and grass eating Shoshones, however, even this much can not be said. Those who have seen them unanimously agree that they, of all men, are lowest. Lying in a state of semi-torpor in holes in the ground during the winter, and in spring crawling forth and eating grass on their hands and knees until able to regain thir feet; having no clothes, scarcely any cooked food, in many instances no weapons, with merely a few vague imaginings for religion, living in the utmost squalor and filth, putting no bridle on their passions, there is surely room for no missing link between them and brutes."

Mr. Bancroft then, in the work named, gives the following authors as to the Shoshones:

"The Shoshones of Carson Valley 'are very rigid in their morals.'—Remy and Brenchley's Journal, volume 1, page 85. At Haw's ranch, 'honest and trustworthy, but lazy and dirty.'—Idem, page 123. These Kusi-Utahs 'were very inoffensive, and seemed perfectly guileless.'—Idem, volume 2, page 412. The Pai-uches 'are considered as mere dogs, the refuse of the lowest order of humanity.'—Farnham's Life and Adventures, page 376. The Timpanigo Yutas 'are a noble race, * * * brave and hospitable.'—Idem, page 371. The Pi-utes are 'the most degraded and least intellectual Indians known to the trappers.'—Farnham's Travels, page 58. 'The Snakes are a very intelligent race.'—Idem, page 62. The Bannacks are 'a treacherous and dangerous race.'—Idem, page 76. The Pi-Edes are 'timid and dejected;' the Snakes are 'fierce and warlike;' the Tosawitches 'very treacherous;' the Bannacks 'treacherous;' the Washoes 'peaceable, but indolent.'—Simpson's Route to California, pages 45–49. The Utahs 'are brave, impudent, and warlike, * * * of a revengeful disposition.'—Graves, in Indian Affairs Report, 1854, page 173. 'Industrious.'—Armstrong, in idem, 1856, page 233. 'A race of men whose cruelty is scarcely a stride removed from that of cannibalism.'—Hurt, in idem, page 231. 'The Pah-utes are undoubtedly the most interesting and docile Indians on the continent.'—Dodge, in idem, 1859, page 374. The Utahs are 'fox-like, crafty, and cunning.'—Archuleta, in idem, 1865, page 107. The Pi-Utes are 'teachable, kind, and industrious, * * * scrupulously chaste in all their intercourse.'—Parker, in idem, 1866, page 115. The Weber-Utes 'are the most worthless and indolent of any in the Territory.'—Head, in idem, page 123. The Bannacks 'seem to be imbued with a spirit of dash and bravery quite unusual.'—Campbell, in idem, page 120. The Bannacks 'are energetic and industrious.'—Danilson, in idem, 1869, page 288. The Washoes are 'docile and tractable.'—Douglas, in idem, 1870, page 96. The Pi-Utes are 'not warlike, rather cowardly, but pilfering and treacherous.'—Powell, in idem, 1871, page 562. The Shoshokoes 'are extremely indolent, but a mild, inoffensive race.'—Irving's Bonneville's Adventures, page 257. The Snakes 'are a thoroughly savage and lazy tribe.'—Franchere's Narrative, page 150. The Shoshones 'are frank and communicative.'—Lewis and Clarke's Travels, page 306. The Snakes are 'pacific, hospitable, and honest.'—Dunn's Oregon, page 325. 'The Snakes are a very intelligent race'.—White's Oregon, page 370. 'The Pi-Utes are as degraded a class of humanity as can be found upon the earth. The male is proud, sullen, intensely insolent; * * * they will not steal; the women are chaste, at least toward their white brethren.'—Farley, in San Francisco Medical Press, volume 2, page 154. The Snakes have been considered 'as rather a dull and degraded people, * * * weak in intellect and wanting in courage; and this opinion is very probable to a casual observer at first sight, or when seen in small numbers, for their apparent timidity, grave and reserved habits give them an air of stupidity. An intimate knowledge of the Snake character will, however, place them on an equal footing with that of other kindred nations, either east or west of the mountains, both in respect to their mental faculties and moral attributes.'—Ross's Fur Hunters, volume 2, page 151. 'Les Sampectches, les Pagouts et les Ampayouts sont * * * un peuple plus miserable, plus degrade, et plus pauvre. Les Français les appellant communément les Dignes-de-pitié, et ce nom leur convient à merveille.'—De Smet, Voyages, page 28. The Utahs 'paraissent doux et affables, très-polis et hospitaliers pour les étrangers, et charitables entre eux.'—Idem, page 30. 'The Indians of Utah are the most miserable if not the most degraded beings of all the vast American wilderness.'—Domenech's Deserts, volume 2, page 64. The Utahs 'possess a capacity for improvement whenever circumstances favor them.'—Scenes in the Rocky Mountains, page 180. The Snakes are 'la plus mauvaise des races des Peaux-Rouges qui j'ai fréquentées. Ils sont aussi parcesoux que peu prévoyants.'—Saint-Amant, Voyages, page 325. The Shoshones of Idaho are 'highly intelligent and lively * * * the most virtuous and unsophisticated of all the Indians of the United States.'—Taylor, in California Farmer, April 27, 1860. The Washoes have 'superior intelligence and aptitude for learning.'—Idem, June 14, 1861; see also idem, June 26, 1863. The Nevada Shoshones 'are the most pure and uncorrupted aborigines upon this continent; * * * they are scrupulously clean in their persons and chaste in their habits; * * * though whole families live together, of all ages and both sexes, in the same tent, immorality and crime are of rare occurrence.'—Prince, in idem, October 18, 1861. The Bannacks 'are cowardly, treacherous, filthy, and indolent.'—Schoolcraft's, volume 4, page 223. 'The Utahs are predatory, voracious, and perfidious; plunderers and murderers by habit; * * * when their ferocity is not excited their suspicions are so great as to render what they say unreliable, if they do not remain altogether uncommunicative.'—Idem, volume 5, pages 197, 198. The Pa-Vants 'are as brave and improvable as their neighbors are mean and vile.'—Burton's City of the Saints, page 577. 'The Yuta is less servile, and consequently has a higher ethnic status than the African negro. He will not toil, and he turns at a kick or a blow.'—Idem, page 581. The Shoshokes 'are harmless, and exceedingly timid and shy.'—Brownell's Indian Races, page 538."

The real North American Indian sometimes dresses in highly colored blankets, when he can buy them, or in the Government blue blankets sometimes furnished him, but when in the vicinity of towns or settlements he wears the rags cast off by the whites.

Delegations of Indians visiting Eastern cities and the Indians usually seen in the East are well dressed and present a fantastic appearance. They impress with their picturesque garb. What a magnificent sight! we exclaim. To see a tribe, in their native condition on the plains, thus dressed would be a sight indeed. The truth is, the dress is borrowed, and the entire wardrobe of a tribe is drawn upon to fit out the visiting statesmen, the several owners of the traveling wardrobe remaining at home tightly rolled up in blankets. Photographs of Indians kept on sale are those of Indians fixed up for artistic effect and to catch the popular eye. When at home, rags and feathers or nature are the usual dress and decoration of the reservation Indians, except where the Government provides. A visiting Indian is a very different person in appearance from an Indian at home.

The squaws in winter roll their lower limbs in gunny sacks, presenting a most curious side and front view; they capture all the cast-off female clothing of towns in their vicinity on the frontier. Buckskins and furs are now almost gone. In fact, anything will do for body covering.

On the bank of a river stood an Indian (in the land of the Piutes) some years ago in the bracing air of an early May morning, dressed in an abandoned society coat, buttoned backward, a pair of eyeglasses, and a high, white hat with a black crepe band. This costume was really startling. He was an Indian dude, the envy of his tribe. The possession of so much personal wealth caused his death. In the night time he was murdered by a fellow Indian, his body thrown in the river, and the next day the murderer appeared in the dress coat.

The real reservation Indian is usually filthy in his person, habits, and methods. He eats uncooked food (food unfit for swine) and vermin, and changes his clothes when they drop off from decay or lack of buttons or straps. He is offensive in odor and thriftless in all things pertaining to the economy of life. He is the constant and agreeable companion of every kind of vermin. Virtue is lost with some of the Indians, if it ever existed.

When a squad of Indian youths arrive at an industrial or training school, fresh from a reservation, the hose and water cans are made ready. In one case the coachman who drove the wagon from the depot to an Indian school (not his first experience with a load of red children from a Western reservation) insisted upon leaving the wagon seat and riding one of the horses while on the way to the school with a load of children, and the gentleman who was sent to receive them insisted upon walking behind the wagon to the house. It was not hospitable, but it was personal safety.

Upon the arrival of the wagon the boys were taken back of a building, hosed down, and given new clothes, which they put on, and their recent coverings were burned. Dirt and the average reservation Indian seem to have formed a partnership at birth, and thus far no means have been discovered to divorce the combination. With all their filth and dirt, however, they are not the only dirty people in the world. They live no worse than the very poor class of the great cities of Europe and America. See the annual reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for a description of the personal habits of the members of the several reservation tribes.

"The most powerful Southern nations appear to have been, upon the whole, less exterminating than the Northern Indians. It is also probable that the impenetrable swamps and the multiplied channels or bayous by which the delta of the Mississippi and the Red River country are intersected have afforded places of refuge to the remnants of conquered tribes."—Albert Gallatin, 1836.

The American colonists had a severe experience with the Indians, and Mr. Jefferson, in writing the Declaration of Independence, expressed the prevailing opinion of them when he wrote in that instrument of the "merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions."

The European did not teach the Indian the brutalities of war. From the statements made to the first (and as for that to the last) white men with whom he came in contact, the normal condition of the North American Indians prior to the advent of Europeans was war, cruel and bloody. The several tribes, when they fought, fought to exterminate. They had no firearms or swords of steel, but they used with cunning brutality the club, spear with stone point, bow and arrow, and the stone brainer; rude but effective weapons. These wars were generally for encroachments on fish or game preserves or territory.

The Europeans taught the Indians the use of firearms. They also taught them the value of cunning and diplomacy in transactions with men; and so after a time under this tutelage the Indian laid aside his club and spear and depended more upon deceit, words with double meaning; as he puts it, "speaking with a forked tongue." The Caucasian also initiated him into the mystery of drunkenness, for it is not noted that the Indian had an intoxicant prior to the time the Europeans first met him. Smallpox and venereal diseases were also the white man's contributions to his red brother's ills.

At the advent of the Europeans, and especially in Virginia, the Indians, according to their own statements, were exterminating themselves. They told fabulous stories of great tribes of Indians once in existence, but now extinct; of vast hordes of large-sized men and women in the west of the continent, who were overcome and destroyed. Their imaginations from time to time increased these exterminated tribes and their numbers.

After the white men came to the continent they put a stop, where possible, to the Indian tribes fighting one another, and the Indian became so busy in watching the white man and his movements that he had no time to battle with his fellow Indians; and so for the first one hundred years after the white man came the Indians probably increased.

It may be safe to say, keeping well in mind the Indians' stories and legends of their wars and results, that had the white man delayed his appearance a hundred or more years, many tribes of Indians would by their own acts and policy have ceased to exist.

"There is a disposition to assume that events like that just recounted were a consequence of the contact of white men with red; but the primitive Indian was quite able to enact such tragedies without the help of Europeans. Before French or English influence had been felt in the interior of the continent a great part of North America was the frequent witness of scenes still more lurid in coloring and on a larger scale of horror. In the first half of the seventeenth century the whole country, from Lake Superior to the Tennessee, and from the Alleghanies to the Mississippi, was ravaged by wars of extermination, in which tribes, large and powerful by Indian standards, perished, dwindled into feeble remnants, or were absorbed by other tribes, and vanished from sight. French pioneers were sometimes involved in the carnage, but neither they nor other Europeans were answerable for it."—Francis Parkman, in A Half Century of Conflict.

Still, along the Indian trail to oblivion, the white man, in many cases, has been as brutal and fiendish as the Indian, and with less excuse, for one is cultured and the other wild and untutored. There has been up to within a few years past but little humanity, charity, or justice in much of the white man's treatment of the American Indian. No apology can be offered for it; no excuse, save the domination for a time of the brute in our superior white race and the attempt to out-Herod Herod, for at times Indians have been wantonly murdered or used like beasts. The Indian is a coward in warfare, because he fights behind rocks and bushes, and usually begins his wars with the murder of white women and children. He is at all times treacherous, and fights like a wild animal, stealthily creeping and crawling up to his prey, but when cornered he fights like a devil incarnate. Indians who are brutally brave in battle are at other times arrant cowards.

The fierce and warlike Apache of Arizona, cruel and brutal in his warfare, hides like a coward at night, and traveler or soldier is always safe from attack from him after nightfall. The darkness to the Indian is peopled with evil spirits and dreaded and dangerous forms, so he hides away until daylight. The once cruel and dreaded Brule Sioux on the Brule Reservation, South Dakota, will not venture abroad at night, and, when forced to do so, will keep up an incessant hallooing, and will not go far unless answered by a friendly shout.

As an interesting and curious fact, almost all the superstitions and customs recorded of the Indians during the past four hundred years still exist, or traces of them can be found among both the wild and so-called civilized tribes, and frequently with Indians taxed not in tribal relation or their descendants. Of course, this embraces reliable and authentic superstitions and customs, and not the idle fancies of imaginative Indians.

In illustration of Indian tenacity in holding to old customs, an Indian and his moccasins are yet almost inseparable companions. He seems born in them; he walks and sleeps in them, and he is buried in them. An Indian may be habited in a dress suit, but the chances are that his feet are covered with moccasins. In the Army he dresses in uniform, but almost always insists on the moccasins. At the training and industrial schools it is with difficulty that he can be induced to discard them. Even after Indians are known as civilized they will be seen with moccasins.

Most of the American Indians are pigeon-toed, growing out of the fact, probably, that having no heels on their moccasins and walking on the ball of the foot, the foot turns inward; the male Indians also have a habit of crossing their feet when they sit.

INDIAN KNOWLEDGE OF MEDICINE AND INDIAN MEDICINE MEN.

For a long time it was believed that the North American Indian possessed positive and useful knowledge of the medicinal properties of plants, roots, and herbs, and certain portions of animals or birds indigenous to their country. Marvelous stories have been told of this knowledge and the cures made through it. Many white men have become rich from the sale of supposed Indian remedies, which, of course, the Indians never saw or even knew of. Investigation shows that if they possessed any such knowledge it was exceedingly limited. Their surgery was and still is of the crudest character, and in some cases almost brutal. Superstitions, appeals to charms, incantations, and trickery were and now are the chief remedies used by the Indian medicine man, or shaman, as will be seen by the reports of the special agents. Childbirth is attended to by women. The report of Special Agent Reuben Sears, page 454, inferentially shows what has been known to a very few Indian querists, that the polygamy of most Indian men is largely in the nature of lechery. The Indian medicine men are simply the vilest of quacks, working upon the credulity of the people. Through their acts and advice many deaths and some murders have recently been committed. They should be abolished wherever it is possible for the United States authorities to reach them.

N. B. Meacham, in "Wi-ne-ma," writes of the medicine man as follows:

"The medicine man of the Indian is not selected in the same manner as are the medicine men of the white race. He does not choose the profession as an easy way to make a living; he knows too well the fearful responsibility of his position. He has seen the medicine man too often slain on account of his failure to cure. Hence the position is one not sought, but, as they believe, is forced upon them by the Great Spirit. The indications of the selection appear at various ages: sometimes in childhood, sometimes in middle life, and again in old age. The first intimation of being tow-ed is by bleeding at the mouth or by becoming crazed with jerkings and twitchings of the muscles. When these manifestations appear the tribe or band is notified and a council is called, on which occasions the older doctors officiate. It is one of great importance to all the people, inasmuch as the medicine man has so much power.

"The candidate is very solicitous because of the fearful responsibility involved in assuming the office. He dare not resist the spirit, as doing so would imperil his life forever, present and future. Hence he comes to the examining council with trepidation, sometimes like the man in civil life called of God to preach the gospel comes, when he hears those words which have driven thousands of men into the ministry, 'Woe is me if I preach not the gospel.' Such a conviction has the Indian medicine man; and though he may not hear those same ominous words he feels them with as much reality and obeys with as much faith as ever candidate for ministerial orders went before a board of deacons and elders.

"When the council is convened the preparations are completed by the older doctors making prayers and offering sacrifices, killing white-haired dogs and hanging the skins upon a pole which is raised above the council. On the top of the pole are placed the tail feathers of the great medicine hawk, which is called the 'king hawk' because of his mastery over all other birds. The skins of the white weasel, the otter, the mink, and black fox, all of which are said to be 'sacred,' are also hung upon the pole. These sacred skins are supplied by the older doctors, or the friends of the candidate, and they are his after the ceremony is over if he shall be found to be a doctor of the right kind; for with these people some of them are called of the good spirit and some of the bad spirit. The authority under which they act is a matter of great concern to all parties and more especially to the candidate himself; for should he prove to be called of the evil spirit his ministry is of short duration, ending his life as soon as the authority is clearly recognized, unless he escapes. It may be easily understood why 'the bringing out' of a medicine man is a great event."

In November, 1892, "Runs With," a famous medicine man of the Sioux at Rosebud Agency, South Dakota, in testifying before a grand jury at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., in the case of Ghost Hawk for the murder of his wife, thus detailed how he became a medicine man. He was one of the medicine men called in to see the woman:

"My heart told me that I should be a medicine man, and I went upon a mountain and fasted and prayed for two days awaiting a sign from the Great Spirit. At the end of the second day as the sun was going to sleep, I saw a great light which blinded my eyes and heard a noise as of a rushing of many waters. I looked again and around me were four animals; a black-tailed deer, a white-tailed deer, a wolf, and a buffalo. They all spoke the speech of men. They said the Great Spirit had heard my prayer and had sent them to me. The animals then took me over the prairie and told me what plants were hurtful and what were good for my people. They told me what diseases of men the good herbs would cure, and then they vanished as suddenly as they had come. I returned to my people and told the chiefs what I had seen, was made and have since been a medicine man."

The medicine man's theory of the death of Ghost Hawk's wife was that the arteries in the arm were broken by the twisting of the arm, and that the arteries kept on breaking until the patient's heart broke.

Experience has shown that the deportation of warlike Indian tribes is the most effectual way to make them peaceable. The Sioux were removed from Minnesota to various States and Territories after 1863; the Modocs, from California to Indian Territory in 1874; the Nez Perces (Joseph's band), from Idaho to Indian Territory in 1877, and Geronimo's Apaches, from Arizona to Mount Vernon barracks, Alabama, in 1887. Removing Indians from their ancient haunts deprives them of natural methods, and knowing nothing of the topography of a new country by experience or maps, and surrounded by whites, it takes them years to learn hiding places and food and water resources. On his native heath the Indian fights for the graves of his ancestors, and his roaming ground, in fact, his home. Removed, he sits and mopes, a stranger in a strange land. Deportation, however, is a costly thing, for after deportation the Indians must be fed.

The use of force with Indians is frequently the effective method; in some events, the only method. One fight with the whites won by Indians awakes their vanity, arouses their pride, and means death to unwary travelers. Runners are sent out after such events and neighboring tribes or warriors invited to join the victors. When once whipped soundly after an outbreak, Indians send out runners to advise their friends of their defeat, just as they do in case of victory. When whipped an Indian's first demand is for a "big talk," a council. By these councils the Indians usually get a temporary relief from control, get some presents, and then go back to their old ways. Of course, a treaty is made, or some kind of an agreement. The Indian, however, when he has the power, hears no cry but the groans of the dying. He hears no appeal until the last soldier is dead. Scores of instances of his barbarous methods in battle, when he has power, can be found during the last hundred years. The Dade massacre, the Fort Fetterman massacre, and the Custer massacre are striking illustrations. In these three affairs only one white man got away alive, and he in the Dade massacre. Sentiment is wasted on an Indian when his blood is up; the bullet only can then obtain his attention; starvation will also cause him to stop.

The Indian is the embodiment of cruelty. Boy or man, he enjoys torturing all living things, and the women in this respect far excel the men. Cruelty is born in them in many cases. The prolonging of human suffering while torturing a white captive the Indian can accomplish with rare dexterity.

The Indian squaw is the tenderest possible mother, affectionate, loving, and even going hungry for her child; at the same time she is a fiend in war with the whites, and is the embodiment of cruelty in her methods of torturing the captives, men, women, and children. The American Indian squaw is the inventor of more kinds of torture for women and children than one can well enumerate.

The ancestors of the present Comanches at Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Agency, Oklahoma, were noted for their cruelty to prisoners. The Comanches in the olden times, or in early Texan days, were known as Comanches of the Woods (those who lived in the timber) and Comanches of the Prairies (horse Indians).

Senator Sam Houston, in the Senate of the United States, December 31, 1854, in speaking of them, said:

"There are not less than 2,000 prisoners (whites) in the hands of the Comanches, 400 in one band in my own State. * * * They take no prisoners but women and boys (killing the men). The boys they treat with a degree of barbarity unprecedented, and their cruelties toward the females are nameless and atrocious."

Many illustrations of the habits of the Sioux and other tribes in mutilating the dead whites after battle or massacre may be found in official reports of Government officers.

Squaws and children actually engage in war when necessary. In a fight which the Mojaves had with the soldiers near Fort Mojave, Arizona, in 1866, their chief got up into a cottonwood tree so that he could direct their movements. The soldiers ran out of ammunition and fixed their bayonets. The old chief called out to his men: "The soldiers are squaws; they are stopping up their guns; they won't fight any more." Just then another detachment came and opened a cross fire. A private shot the old chief out of the tree, and the soldiers were victorious. During the fight the old women formed a line in the rear of the warriors and held them up to the work, seizing and throwing them back when they tried to run. The squaws frequently fight in the line along with the men, and children of 10 years of age have been found with rifle in hand.

The North American Indian, unlike other races, posesses no affection, love or gratitude for his fellow-man. The Indian has an insatiable greed for money, and change in his condition can be aided by giving him a chance to acquire it. The conclusion at which close students have arrived is that he is a wild man (not a brute), and intermarriage with whites or negroes, or force, large quantities of beef, work, or death can alone disperse him. The iron gong of civilization has long since called him, but he refuses to be garnered.

The average Indian, while low in his instincts, has the basis for much intellectual development. He is at all events the beginning of a man. Considering him from the Anglo-Saxon standpoint, he is in his native condition most dangerous and unlovable.

Indians as a class are egotists. Their egotism asserts itself in their tribal as well as personal matters. Each tribe asserts itself to be "the people," the other tribes being mere "raise ups" or "drop offs." The medicine men are unusually oppressive egotists. One of the special agents of the Eleventh Census while at a Sioux reservation was importuned by a medicine man not only to attend his medicine lodge and see the ceremonies, where, said he, "you will see the greatest Indian medicine man in all the world, myself," but was asked by him to attend a special dinner at his tepee. His inducement was that he had obtained a delicacy of great gastronomic value which he alone could properly cook and serve. This was on beef or issue day; he had the delicacy in a gunny sack on his pony. He further informed the special agent that he had asked seven chiefs and headmen to dine with him at the same time.

The agent accepted the invitation and expected not only to enjoy a true Indian dinner, but to see much of Indian society, as the guests were noted Sioux of the Missouri. Curious as to the dinner, the special agent mentioned it to the reservation butcher. The latter informed him, in a note of warning, that the medicine man had secured from him that day, as a rarity for his guests' dinner the next day, and was carrying it home in the gunny sack, a tumor of 30 pounds' weight cut from a cow. It is hardly necessary to add that the special agent did not dine with the greatest medicine man in the world.

With all his lack of reasoning powers, the Indian has rare perceptive faculties in the matter of the retention of his own property, and he discovers dangers to it at the proper moment. These faculties are inborn. It is the faculty common to all men and animals, that of protecting life and property.

In one of Raleigh's expeditions, the first to New Albion, one of his captains (Amidas or Barlow) upon landing met a band of Indians who lived in houses built of wood. The chief wore upon his head a platter-shaped or bowl-like helmet of shining metal. The captain, thinking it gold, wanted to inspect it, and tried to take it off the red man's head. The Indian, with rare judgment (born with him) promptly declined and retired in haste. He probably desired to retain the helmet He knew the white man at sight.

This lord of the forest and plains, strange to say, has become under present influences, on most of the reservations, a persistent, constant, and unceasing beggar. No matter what his rank or station, when you visit his reservation, he meets you with a begging proposition, and he esteems you in proportion to your giving qualities. Your yield is his measure of affection for you, and he never questions about the object given. He will receive anything. He possesses the faculty of looking the expectant donor squarely in the face. By the Homeric rule that "shamefacedness is a bad quality in a beggar," the North American reservation Indian is well qualified for begging.

The noninvestigating humane people of the East look upon the Western citizen as the hereditary enemy of the Indian. In looking at this proposition now, it is well to remember that times change and that railroads and telegraphs have united all places, and that around almost all of the Indian reservations (save, say, twelve) can be found the same civilization and the same moral forces as in any city in the East. The pioneer is a man of the past. The mountain men are few in number, and the white cutthroats and murderers are seldom seen. Men with love of greed are plenty, but what point is free from them?

The Indians occupying large reservations are frequently allowed to go to towns and cities, but usually have a pass or permit to do so from the agent, giving the time they are to be absent. An Indian, when off the reservation or on the plains, on approaching travelers, at once produces his "paper" or permit to leave the reservation, or a letter from a white man certifying to his character. At times these papers are very necessary, as white men have frequently begun shooting when the Indian could not produce a leave of absence from an Indian agent or a certificate from a white man.

The expert special agent in 1868 met a Shoshone Indian named Taytober (and whose son he found on the Bannock Reservation twenty-two years afterward in Idaho) near the Boise River who carried "a paper." He was a splendid type of man, eloquent in gesture and honest in purpose. The following is the paper:

"ROSE FORK, IDAHO, July 4, 1868.

"This Indian's name is Taytober. He is a thoroughbred. He goes without the bell tapping. He is also a gentleman, and you can bet your life he will do what he agrees to do. Make him your friend, for he is a good one. Do the square thing by him and he is a honey-cooler. Do anything mean to him, and he is a johan, and he will get even. Brace him up with food when he hands you this, as he is always hungry; no rum, but beef, and plenty of it.

"WILLIAM TROTTER AND UNCLE.
("GEORGE SMITH.")

The following are other Indian "papers:"

"JUNE 30, 1871.

"To whom it may concern: The bearer of this note is a Sho-sho-ne. He has no name; he has few of the necessaries of life, and tries hard in an honest way to procure more. He always appears to be satisfied with his lot, and has nothing in his appearance to recommend him to your attention, but he has traits in his character that are worthy of imitation. Study him, and you may see them.

"J. P. GIBSON."

"BRIDGER, UTAH, June 1, 1867.

"This will be presented by Moss Rose, or 'Dirty Pete,' a Washakie Shoshone. Keep him away about 5 feet when he presents it; also lock your valuables up in your fireproof when you see him coming, for he is a great beggar. In the meantime, if you have any jerked meat turn him loose at it. He don't care whether it's cooked or not. Ten to 12 pounds of good meat, bear, elk, deer, or buffalo, lunches him. He don't want any trimmings with the meat, and you needn't hand him a napkin, either. He is not a bad Indian, but he is so dirty. He counts in dirt for two Indians when the agent rounds up the band for issue. Treat him well; his faults are few, and vices small ones. His word's good.

"JAMES BRIDGER."

Indians can by law abjure their tribes and become citizens when they like. When once off the reservation they work, beg, or go about as they please; but the whites usually do not like to pay an Indian as much for his work as they do other men.

The Western people, being the party most directly interested, want the Indian question settled. Believing the Indian to be a savage, and that thus far the Government has not civilized him, they want to be relieved of the danger of being murdered and having their wives and children also butchered and slaughtered. These people can not understand why a law is passed to prohibit them from carrying a pistol, while the Indian can roam at large with a repeating rifle in his hand.

Many people in looking at the Indians see only the men, women, and children, and not the surroundings, their habits, and vices. These people have the theory, but not the experience.

Since 1776 the North American Indian has cost the people of the United States about $1,100,000,000, and he has killed more than 19,000 persons, of whom over 2,000 were women and children.

Indian history shows heroism, endurance, treachery, murder, tribal patriotism, great war leadership, and adroit political management. No man ever had the hold on a people that the medicine man has upon the Indian. What a league this Indian tribal resistance is to the white man's civilization! Still, has the white man's policy assisted the Indian to love him or make him his friend? Sitting Bull some years ago said to the commanding officer at Fort Buford: "The Indian that says he likes a white man is a liar, and the white man that thinks an Indian likes him is a fool."

INDIAN NAMES.

Indians frequently have several names. George Catlin in 1832 wrote this: "Nothing is more embarrassing for the traveler through the Indian countries, both of North and South America, than the difficulty of obtaining the real names of Indians, owing chiefly to the singular fact that no Indian in either country will tell his name, but leaves it for occasions or for other Indians to reveal.

"The Indians have generally their family names in the idiom of their tribe, and having no Christian names, they often attach to them significations which are wrongly supposed to be their interpretations. A great proportion of Indian names (like Jones, Bailey, Roberts, etc., in English) admit of no translation. In these cases the interpreters give their family names, joining to them the qualifications for which the individuals are celebrated, as, Oon-disch-ta (the salmon spearer), Oon-disch-ta (the tiger killer), as we would say, Jones (the shoemaker), Jones (the butcher), etc.; and yet another difficulty still more embarrassing, that most Indians of celebrity have a dozen or more names, which they use according to caprice or circumstances.

"I recollect that when I was painting the portrait of a Comanche chief I inquired his name, which another chief, sitting by, gave me as Ish-a-ro-yeh (he who carries a wolf). I expressed my surprise at his getting such a name and inquired if he had ever carried a wolf, to which he replied: 'Yes, I always carry a wolf,' lifting up his medicine bag, made of the skin of a white wolf and lying by the side of him as he was sitting on the ground.

"How curious (Indians) names and how pleasing. Among the Mandans, the reputed belles when I was there, were Mi-neek-e-sunk-te-ca (the mink) and Sha-ko-ka (mint), daughters of two of the subordinate chiefs; among the Riccarrees, Pshan-shaw (the sweet-scented grass); among the Minatarrees, a few miles above the Mandans, Seet-see-be-a (the midday sun); * * * among the Assinnaboines, Chin-cha-pee (the firebug that creeps); among the Shawanos, Kay-te-qua (the female eagle); of the Ioways, Ru-ton-ye-wee-nee (the strutting pigeon); and among the Puncahs, Hee-la-dee (the pure fountain), and Mong-shong-shaw (the bending willow); among the Pawnee Picts Shee-de-a (wild sage), and among the Kiowas Wum-pan-to-me (the white weasel)."

Mr. Catlin in the same work also calls attention to the variety and singularity of the names of Indian men, as shown in his catalogue, such as "The very sweet man," and "The grass, bush, and blossom."

This duplication of names of Indians continues to this day. In fact, many Indians have merely nicknames given them by the whites or for reservation use. Some go by numbers, as Jim No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, etc. Indians have no family names which white men understand. For the past two or three years the agents on the reservations have been giving them names. The census rolls of 1890 show the continuance of curious Indian names.

There is much romance in ideal Indian names. Minnehaha, abbreviated in the West to Minnehaw; Hiawatha, Toyaba (pure white spirit), Eufaula (falling water), Weewoka, are soft and euphonious. The names of some of the real Indians of the present time are: Among the Creeks and Cherokees, Man-Afraid-of-his-Horse, Tom Potato, Hog Shooter, Pig Mike, Samuel Walking Stick, Samuel Poor Boy, Adam Dirt Seller, David Bull Frog, James Tin Cup, Archie Big Foot, Thomas Rooster, Robin Dirt Pot, Walter House Fly, Liar, Samuel Squirrel, Two Strikes, Hump, One-Eyed Sam, Old Bolly, Mouse, and Little Horse Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The following are Indian and white names of Bannock Indians taken from the ration list of the Bannock tribe at Fort Hall Agency, Idaho, in November, 1890: Weed-ze-we, Teton Bill; Coppe-que-tan, Coffee Grounds; We-he-din, Iron Mouth; Se-tso Po-ku-wak-i, Chinaman's Family; Ca-nave, Johnny Stevens; Egi, Little John; Pah-a-give-ta, Big Mack; Saw-a-hun, Little Old Man; Pi-ze, Pit Piper.

The following are Indian and white names from the ration list of the Shoshone Indians at the same ageney: Pe-ah-go-un-dimmue, Andy Johnson; Joe Hooker; To-gum-bot-se, John Hair; Pe-ah-toon-yip, Big Man; Noisy Sam; Lazy Joe; To-sa-man, Slim Jim; Na-ho-ne, Big Jimmy; Quar-ree-sho-van-go-nip, Pompey Jack; Charley Summer.

The names of Indians at Red Cloud Agency entitled to receive rations is given in Executive Document No. 145, House of Representatives, Forty-fourth Congress, first session. March 1876. Among them, of the Sioux, there were American Horse, Big Weeds, Biting Dog, Black Bull, Takes Things, Washerwoman, Frog, Big Belly Wolf, Sand, Bald Face Bull, Captain Long Dog, Cherry Seed, Chicken Packer, Hole in the Ground, Lightning Strikes, Screw or Little Moon, Turkey Legs, Thunder Hawk, Died in Lodge, Mule Head, Man-Afraid-of-his-Horses 1 and 2, Pumpkin Seed, Louse, Spotted Cow, Old Beads; of the Cheyennes, Timber, Red Neck, Bull A, Slow Horse, Split Nose, Crow, Poor Bull, Itching, Dull Knife, One-Eyed White Man, No Account, Never Full, Old Slab, and Wild Hog; of the Arapahos, Feather on Head, Sharp Nose, Died Old, Short Shoulder Blade, Road of the Sun, Dog Chief, Kill, Curly Hair, Friday.

The following names are found at Pine Ridge, S. Dak.: Of Sioux, Onsiyayanka, Sits Pitiful; Waseocin, Begs for Paint; Winkle Onaso, Pacing Morphadite; Wakan, Holy Imahewicoil, Village in the Mouth; Wakankliwin, Comes Holy; Lecawakan, Just Holy; Woptura, Jefferson Chips; Woptura, Geoffrey Chips; Mirci Wanica, No Water; Cepa Wanica, No Fat; Tacupa, Marrow Bone; Newton Cancatanka, Newton Big Road; Iye Psa, His Sneeze; Sam Wikan Yuspaka, Samuel Broken Rope; Scili, Pawnee Leggings; Asa Wagmu Su, Asa Pumpkin Seed; Clarence Wicarpi, Yamni, Clarence Three Stars; Levi Sunk Hinto, Levi Blue Horse. Northern Cheyennes, Hohkot, Grasshopper; Tahouosaso, Bites; Wolnsceya, No Brains; Wokaus, Crooked Nose; Moctke, Loves his Knife; Mochtayoesin, Black Whetstone; Awair, Hail.

The names of some of the Lower Brule Sioux are: Hind Dog, Grinder, Bobtail Crow, Small Forked Tail, Thin Belly, From Above, John Logan, Pretty Voice Hawk, Tom Red Leaf, Come Out of the Woods, Bucket Ball, Quick Jealousy, Joshua Good Eagle, Rude Dog, and Gunny Sack Lodge.

The Indian will be remembered in the coming centuries from the fact that he has impressed himself upon the laws of the Republic, and given names to many of its States and Territories, cities, towns, rivers, and mountains.

The following are Indian words, with their meanings, used for names of some of the States and Territories:

"Alabama, here we rest; Alaska Territory, great country; Arkansas, arc, a bow, prefix to Kansas; Connecticut, up the long river; Idaho, gem of the mountains; Illinois, Franco-Indian, tribe of men; Indiana; Iowa, Franco-Indian, drowsy; Kansas, smoky water; Kentucky, at the head of river; Massachusetts, about the great hills; Michigan, a weir for fish; Minnesota, cloudy water; Mississippi, great long river; Missouri, muddy; Nebraska, water valley; North Dakota, leagued; Ohio, beautiful; Oklahoma Territory, beautiful land; Oregon, great river of the West; South Dakota, leagued; Tennessee, river of big bend; Texas, friends; Utah Territory, named after a tribe of Indians; Wisconsin, wild rushing channel; Wyoming, the large plains. On coats of arms of States: Alabama, here we rest; Washington, Al-Ki (bye-bye)."

It has been quite the mode recently to drop Indian names for places and natural objects and adopt names of modern persons or designations from the ancients. American names, however, have special import, and should be retained. Centuries ago the continent was fairly well explored, and while the several nationalities stamped their sufferings, glories, or prowess upon the topography of the country with the names of sovereign leaders, they in many cases adopted the Indian names.

"The American people wrong their own country by obliterating the Indian names which made rivers, mountains, and valleys expressive of their beauty, their location, and their power. Hebrew history alone, throughout the ages, has so dignified human qualities and the works of nature, as has the history, unwritten though it be, of the native American. The attempt to obliterate Indian names and to silence Indian tradition, is to obliterate landmarks which the American people should be more disposed to rescue and perpetuate. This feature of American civilization is neither enlightened nor Christian, but essentially pagan. The unity of history is despoiled of its royal prerogative, that which identified nature in all its forms and man in all his capacities with one superintending Great Spirit over all."—Special Agent H. B. Carrington, 1890.

That the North American Indian (undoubtedly all of one original stock) has any well-defined religious views or beliefs as we understand them remains yet to be ascertained. The ideal Indian has a religion, but the real Indian has none. "God," a word he first heard from Europeans, has to him in fact no special significance. It means anything around and above him. His mythology is crude and embraces the natural features about him: Fire, water, the air, earth, the sun, moon, and stars, and all animated nature. The real Indian hangs to his mythology, which is ingenious for its elements but unsatisfactory as a theory, with desperate tenacity, and herein lies the nut of the Indian question, which is hard to crack.

"No attention is paid as yet to the fact that the religious creeds of the Indians over the whole American Continent were moulded on the same pattern; that their social organization was fundamentally the same among the Cherokees, the Pueblos of New Mexico, the Mexicans, and the Peruvians; that the system of government of the Iroquois differed from that of the Mexicans but very little, and that the same principles pervaded aboriginal architecture from one arctic circle to the other, varying only in degree and not in kind. It is constantly overlooked that the fact of a certain class of buildings being of stone and another group of wood does not necessarily imply a superiority of the builders of the former over the builders of the latter, and that the long house of the Iroquois shows as much mechanical skill, if not more, as the honey-combs in which the New Mexican Indians still live in part; that the carved dwellings of the Northwest coast denote an advance in art not behind that of aboriginal Yucatan."—H. O. Ladd, in History of New Mexico, 1891.

It is curious that while the North American Indians, according to some authors, have a complete system of religion and forms most ingenious and mathematical in its sequences, these same Indians are incapable of inventing, constructing, or building anything that requires the mental power of combination. They can not smelt iron or copper, or carve stone or wood (except in imitation and in a feeble way, save the Alaska Indians, who are probably of Tartar origin), or do other mechanical things. In fact, they have no mathematics in their methods, and many of these alleged singular and complex religious and other systems would not be known save for their exhumation, development, or invention by white men. The Indians could invent a religion, but not a language to preserve it, nor a method to mark it! They could invent and develop myths, but could not build a house for their devotees, nor perpetuate their doctrines by signs or marks! With all other races the faculty of preservation is found with invention. It remained, in many instances, for white men to tell the Indian what his methods and systems were.

The Indian has the faculty of being led in conversation. In fact, he likes to be so led, provided he sees any food or largess at the end, and any ingenious ethnologist or investigator wedded to a theory can, if he has a vivid imagination and a stock of money and food, obtain ample proof of that theory from an Indian. Left to himself the Indian has no theories to propose to white men; and while the most garrulous people among themselves, they become silent at the approach of the white man, their natural enemy. Approach an Indian camp quietly and unobserved, and you hear the clatter of tongues and the laughter of children. The women chatter like white gossips and the children bubble over with fun. Indian children seldom if ever cry, and a brutal Indian father or mother is most unusual.

It is amusing to see an Indian mother unstring the cradle from her back, take the child out, fill her mouth with water, eject it in a spray, and wash the vermin or dust from the child, which never even whimpers, carefully replace it, string it to her back, and trot along to catch up with the moving band. Again, she will take the child out when hot and cool it by blowing over it, and when cold in the winter she will also warm it by blowing her hot breath over it. Indian children seem to have the same secretive instincts as young mice and rats; they do not make any noise and give no sign of their presence. This is common to most wild animals. Young cats, puppies, colts, and calves, being domesticated animals, and white infants, make much noise from their birth. The silent Indian will, however, on the production of money, food, or clothing, forget his animosity to the whites until after the ownership of the visible object is settled, when he will become talkative; during this time almost any theory can be proven.

There is a theory or a legend that the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona are daily waiting and watching for the coming of Montezuma. Rose-colored descriptions have been given of how the Indian rises from his couch, just before the orient blazes forth, and hies him up a ladder to the roof of his house, and there, in kneeling posture, with a longing look to the East, and with weary body awaits the rising of the sun and the coming of the expected Montezuma. Pictures have been painted of this scene, and much beautiful language used complimentary to the red man for this example of devotion and faith. The fact is, that this Pueblo red man rises from his couch (usually a sheep skin) and scrambles to the roof of his house, made of mud, because he is hungry and wants his breakfast. From the top of his castle, as the sun rises, he searches for his herd of goats and cows, which furnishes him with milk. After he discovers their location he returns to earth, rounds up his live stock, and gets his food; and another reason is that these pueblos or houses have no ventilators or windows, and the red men, women, and children rise and escape early in the morning to get a breath of fresh air, or are called by the town crier, under assignment to labor.

Like many Indian legends made by white men, this Montezuma waiting story is pretty, but it is not true. These same self-supporting Pueblo Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, citizens of the United States and progressive, while nominally Catholics, are at heart self-reliant wild men and women, and hold to their ancient forms and beliefs. In some of the New Mexico pueblos there are Catholic churches with priests, but at the same time there are estufas for old Indian religious ceremonies, which are carefully looked after by the people.

The priest in some cases marries them by the ceremonies of his church, charges for it, and frequently immediately afterward they are remarried in the old Indian way. Sometimes prior to the dance and estufa ceremonies, lasting several days, the priest is removed to a safe distance, placed under guard, and held a prisoner until the affair has ended, occasionally he is picketed on a hillside like a donkey.

The Indian is superstitious, but superstition is not by any means common to savage races. In fact, many are lead to believe from observation that culture frequently breeds superstition. The Messiah craze of 1890 among the Indians was no worse than some of the isms among the whites.

The Indian is tenacious of his belief and customs. In past years too many attempts have been made to correct Indian forms and observances, not heeding the fact that many of these are the results of long established and serious beliefs.

In an account of the state of the missions newly settled by the Jesuits in California, by Father Francis M. Picolo, made to the royal council at Caudalaxa, in Mexico, February 10, 1702, is this reference to the religion of the Indians of California in 1697:

"The Californians [Indians] are a very lively people, and fond of joking. This we found when we first began to instruct them. They, whenever we committed any error in speaking their language, laughed at and jeered us; but now, that we are better acquainted, they correct us, whenever we commit a fault, in the civilest manner, and whenever we explain some mystery or article in morality which interfered with their prejudices or ancient errors, they wait till the preacher has ended his discourse and then will dispute with him in a forcible and sensible manner. If cogent reasons are offered they listen to them with great docility, and when convinced they submit and perform whatever is enjoined on them. They did not seem to have any form of government, nor scarce anything like religion or a regular worship. They adore the moon, and cut their hair (to the best of my remembrance) when that planet is in the wane, in honor of their deity. The hair which is thus cut off they give to their priests, who employ it in several superstitious uses. Every family enacts its own laws at pleasure, and this possibly may be the cause of the frequent contests and wars in which they are engaged with one another."

Some of the surroundings of the attempts at christianizing the American Indians in later days were not calculated to inspire particular confidence in the promised "peace on earth and good will to men" to come from the adoption of the creed preferred by the white man. The nonprogressive, those who believed in holding on to the old Indian ways, frequently had strong arguments to use with their people against change and conforming to the ways of the whites. Willing ears listened to the recital of these incidents and willing hearts carried them over the plains or in the groves to roaming Indians from the Gulf to the Lakes. The story of the massacre of the Christian Indians at Gnadenhutten, in what is now Ohio, March 8, 1782, was a treasured morsel by the old Indians, and was repeated to admiring listeners along the norther frontier from 1782 until 1810, and greatly aided Tecumseh and his Winnebagos in inciting the northern frontier Indians to revolt. The story of the murder of the ninety men, women, and children at Gnadenhutten threw the cause of Indian christianization back fifty years. Of this massacre Charles McKnight, in Our Western Border One Hundred Years Ago, says:

"The whole massacre leaves a stain of deepest dye on the page of American history. It was simply atrocious and execrable, a blistering disgrace to all concerned, utterly without excuse, and incapable of defense. It damns the memory of each participator to the last syllable of recorded time; all down the ages the massacre of the innocents will be its only parallel."

The North American Indian, a child of nature, seems to possess a peculiar logic, and it seems to have been born in him.

"On a visit to the Dacotah mission, in 1859, a scalp dance was held near the mission house. I was indignant. I went to Wabasha, the head chief, and said: 'Wabasha, you asked me for a missionary and teacher. I gave them to you. I visit you, and the first sight is this brutal scalp dance. I knew the Chippeway whom your young men have murdered; he had a wife and children; his wife is crying for her husband; his children are asking for their father. Wabasha, the Great Spirit hears his children cry. He is angry. Some day He will ask Wabasha, 'Where is your red brother?' The old chief smiled, drew his pipe from his mouth, blew a cloud of smoke upward, and said: 'White man go to war with his own brother in the same country; kill more men than Wabasha can count in all his life. Great Spirit smiles; says, "Good white man; he has my book; I love him very much; I have a good place for him by and by." The Indian is a wild man; he has no Great Spirit book; he kills one man; has a scalp dance; Great Spirit is mad, and says, "Bad Indian; I will put him in a bad place by and by." Wabasha don't believe it.'"—Bishop H. B. Whipple, Minnesota, April, 1860.

The Indian usually soon perceives the attempt to convert him to the white man's creeds and resists it with vigor.

On the reservations the Indian is cunning enough to see that he may reap some personal advantage by getting the agent and missionary at loggerheads, and to this end he frequently works. All the reservation Indian's aims and means are directed toward the acquisition of material things, things brought to him by others. A church on a reservation which clothes its Indian school children and has other material aids gets a full attendance. Komo, a Ute Indian, while explaining that he and his people were nominally Christians, unwittingly gave the reason when he said, "Oh, we go down to Salt Lake City once a year, get baptized, and get blankets!" At the present time church-attending Indians on the reservations are called by the whites "pork and flour Indians," as these commodities are sometimes distributed to them.

In connection with the ghost or messiah dance during 1890-1891, an Indian wrote to the editor of the Chicago Tribune as follows:

"QUAPAW MISSION, IND. T., December 2, 1890.

"You say, 'If the United States Army would kill a thousand or so of the dancing Indians there would be no more trouble.' I judge by the above language that you are a Christian and do all in your power to advance the cause of Christ. You are doubtless a worshiper of the white man's Saviour, but are unwilling that the Indians should have a messiah of their own. The Indians have never taken kindly to the Christian religion as preached and practiced by the whites. Do you know why this is the case? Because the Good Father of all has given us a better religion, a religion that is all good and no bad, a religion that is adapted to our wants. You say, if we are good, obey the Ten Commandments, and never sin any more, we may be permitted eventually to sit upon a white rock and sing praises to God forevermore, and look down upon our heathen fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters who are howling in hell. It won't do. The code of morals as practiced by the white race will not compare with the morals of the Indians. We pay no lawyers or preachers, but we have not the one-tenth part of crime that you do.

"If our messiah does come we shall not try to force you into our belief. We will never burn innocent women at the stake or pull men to pieces with horses because they refuse to join in our ghost dances. You white people had a messiah, and, if history is to be believed, nearly every nation has had one. You had twelve apostles; we have eleven, and some of those are already in the military guardhouse. We also have a Virgin Mary, and she is in the guardhouse. You are anxious to get hold of our messiah so you can put him in irons. This you may do. In fact, you may crucify him as you did that other one, but you can not convert the Indians to the Christian religion until you contaminate them with the blood of the white man. The white man's heaven is repulsive to the Indian nature, and if the white man's hell suits you, why, you keep it. I think there will be white rogues enough to fill it.

"Hoping that our messiah will come soon, and prove all that his prophets have proclaimed him, I remain your most obedient,

"MESSE HADJO OR JOHN DAYLIGHT."

An Indian headman in 1891, when visited by an official, who mentioned that dancing among the Indians was not looked upon with favor by the authorities, said:

"White men dance when they please; why shouldn't an Indian? When I was down in Washington, some years ago, I called at the council house and saw the President. It was at nighttime, and a lot of women were walking around. They were about half dressed, the top of their bodies being exposed in such a way that an Indian woman would be ashamed to do; yet I found that these half-dressed women were the wives of big chiefs, and called themselves good women and went to church. I expect they were the wives, too, of some of the church men who want to stop Indians from dancing. White man takes mighty good care of himself and his own people; he better let other people alone with their harmless amusements."

It will be noted that the North American Indian is a person of much intellectual power, undeveloped or uncultivated as we understand it; he is as cunning as the wild beast or reptile; he holds tenaciously to what he believes to be his religious duty, and resists the white man's civilization or Christianity with all his power. He seems to have had no stages of progress as other recorded peoples have had; he appears not to have had the ambition or incentive to invent or construct beyond the merest minimum limits of wants and needs. If he is not a wild man, how is it that after years of education there are so many instances showing that he at the first opportunity returns to his old habits and traditions? As a rule, he is eminently a destructionist, not a constructionist, in the economic sense.

In considering the present reservation Indians, it is well to recall that it is several hundred years since Massasoit, Philip, or Powhatan lived; a shorter period since Brandt, Red Jacket, Tecumseh, Black Hawk, and Osceola were ruling chiefs; while Little Crow, Rain in the Face, Red Cloud, Scar Faced Charley, Joseph, Bannock Jim, and Sitting Bull are near neighbors.

There is no doubt or mystery about most of the North American reservation Indians in 1890. The Indian one now meets is a plain, every day, always present fact, and he is found to be eminently open and plain in one purpose, and that to get a living with as little effort as possible, in which purpose the present system of affairs aids him. The Indian is never so much in earnest as when at the national trencher. He begins when the food is before him and ends when it is all consumed; still, when compelled, Indians can live upon as little food as any people upon the earth.

A hundred or more years ago, in a report to the French academy, written by a competent and famous investigator, it was stated that "the North American Indian is an enigma," and this can in truth be written to-day. While an enigma he is of a magnificent race, and if civilized would be the ancestor of a mighty people. When we consider the ravages of disease, intermarriage, exposure, starvation, and the white man, and then consider the number of Indians now here, as against the number at the advent of the European on this continent, the Indian would seem to be a startling example of the survival of the fittest. War fits his nature, is his occupation by selection, and apparently by design, and gives him fame. His heroes are warriors, and so tradition and fact encourage him to follow war as a recreation or profession.

The key to the American Indian's resistance to the white man occupying his country and utilizing its resources, and then attempting to control him, lies in the fact that being the original occupant and owner of the lands he can not see why he should give way, go to the wall, or move to parts unknown. He can not understand the profit to come to him and his by his being despoiled first and absorbed afterwards. With his limited experience he can not understand why so much should be exacted of him, and so little be done of a practical nature by those receiving most of the benefits. Centuries of living by roaming, war, and the consuming of the wild products of nature have not especially fitted him for readily accepting Anglo-Saxon civilization. What is offered him in place of his old life? What other means of support are given him? What chance is he to have in the battle of life against the culture of the white man?

The Indian's battle has been for the control of the heart of a continent. As the white man presses him and certain death or absorption stares him in the face, his tribal history, his past life and methods rise before him. He could not, would not, and does not, with few exceptions, realize the necessity for change. It was bred in his bone that labor is dishonorable. The approach, demands, and requirements of civilized life foretold to him the end of the old Indian life, and the curling smoke from the settler's hut the doom of his unrestrained liberty. Up to this time the Indian had been a good man, there being no Anglo-Saxon standard of good or bad for comparison, for sin comes with the law and definition. Moral training such as we know he never knew, and he does not know to this day. His method of warfare, fierce and brutal, was born in him. Then he met force with force, reason with the knife, and logic with his club or gun, and he uses the same methods now. Then he was a good man until something he did not like or understand met him, and then, as now, the good man became a howling savage. The first tender of our advancing civilization he met with surprise and then resistance, and so for almost three hundred years unceasing war has followed. If quiet in one place, he is growling or in revolt in another.

In almost all of the pioneer movements to the West the crack of the rifle was heard while the glitter of the hoe was seen. As the Indian felt the presence and weight of this new civilization all of his past history and present life crowded upon him and he revolted, because he could see that his race was about to be covered with a cloud that would eventually engulf it. The white man's clutch was on his throat; the ideal Indian life was about to become practical. With the advancing lines of white men it took no prophet to proclaim the Indian's doom. With clenched teeth, and club or gun in hand, he places his back to the rock and dies in resistance. And such a death!

As has been stated, it is not probable that the present area of the United States since the white man came has contained at one time more than 500,000 Indians. High estimates were made in early days, but the average even then was about 1,000,000. In 1890 we have about 248,000 civilized and uncivilized Indians.

Through almost four centuries warlike bands resisted, and many of these Indians are still resisting progress. How defiantly they met death! They died silently, without a groan, amid the shouts of murdered white men and women, the groans of butchered children, the roar of the cannon, and the crack of the rifle.

Over the old hunting ground, across the silvery streams which thread the brown barrens and plains, up the tall mountains among the towering pines to the snow-capped and sun-touched summits, in the land once the home of his people, the Indian of to-day can cast only a longing eye, and reflect. The plains are silent to the tread of the old Indian host; no monuments or structures tell their story, no footprints in the rocks, no piles of carved or sculptured stone speak of their patience, ingenuity, or their presence. The streams run as of yore, but, while softly creeping to the sea, sing no song and speak no word of the olden times. The nodding pine and ash along the mountain side bend and bow a welcome to the newcomer, but are silent as to the past. The canyon and mountain recess shelter as of old, but speak not.

For the remaining Indian the painter, the museum, and the art preservative alone can tell the story. Even nature, the Indian's god, is silent as to him, and speaks not. Such has been his life, such the results, that if the entire remaining Indians were instantly and completely wiped from the face of the earth they would leave no monuments, no buildings, no written language (save one), no literature, no inventions, nothing in the arts or sciences, and absolutely nothing for the benefit of mankind. A few small graves and unimportant structural ruins and enigmas met the gaze of the white man four hundred years ago. The past of the Indian was sealed even then, and apparently to the Indian as well as to the white man; and this condition remains to this time. Thus far the North American Indians have been (judging by conditions and results) the God and man forsaken race of the earth, and through circumstances useless beings in the economy of nature.

All of the Indian past is now largely reflection and retrospection, an epic preserved by legend and story. Crooning squaws and tottering old men on reservations, in most cases in squalor, rags, and hunger, retell the fierce battles of their people, each tale exaggerated with age, every person mentioned being a hero; all now legend and myth. These past Indian splendors and glories can never come again; but the Indian does not realize it, and so he invokes their return with his ghost or messiah dance.

Events, incidents, and great war feats may be mentioned, but the absorbing and destroying Anglo-Saxon has his deadly grip upon the North American Indian, and time alone is wanted to set his eyes in death; and for the Indian, even while living, the glory of Egypt hath departed.

There are not ten tribes of any of the two hundred or more now in the United States but what have been in revolt, and those existing as tribes are now remnants, with a few exceptions, too poor or too few to fight, or they consider it too dangerous.

Governmental Indian policy, although intended otherwise, has gone arm in arm with war, murder, and failure, and the Government is at present engaged in trying to civilize and control the remnants of these once powerful tribes on reservations. Its hardest struggle is with the original Indian "nomads," the Indians of the plains or "flesh eaters."

The Atlantic coast Indians (except a handful of Seminoles in Florida, semicivilized), the Cherokees in North Carolina, and some Indians on the Northern lakes, and the tribes of the Six Nations remaining in New York have long since ceased to be troublesome. Death, removal West, whisky, restraints of civilized life, and smallpox and other diseases have destroyed the great mass of the North American Indians from the Atlantic Ocean to the Mississippi River.

The Pacific coast fish-eaters and root-diggers are now peaceable, having been thoroughly whipped, and are progressive and almost entirely self-supporting.

The Five Civilized Tribes (the Creeks, Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles in Indian Territory), once warlike and fierce, furnish no guide for comparison in the question of reservation Indian civilization. Because of being left to control themselves, intermarriage with whites and negroes, and the adoption of others into the tribes, the pure Indians are few, and the people are progressive. The Sioux, Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, Navajos, and the Bannocks are on reservations, and doing as well as the poor country they occupy will permit.

The other reservation Indian tribes, even if disposed to war, are so surrounded by white settlements that a war would be of short duration.

The question of the moral and physical condition of the reservation Indians will not here be considered or presented in detail. This question would take volumes, especially if considered from the Anglo-Saxon view as to what moral condition is. In time there may be some relief; meanwhile death will remove many of the victims of fearful affliction. In our anxiety to keep the Indian quiet, having failed to civilize him, the moral and physical condition of these people has been considered secondary. Allotment, keeping him quiet, and education seem to be the methods now most popular.

The disappearance or removal of some tribes of Atlantic coast and Mississippi Valley Indians is given under "Tribes and Stocks," "Removal of tribes west of the Mississippi River," and "Reservation Indians." The section on "Citizen Indians" also gives data on the same and in a measure details as to the present condition of tribal remnants on the Atlantic coast.

The Indian service of the United States up to 1869 was the weakest branch of the civil service, morally and otherwise. Before that time, to get an Indian agency was considered by some as leading to wealth and comfort in old age. During the war of the rebellion the nation had but little time to see to the civil side of the Indian service. A few earnest men and women, however, held on to the subject. Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, in April, 1890, thus wrote of his efforts for the Indian in 1861–1865:

"In those early days my visits to Washington were oft-repeated stories of blighted hopes. I found President Lincoln a willing listener. I told him the story of the massacre of 1862, when 300 miles of our border was one track of blood. As I repeated the story of specific acts of dishonesty, the President said: 'Did you ever hear of the Southern man who bought monkeys to pick cotton? They were quick; their long, slim fingers would pull out the cotton faster than the negroes; but he found it took two overseers to watch one monkey. This Indian business needs ten honest men to watch one Indian agent.'"

"From the martyred President I received the highest compliment ever paid to me. He said to a friend: 'As I listened to Bishop Whipple's story of robbery and shame, I felt it to my boots;' and, rising to his full height, he said: 'If I live, this accursed system shall be reformed.' He would have done it.

"Secretary Stanton said to Gen. Halleck: 'What does Bishop Whipple want? If he came here to tell us that our Indian system is a sink of iniquity, tell him we all know it. Tell him the United States Government never redresses a wrong until the people demand it. When he reaches the heart of the people the Indians will be saved.'"

When President Grant, in 1869–1870, placed his hand upon the Indian system it was about at its worst. It was a makeshift and an emergency result. Nomadic tribes were recognized and solemn treaties were made with wild men, of which, through imperfect interpreting, they knew but little, and these same treaties were frequently the lever to open the public treasury to the white man's plunder. The advisory power of chiefs had been put away. The system was powerless to punish crimes against Indians, and it gave no protection to Indian property, person or life, and by the practical operation of the reservation system the Indians were made paupers and continued so up to 1869.

What the United States Indian service was prior to 1869 can be imagined upon reading the following statement by Bishop H. P. Whipple, who, in his Appeal for the Red Man, thus spoke of the Indian service and policy of the United States prior to 1869:

"There is not a man in America, who ever gave an hours' calm reflection to this subject, who does not know that our Indian system is an organized system of robbery and has been for years a disgrace to the nation. It has left savage men without governmental control; it has looked on unconcerned at every crime against the law of God and man; it has fostered savage life by wasting thousands of dollars in the purchase of paint, beads, scalping knives, and tomahawks; it has fostered a system of trade which robbed the thrifty and virtuous to pay the debts of the indolent and vicious; it has squandered the funds for civilization and schools; it has connived at theft; it has winked at murder; and at last, after dragging the savage down to a brutishness unknown to his fathers, it has brought a harvest of blood to our door."

The last sentence referred to the Sioux massacre in 1862, and was the good bishop's view of that dreadful event.

One of the most absurd and senseless cries that has recently gone up about our Indian policy is the present one of the "dishonest Indian agent." The agent is made responsible for all wrongs and failures; he is called a thief, a robber, and a maltreater of the poor red man. There are 133,417 Indians living on reservations; to these there are about fifty-four active agents; they are administrative officers only; they do not usually purchase articles of food for the Indians, except in emergencies, and then by order of the Commissioner; they have no money belonging to the Indians, and are bonded officers. If they steal they can not sell the plunder without detection. The old-time Indian agent sometimes had an open field. The system as to Indian agents and their opportunities has entirely changed within twenty years. The cry of "dishonest Indian agent" is an old one, and comes from conditions changed many years ago. The present Indian agent is closely watched by missionaries, by agents of the Indian Rights Association, by school teachers, by a special corps of inspectors, by army officers (when on the reservations), and by the Indians themselves. The suggestion is here made that these agents are as honest as any other fifty-four citizens of the United States.

It is unjust to lay the shortage of rations or clothing or supplies for the Indians on the men who never receive them; who never have them to issue, and who only issue what is sent them, provided by Congress; especially is it unjust to charge the failure of an inefficient or slow system on men who have only to execute it. Congress alone can change the present system; and in view of the facts it is cowardly and unworthy to denounce a body of worthy men who stand with their lives in their hands in their daily intercourse with and control of the North American reservation Indian. From personal knowledge, the present system (excepting one feature) is as good and efficient as it can be made under existing law.

In 1890–1891 there was much discussion as to the employés of the Indian service, and it was asserted that they were dishonest and inefficient. Many really earnest people believed this. The Cambridge (Mass.) Civil Service Reform Association, becoming alarmed, on January 31, 1891, sent a letter to President Harrison on the subject. The President replied as follows:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 4, 1891.

"GENTLEMEN: I have received by the hand of Senator HOAR the communication addressed to me by the officers of the Cambridge Civil Service Reform Association, and in reply beg to say that your suggestions will have my respectful attention. Your reference to the recent outbreak among the Sioux as affording convincing evidence of a necessity of a change in the manner of appointing the officials of the Indian Bureau, leads me to say that I have not found, in a very full examination of all the facts from all sources, evidence of any deterioration in the Indian service. On the other hand, the Board of Indian Commissioners, through Merrill E. Gates, their chairman, have, as a result of close observation, declared to me, under date of January 10, last, "that upon the whole the Indian service is now in better condition than ever before."

"The object of their communication was to urge the extension of civil service rules to the Indian service, but they were careful to recognize that the argument was not to be found in any special or recent incident, but in the broader fact that the work among the Indians is educational and philanthropic, and should therefore be separated from party politics.

"I may add that before any special appeal had been made to me from any source the subject of including Indian agency clerks and employés in the classified service had been under consideration.

"Very respectfully yours,

"BENJAMIN HARRISON."

The following rule was made in relation to certain of the Indian service employés, October 1, 1891:

"The classified Indian service shall include all the physicians, school superintendents, assistant superintendents, school teachers, and matrons in that service, classified under the provisions of the act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, approved January 16, 1883."

THE COLONIAL AND NATIONAL INDIAN POLICY TO 1890.

The Europeans who first met the Indians had no policy in their treatment of them. Some came to convert heathen, others for gold and silver, others for religious liberty, and others for the glory of their sovereigns, and to add new domains to home areas. The Indian wondered at these variety of interests and at the many and curious kinds of white men. His wonder grew when he became better acquainted with the whites, and during the past four hundred years his amazement has not decreased. When the colonies were organized, the Indians within them were managed by the separate colonial authorities. There was but little difficulty then in managing the Indians, considering the large area of unoccupied lands and the small number of whites. After 1789 the United States Government assumed charge of the Indians.

All nations in control of this continent and north of Florida, excepting what is now California, New Mexico, and Arizona, recognized the Indian as primarily the owner of the soil, and considered that his title to the land must be extinguished before any disposition could be made of it, which was usually done by a treaty between chiefs and headmen of tribes and representatives (generally soldiers) of the contracting nation.

The United States has never considered public domain public lands and extended the land disposition or settlement laws over them until the Indian title was extinguished. The United States only permits Indian tribes to sell their own lands to itself. No citizen can purchase land of an Indian without authority from Congress. The right and supremacy of the Government to do this has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, and is now an accepted fact.

Up to 1890 the United States has made about 450 treaties and agreements with 157 tribes of those once or now within its borders. How many of these have been kept? Have any been kept? The policy, begun in 1789 and continuing up to 1869, of recognizing the Indian tribes as separate nations was bad for the Indian. Treaties between nations generally depend for their proper execution on the fact that they have about the same sized armies and navies. The Indian had neither. In 1869 President Grant, at the suggestion of Gen. P. H. Sheridan, put an end to treaty making with the Indian nations, which action was confirmed by Congress in 1871, and they became wards of the nation. Since 1789 the Indian has had eight distinct kinds of policies tried upon him by the United States Government:

First. They were treated as separate and independent nations, and treaties were made with them by the War Department.

Second. The frontier was so extensive, and the area of land so large back of it, that early in the century the Government saw but little of the Indians, except when they came into the forts and posts. It then presented them with swords, guns, knives, pistols, and tomahawks, and red paint to deck themselves for war, probably in the hope that they would kill one another. A line of houses, posts, or warehouses were built on the frontier and occupied by Government agents called factors, and the Government was alone permitted to trade with the Indian and receive the profit of the trade with him. This was abandoned in 1822. A general superintendent of Indian affairs, authorized by law in 1822, resided at St. Louis, Mo.

Third. His control in an indefinite way by the War Department until 1849, and being under the generals commanding departments, districts, divisions, or portions of the country, and being used sometimes in Indian wars as an ally, the War Department also supplying him with arms and ammunition. A civic commissioner was over him in the War Department after 1832.

Fourth. The creation of the home or Interior Department in 1849 necessitated the transfer of bureaus from several departments to make this new one. The Indian Bureau was among those transferred, and the Indian came under civil rule, where he still continues. Commissioners appointed from civil life now made treaties with the Indians.

Fifth. The organizing the Indians within a State or Territory under a superintendency. In Territories the territorial governor was sometimes the superintendent, but in the States the superintendent was appointed by the President. The agencies and reservations were under an agent who reported directly to the superintendent, he reporting to the Indian Office at Washington. Under such a system there was a fine opportunity for gathering much plunder. In 1869 President Grant took up the Indian question, and soon abolished the superintendencies and made the agents directly responsible to the Indian Office at Washington. The experiment was tried in 1869–1870 of assigning the several reservations to denominations. The churches selected the agents and President Grant appointed them. It proved a failure in two years and was abandoned.

Sixth. The reservation system: Insisting by treaty and otherwise, beginning extensively in 1868, that the Indians stop roaming, assigning them reservations of land upon which they moved, and agreeing solemnly, in most cases with the Indian, that such reservations should be permanent. Public necessity, constant demand of the settlers, encroachment of the whites, the objection to a large number of wild Indians living as tribes within the center of population, caused the Government in 1887 to pass the allotment act, forcing the Indians to take lands in severalty, and paying them a compensation for the remainder of the reservation, thus destroying their reservation and tribal condition, the amount to be paid being fixed by the United States, also agreeing to many other things for the Indian, and still retaining the agent on the reservation.

Seventh. The agriculturalizing of Indians by Congressional enactment: Since 1849 issuing food and clothes and agricultural implements and some cattle to the Indians, the payment of annuities and the establishment of schools and a number of experimental efforts (such as trying to make Indians farmers and mechanics, whether fitted or not), now discovered to be mainly in the wrong direction, has been the Indian policy. In this there has been a shifting from point to point and drifting with the Indian, and only when running up against his gun or knife was there a halt to look the field over, and take an account of stock.

Eighth. The educational and allotment policy now in full operation and the enlistment of Indians in the United States Army. The educational policy began in 1819 with an appropriation for $10,000, which was increased in 1876 to $20,000. In 1891 the cost was about $2,000,000 per year. It embraces several features, the education of children of citizen Indians, reservation Indians, in fact all Indian children: this policy contemplates the education of about 18,000 children. No one can now estimate its future cost (not less than $3,000,000 per year for ten years) or its practical results. There are Indian schools on the several reservations conducted by teachers paid by the nation, and Indian schools on the reservations or near them conducted by denominations, who receive $150 per year or more for each Indian pupil. There are also a number of industrial schools, like Carlisle, Pa.; Genoa, in Nebraska, and the one near Salem, Oregon, where the pupils cost $167 or $180 each per year. These are solely under the charge of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Some private schools throughout the country are also paid an annual sum for the care of Indian pupils, as are local school boards in some of the States and Territories.

Seven of the above policies have been emphatic failures, one succeeding the other as a necessity. Will the eighth or present one prove a failure also? Will the education of 12,000 or 18,000 Indian school children civilize more than 110,000 adult Indians?

The educational policy also contemplates the building, or, when built, the extension, of industrial or Indian schools at all of the present agencies, the superintendent of the schools to be bonded, and to receive a small additional annual compensation, thus taking the place of the Indian agent. This has been done at the Hoopa Valley, Eastern Cherokee, and Moqui Agencies. It is a change of name merely and not of the system in the matter of the Indian agent.

As to allotment and its origin, the principle is an old one with the Indians. Cadillac put it in active operation in Detroit in 1701–1710. In 1880–1883 the expert special agent, in the Public Domain, suggested the following:

"The settlement of the question as to whether lands are to be given to the Indians in severalty for settlement. It is immaterial for this purpose whether they are to be allotted to the individual or the tribe. The area is the question. It is probable that almost two-thirds of the area at present embraced in Indian reservations will be thrown into the public domain for settlement or disposition. The remainder, above the wants of the Indians, should be taken by the nation, say, at $1.25 per acre, and a trust fund created with the proceeds. The interest, payable four times a year, will be ample, coupled with the results of their own labor, to maintain the Indians. An army officer could disburse it, and the Indians be at once removed from the need of annual legislation."

The enlistment of Indians as soldiers in the United States Army has proved a success. In 1892 more than 800 Indians were enlisted.

A great difficulty, and probably the greatest, in Indian progress or attempts at their civilization, is the fact that practically all such efforts come from outside sources, either from the Government or from white people, which are met usually by the serious opposition of the Indians. These tenders, coming from those the Indian considers his natural enemies, arouse his suspicion. No aid to any extent for a long time past in this struggle has come from the Indians excepting the Indian police, paid by the nation, who have for ten years past aided a little. Revolutions do not begin from the outside. To be effective they must arise and be led and carried into effect from within a people, government, or nation. The governmental educated reservation Indian has not as yet appeared as the Moses to lead his people in new ways of peace and progress.

ADVANCE OF RESERVATION INDIANS, 1890.

Ability to support themselves alone is not proof of advance of Indians toward civilization, because they might support themselves by the chase or hunting and fishing. The best tests of Indian advance toward civilization are their adoption of the white man's dress and habits, of their engaging in agriculture or the mechanical arts, and in consenting to the education of their children. Judged by two of these three standards, the reservation Indians of the United States to June 30, 1890, have made but little progress toward Anglo-Saxon civilization. Of the about 60,000 who wear citizens' dress, about 10,000 have adopted the white man's best habits. Only a nominal number of the unallotted 133,417 reservation Indians are put down as agriculturists, and these are included in the 98,632 who earn their own living on the reservations by hunting, fishing, and root-digging. Four-fifths of these are of the last three classes.

As to the schools, the reservation Indians are not partial to them, and, under the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in past years rations have been withheld from the adults to force them to send the children to school. Several wars growing out of these school matters have been averted by President Harrison, Secretary Noble, and Gen. A. McD. McCook during the past two years. It is not easy to tell how much the majority of the present reservation Indians have advanced up to 1890. It is to be hoped that the Indian census of 1890 will be a starting point from which many things may be determined as to the progress or retrogression of the reservation Indians. At present many of them are in a most dependent and wretched condition, viewed from an Anglo-Saxon standpoint.

One of the best evidences that some of the reservation Indians are approaching the lines of civilization is that they are beginning to place a value on their time. In 1889 or 1890 Chief John Gall said to Hon. Charles Foster, ex-governor of Ohio, who was a member of a commission to treat with the Sioux, that his time was valuable, and if he must talk with the commission it would cost $10 per day.

Indian Commissioner T. J. Morgan, at the Yuma Reservation, California, was informed in October, 1890, by Chief Magill (Miguel or Spakoter) of the Yumas that it would cost $5 to converse with him.

The actual progress of reservation tribes can only be ascertained by reading the reports of Indian agents for twenty or thirty years back and then visiting the reservations. From year to year rosy and expectant views were found in these reports. The reforms promised are lovely. Each succeeding agent makes many promises of change and reform, and tells how he intends to improve things. From these reports one necessarily expects much, and imagines that an Arcadian condition of life exists on reservations. Visit one of these modern Arcadian resorts, and you will usually find the same old Indian described by our fathers. The truth is, the adult Indian who has advanced the most is the one whom the Government has had least to do with. The education of 12,000 to 18,000 reservation Indian school children alone will not feed and civilize 60,000 or 70,000 adult dependent reservation Indians; neither will sand banks or deserts furnish them with homes on which to make a living. The tables of statistics and the special agents' reports will answer as to the reservation Indian's actual condition in 1890.

Has the Government of the United States done anything for the Indians? The nation has done a great deal for the Indian; but no nation has ever before had such a man to civilize. His intellectual capacity, of a high order, coupled with the instincts and brutalities of an unrestrained wild man, has made him the most savage of men. The Indian has hated the nation intensely, and the white people of it he has made his victims. The Army alone has had any respect from him, and this because it is the embodiment of force.

"The Indians do not and can not love us; and seeing the little regard paid to engagements which they at least had considered as binding on both parties, they look on all the acts of Government with a jealous eye."—Albert Gallatin, 1836.

To illustrate the Indian's resistance to the civilization of the white man, and his indisposition to even go upon a reservation, the following extract from an article by Gen. Nelson A. Miles, published in the North American Review for January, 1891, is of value:

"The first time the writer met Sitting Bull was under a flag of truce between the lines, when he had a thousand warriors behind him; and during the conversation I think he expressed in a few words the true sentiment of the Indian. He was what might be considered a devotional man, frequently offering a little prayer and saluting the Great Spirit. One remark of his is certainly significant. Raising his eyes toward Heaven, he said: 'God Almighty made me an Indian, and he did not make me an agency Indian, and I do not intend to be one.' That remark was indorsed by huge grunts of the stalwart savages within hearing, and it is the sentiment of the nontreaty, disaffected Indians of every tribe in every section of the great West. They prefer to be Indians in their wild and independent life rather than to be confined to the limits of any agency."

During the past century, considering all the Indian's shortcomings from an Anglo-Saxon standpoint, and reviewing his life, no author of character or speaker of note has been found bold enough to even attempt to excuse or vindicate the Indian policy of the colonists or of the nation.

The language of some of the Indian treaties, considered with the subsequent facts, are humorous. A reader would suppose from the language of these treaties that the Indian was in the hands of a just and equitable people. The facts are exactly the reverse. For confirmation of this, see the report of the Indian peace commission of 1868.

THE RESERVATION INDIANS, 1890.

The North American Indian was the finest type of the wild man the white man had ever met. He differed from the African wild man in this: The African in many cases looked up to and imitated the white man; the Indian looked down upon the white man with the utmost contempt, and does to this day.

The Government of the United States, in war, legislation, or peace, has been in mortal combat with a man and not a child in this Indian question, especially in trying by act of Congress to make him forget, and to change his life, his habits, and characteristics.

In the final settlement of the Indian question there need be no mistake made, and the idea of reparation can be lost sight of. Instilling such an idea in the Indian's mind in the past has worked great injury to his progress. In illustration, an official circular of instructions to Indian agents in regard to inculcation of patriotism, of December 10, 1889, after directing that Indian school children be instructed in the elements of American history and as to worthy historic characters, says:

"While in such study the wrongs of their (the Indians') ancestors can not be ignored, the injustice which the race has suffered (from the Americans) can be contrasted with the larger future open to them, and their duties and opportunities, rather than their wrongs, will most profitably engage their attention."

The constant repetition to the Indians of their people's wrongs, or alleged wrongs, was hardly ever the best way to inculcate in them feelings of kindness toward a dominant ruling class. The American Indian of the present day, however, is not caring as much about the wrongs of his ancestors as he is about his daily bread. As long as the nation will feed, clothe, and care for him he does not care much about what or how his grandfather suffered. Still, such reminders to a people accustomed to running amuck with gun and pistol would not seem to be judicious; and besides, the Indian is quick enough to perceive the error in this and to take advantage of it.

There is no sentiment involved in the closing up of the Indian question. It is not necessary to recall Indian wrongs nor to tell lisping children of the wickedness of their ancestors. It is now a question of right and justice, and of the commonest kind. The equity of the case lies beneath a load of useless treaties, laws, and obsolete customs. This nation needs no sentimental appeal to do its duty. Congress simply needs hammering at by night and by day by earnest men who have a complete and satisfactory plan of settlement of this question, a plan which will close up the entire matter and cause the disappearance of the word Indian from our statutes; administration will then follow.

The word American should be large enough to inclose the man, woman, or child whose ancestors once owned the lands of the continent. We welcome foreigners to citizenship, why not native Americans? The best friend now to the Indian is the man or woman who desires that he be removed from the control of the nation and away from official contact. Knowledge of the Indians is not now confined to a few, but his control is in the hands of a few. The railroad, telegraph, and printing press are in the vicinity of every reservation in the United States, and (but 15 or 16 of all the reservations are more than a day's travel from a railroad) these modern agents of civilization are affecting the Indian as they do the white man.

In the West the railroad and the telegraph now precede the immigrant, and the demand for lands for settlement forces the curtailment of the areas of Indian reservations and the allotment of the Indians to small holdings. All the conditions affecting the white people in the country about the reservations affect the Indian, and so a final policy should now be adopted, both as an act of justice and as a matter of right.

One of the absurdities in Indian administration is the constant recurrence in addresses of expressions of this kind: "The Great Father loves his Indian children." "The Great Father expects his Indian children to do this and that." "The Great Father chides his erring Indian children reluctantly."

Such expressions are puerile when addressed to these most cunning of men, many of whom have murdered in cold blood white women and children, the stains of the blood of their victims being still on their garments and the echo of their dying groans still in the ear. These same innocents, great, stalwart, able, thoughtful men, thus treated and lovingly addressed, at intervals take the United States Army and double it up in a scroll of fire, and have had the ability, for the last century, to outtalk and sometimes to outwit the ablest white men sent to them as commissioners. An evidence of the intellectual capacity of the Indian can be seen in the treaty the Cherokees made with a national commission in 1891.

Every Indian on a reservation above 10 years of age knows that the President is the President, and that he resides at Washington, and is to the Indian, in consequence of the mistaken policy of the past making the Indian a dependent, a deity who gives out things, and also pardons the red man after outbreaks, and who, answering and acting on the maudlin sentiment of mistaken sentimentality, frequently does great wrong to the Indian by not severely punishing some of them. This "Great Father" expression dwarfs men into children. Another feature of the present time is that the Indians on reservations read morning papers, discuss the news of the world, watch the acts of Congress, and in case of an outbreak, get the movements of the troops.

One visitor to a reservation in the fall of 1890, and just after the Congressional election, was taken aback at seeing an Indian wearing eyeglasses, sitting with his feet upon a table, reading a city journal of the same day, and he was partially paralyzed when this Indian, evidently with an eye to his food supply for the future, asked the visitor: "Do you think Mr. HOLMAN will be the next chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations?"

Many reservation Indians keep an eye open to the condition of the several reservations in their vicinity. When food is in abundance at a reservation there is at once a movement toward it by Indians of other tribes. The agent of the invaded reservation repels the invaders, aided by the Indian police. Unless this were done a well-supplied agency would be overrun.

The efforts of the United States toward a proper ending of Indian affairs should be directed entirely to the reservation Indians. The reservation Indians, other than those taxed (including the Six Nations of New York, the Eastern Band of Cherokees, the Five Civilized Tribes, the Moquis of Arizona, and the Pueblos of New Mexico), numbering 133,417, including allottees under charge of the Indian Office, are in twenty States and Territories, the administrative office being in Washington.

The reservation Indian's condition does not now require the shedding of tears for the past or promises for the future. Let us now do the just thing with these Indian remnants on reservations. There are less than 95,000 of them, not including the civilized and allotted Indians. We have tried almost every idea suggested to civilize and control them. Let us now make a general plan of right and justice and work to it rapidly.

We can learn much of value from the methods of the Dominion of Canada in handling its reservation Indians, 122,000 in number. (See elsewhere for the Indian policy of Canada.) There are within 11,000 of as many reservation Indians in the Dominion of Canada as there are in the United States. The total annual expense of this large number is but $1,057,561.50. The reason for this is: (1) The Indians are considered and treated as men; (2) all treaties are kept with them, and (3) they are on good lands and are practically self-supporting. In the United States the reservation Indians in many cases are on sand banks and deserts, and in consequence of their many removals to make way for land hunters they have become almost natural tramps.

A proper Indian policy embraces both humane and business propositions, even if force has to be employed at times, which is frequently most effective. In the seventies Gen. George Crook, called Gray Fox by the Indians, the greatest Indian fighter the country has produced, had occasion to reprimand an Apache Indian named Manuel for inciting the young men to revolt on an Arizona reservation. Manuel, a smart Indian, but idle, worthless, and dangerous, became impudent. Crook knocked him down, called an officer and a squad of men, and placed him in the guardhouse. A week afterward Manuel was in a casement at Alcatraz, in San Francisco Harbor. There he remained two years. Gen. Crook after this wrote to Gen. John M. Schofield to send Manuel back to Arizona. Manuel, thinking he was to be executed on his return to Crook, when brought out of prison, said he preferred to be shot at Alcatraz. He was taken to Arizona and to Crook's headquarters. Crook said, "Ah, Manuel, you are back; come along, I want you."

Taking him to the river bank he said, "Here are arms, two horses, a bunch of cattle, and food enough for a few months. That house is yours, and also the land staked out around it. Now, go to work and take care of your property." Surprised and astonished, the Indian went to work and became a man of means, and was afterward a great aid to Gen. Crook in settling Apache Indian troubles. A year or so after this event another Apache, one Tonti, became troublesome, and one day was engaged in a row in the presence of Manuel. "Oh," said Manuel, "I know what you are after; you want Crook to knock you down, send you to Alcatraz, keep you two years, bring you back, and give you a ranch and a bunch of cattle. Oh, you want to be civilized by Crook."

The mental, physical, and moral condition of all reservation Indians does not fit them to the exact demands of laws made for cultivated Anglo-Saxons.

There are serious obstructions in the way of changing our Indian policy, and it is most difficult to make any essential changes in the Indian system of the United States. Interested parties prevent changes: besides, Indian agencies and reservations are a source of much profit and revenue to persons in their vicinity. The patronage is large. In 1876 Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan, Secretary of the Interior (see House Executive Document No. 106, first session Forty-fourth Congress), sent to the House of Representatives a bill for the transfer of the Indians in the States of New York, North Carolina, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Iowa from the control of the United States to the control of the several States named, within which said Indians were located. His reasons for the transfer were:

"In my opinion the Indians referred to have made such progress in the acquirement of education and industrial skill as to enable them to support themselves and to render it wise and proper to separate them from the guardianship and control of the Federal Government, that they may be made subject to the restraints and be endowed with the rights and privileges granted by State laws and regulations."

The scheme of transfer is set out in full in the bill. The United States still hangs on to the unfortunate Indians in all of the above States except Michigan, where they are now caring for themselves, although not as well fitted to do so as the Indians of the other States named.

There is a mistaken idea in the inexperienced mind as to what an acre is west of the Missouri River. When orators and writers state the great number of acres contained in the 135 reservations of the 54 agencies at which live the 133,417 Indians in the 20 States and Territories, to wit, about 76,000,000 acres, the area seems simply enormous. Usually a reservation acre is not an arable acre as an acre East. Acres on most of these reservations mean huge sand banks, deserts or barrens, not one of which can be cultivated without irrigation. The great size of these reservations is due to the fact that it requires an immense area of such land to sustain life, and on some of the largest reservations (some of them 60 and 80 miles square) there are only 1 or 2 small streams and a few springs.

The condition of much of the reservation land is the cause of the Indian continuing a roamer. To get a livelihood he moves about on these reservations from point to point for water, grass, and fuel, living the meanwhile in tents or tepees of brush (when of canvas it is furnished by the Government). Only by this nomadic life can the Indian live upon most of these reservations. In Eastern minds acres are associated with productiveness. An Eastern agricultural acre will usually sustain five cattle; in Utah, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Montana, and other arid regions 1,000 acres frequently will not sustain more than one head of stock. There is no growth without irrigation, except some native grasses, which are short lived when in season. The allotment of land to Indians on most of these reservations means giving them a desert or a piece of desert or a sand bank to starve on; land from which a coyote runs in howling terror and birds which are said to live on air hardly dare fly over.

Before lands are allotted to Indians it should be known and made a fact that they are arable. Build ditches, bore wells, and make them fit to live upon before you place the Indian on them. If the whites get control of the ditches make them deed a perpetual water right for the Indian lands. A large source of revenue to the Indian on many reservations is now derived from the sale of wild hay. This hay grows on marshes or lands close to river or stream banks which are subject to overflow. Under the allotment system the Indian could not live on the hay lands, and will be allotted on higher ground, so that unless irrigating ditches are built and the land made fit for cultivation the white man will secure the hay land and the money therefrom and the red man get the sand bank. Lands are not made to bear and blossom like the rose by act of Congress; and to make them fit for cultivation where there are no showers of rain it takes showers of gold. The irrigation of land is costly.

In 1886 the total number of Indian reservations was given as 144, containing 135,478,345 acres. Of this it was estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that 15,266,836 were tillable. In the 144 reservations were included the Pueblo grants, the Six Nations lands, and the holdings of the Five Civilized Tribes. The area of bad or arid land within the lines of these reservations was simply enormous.

As a curious fact, in this desert country of the West, or arid belt, one is constantly met with the cooing of doves. There are great numbers of these birds, no part of the American desert being free from them. They fly very rapidly in pairs, and their peculiar coo sounds like mourning notes. The Indians are superstitious as to these doves and their cooing.

The present system of allotment will abolish the reservations, and the sooner the better; still, the reservations are of service, as on them are gathered the nomadic Indians. The reservations were originated by John C. Calhoun while Secretary of War.

The reservation Indians are now governed by laws made by Congress and by rules laid down by the Indian Office. The Indians are punished or controlled by the agents, sometimes after the manner of school boys. The reservations on which the Indians live, although mostly within States, are not subject to all the State laws. They are almost "empires within an empire," and the Indian agent is supreme over them. Felonies committed on them are tried in State or United States courts. The Indian not being considered a citizen of the United States, but a ward of the nation, he can not even leave the reservation without permission.

In the past, at intervals of three, four, or five years, this civic control has proved ineffectual. When civil authority fails the soldiers are called in, and murder of settlers and war follow. When the Indians are whipped, they are again placed on the reservations under the control of the civic administration. The Indians rest, get tired of control, and after they fatten their horses, get good arms, and a supply of ammunition, another outbreak follows. We have had nine Indian wars in sixteen years. In ten years, up to March 4, 1882, Indian wars alone cost the Government of the United States $202,994,506. In most of these wars the fault was not always with the Indian, but sometimes the result of two controlling powers in one government. The Indian should be controlled either by war or peace. In this enlightened age, and with all our past experience, we ought to be able to invent a plan of control for our Indians which should be as peaceful as that which controls other Americans. The last outbreak at Pine Ridge, in December, 1890, was not caused by the encroachments of settlers, but by the neglect of the Government to keep its treaties and its word.

The Indian has always been cunning enough to see the weak spots in the armor of our Indian policy and to take advantage of them. He has whetted his appetite for blood on Government rations, and at stated times satisfied it on settlers first and soldiers second, because our system permitted him to so do. In an outbreak he goes off the reservation to kill; when he gets through he returns to it and looks over the boundary and laughs at the settler, who can not come over after him. The soldiers are to keep the settlers off the reservations and the Indians on them.

The Indians on the reservations retain some old-time customs. Of the 133,417 reservation Indians, 1,584 men are given as polygamists, with 3,458 women living with them. With the male Indian polygamy is largely a means of gratifying a bestial appetite. Notwithstanding the rule with polygamists is 2 wives, with the Navajoes there are reported 492 men living in polygamy with 1,080 wives, 413 of whom have 2 wives, 70 have 3, 7 have 4, 1 has 6, and 1 has 8. In 2 of the Navajo districts the polygamists were not reported, but they can be safely estimated as 108. There are probably with the Navajoes 600 polygamists with at least 1,188 wives.

Let all the past in Indian matters be considered ancient history; the present and the future are enough. To force a closing up of this question there must be Indian aid societies of all creeds and opinions organized in the States and Territories where the Indians are as well as where they are not; but in this work do not let the Indian know much about them, or he will lean on them and live on them, for he is both a boarder and lodger when boarding and lodging are free. Congress while paying expenses will never consent to give citizens or associations of citizens control of Indian affairs, but citizens can demand of Congress justice for the Indian and do much in aiding officers to discharge their duties, but not by condemning them without a hearing and casting stones at them on mere suggestions.

The idea must be gotten out of the head of the Indian that because he lives on a reservation he is entitled to more consideration than the people of the surrounding States and Territories. Let the allotted wardship continue for a term in the United States courts after the nation is through, and let the local Indian rights associations keep the courts and officers up to their work. With this in view at least a third of the members of the controlling boards of these several associations should be women. They usually keep things moving. Let the allotment of land go on; but see to it before the land is allotted that it is arable, and that it will sustain life in a grasshopper or a crow.

See to it that irrigating ditches are built or artesian wells are sunk in cases where the lands are arid, and that white speculators and thieves or corporations do not get control of the water rights. Pay the Indian for the rest of the land above the allotment embraced in the reservation. Do not give all the money to him, but use a portion for farm implements, seeds, a house, cattle, horses, and a fair start in life, or move him entire where the land will not cost too much to improve. Most treaties have agreed to do this. Considering the allotted lands, and deducting them from the total area embraced in the present reservations, the remaining land would be worth about $50,000,000, at $1.25 per acre. This would be ample to put the Indians on their feet. Consider the bulk of the male Indians as mixed farmers, that is, with a house and some arable lands, and a herd of cattle, sheep, or horses to run on grazing land. Stop the children learning the Indian language.

Experience has demonstrated that not 1 in 10 of the present male reservation Indians want to be or can be farmers. Many can and will be laborers, say 1 in 30 mechanics, and 1 in 100 professional men. Not one Indian, it is said, shows even a disposition to become a lawyer. Along streams or on the ocean front Indians become fishermen, but the white man usually drives them off. Let the tendencies and habits of these people be considered and taken advantage of, and success must follow. Pay the Indian to build his own house; let him understand that the house, stock, agricultural implements, and land are his. Let the Indian know that he must work with head or hands; aid him to work, and, if necessary, force him to work. Depend upon the squaw as a great aid in this reform. Teach her to keep house, to cook, to sew and mend. Spend much of the time and money on her; make her the head of the house.

Millions have been wasted on the men. Try some on the women. Give them a start on a piece of land as well as the men. Remove the bad-natured, those indisposed to work, and entirely lazy Indians from reservations; send them far away to other Government reservations or distant States, and put them to work on fortifications, ditches, or roads. Care for the very young, the crippled, aged, and feeble in hospitals, or contract for the care of the same with the authorities in States and Territories; but above all these things, for the redemption and salvation of the Indians and the preservation of national honor and the public peace, as soon as possible, place the Indian beyond the necessity of control or handling by Congress. All movements, efforts, and actions should be directed to this end.

Work, which to other people means money and its benefits, many Indians utterly repudiate. Many of them, by nature, by training, and by cultivation (from the Anglo-Saxon standpoint) are ideal vagabonds. The Indian in his attempt at ease and elegance is the savage parallel of the Saxon, except in wealth. The vagabond Indian's idea of work was well given by Chief Jack to Maj. Steele of the Army in 1879, a few days before the Utes of Colorado murdered one of their friends, N. G. Meeker. Meeker had the courage to ask the Utes to work; he was the agent in charge of them. Chief Jack in this matter of work spoke for most of his Indians: "Meeker say 'Ute must work.' Ute say 'Meeker, plow no more.' Ute no work. Ute no like work. Ute no school. Ute hate school. Ute fight. Ute heap fight." The Utes did fight. Mr. Meeker was murdered and some scores of soldiers killed.

This is the class of men the Government is expected to make earn their own living by manual labor and by farming, an uncongenial work. Except labor be congenial, white men even fail. Why should not an Indian fail when tied to uncongenial pursuits? If he is not a farmer, and he is not, make him a laborer or a herder. Let the squaw attend to the home, and teach her and the children to tend the garden and raise food enough for the family, while the male Indian tends the herds; but turning the Indian loose without horses, cattle, sheep, or land will not help him to work; by providing him with these things he is shown the necessity for work; to save and care for his own property. Give him some responsibility in a money sense, guarding it legally for a time after you do so. If this be not done grants to him will only be gifts to whites in his neighborhood.

One of the current errors is that the United States Army lies awake devising means to kill the Indians. The fact is that the Indian would have long since been a thing of the past but for the Army. The Army on the frontier has kept the settlers from destroying him; the Army has been the Indian's best friend. What honor is there to the officers or men of the United States Army in an Indian war? What honor in fighting wild men, who use every artifice known to the savage? It is a mistaken idea that the Army wants to kill or murder the Indians. No brave man seeks a fight. It is about the last thing he desires. A soldier knows his fate if he gets into the clutches of the Indian, and so in war he tries to prevent torture and suffering by exterminating him root and branch.

When the Army fights Indians its best policy is to clean up all in front of it. The Indian does not respect the Army if it does not do this. The Indian kills all, from the strong man to the unborn infant. In Indian wars, the United States Army, both officers and men, to be successful must come down to the exact level of the Indian and use his methods. In this connection the query arises, What do we keep an army for? Why, mostly to govern and kill the Indians. A nation which governs a portion of its people by the rifle and cannon would seem to be a little out of joint in this age of the world. Settle the Indian question properly, and a large portion of the Army can be dispensed with. Each soldier costs $1,000 a year. Every Indian costs about $25 a year; so that under the present methods we hire a $1,000 soldier to watch a $25 Indian.

Idleness is the condition of two-thirds of the North American reservation male Indians. Their stomachs are empty and their head and hands are idle. If these two conditions would not ruin an Anglo-Saxon and make a bad citizen of him history and example are entirely false. The progress and salvation of any people depend upon the head and hands being busy and their stomachs full. Feeding the intellect is of no service unless the stomach be filled at the same time.

One of the greatest difficulties in executing any Indian policy on behalf of the Government is the fact that the executive officers charged with the duty of control have not enough discretionary authority, and they are far removed from the seat of war. The annual Indian appropriation law names the tribes, the service, the number of agents, and the amounts to be expended for each tribe; it fixes the entire system; Congress is very tenacious as to this. In many cases of emergency neither the President nor the Secretary of the Interior has sufficient discretionary power to act. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so far as real power goes, is frequently no more than a chief clerk. The position is supposed to be important, and the occupant is frequently charged with neglect and lack of duty when he simply stands in the position of an officer with a large title and small powers.

Congress should give these officers full authority to act in emergencies. A just Secretary of the Interior in Indian matters must do his duty both to the people and the Indian. He must recognize the fact, which is frequently lost sight of, that there are two sides to the Indian question, and that while much equity and justice lies with the Indian, the white men, women, and children on the frontier, and the taxpayers and the public Treasury are entitled to a day in court. A great difficulty that administrative officers at the head of Indian affairs have to contend with is the neglect of Congress to act promptly on the recommendations sent to them in matters connected with the Indians; cases of urgent necessity are pigeonholed when received and not acted upon for months and sometimes years.

Tribal relation is almost a myth in all but three or four tribes. The United States Indian agent is now the virtual chief of the tribes under him. If a tribe selects a man as chief his selection must be affirmed by the agent. President Grant, in 1869–'70, in refusing to make further treaties with tribes as tribes or nations, or to recognize them as such, gave the death blow to the chief's authority, and the subsequent order making the selection of chief depend upon the approval of the agent virtually aided and increased the chief's power with his people, who could see the material benefits to come from the agent. The Indian medicine man, or shaman, controls many Indians through superstitition, and will continue to do so for years, but tribal relations, as known in the past, are not now in practice. The fact that Indians reside together in a bunch does not make "tribal relations," which imply the controlling power of a chief. The most potent influence now with reservation Indians is the old men and women, who control and advise the children and young people. They train the Indian youth.

The Indians became tired of the domination of chiefs and headmen. They found that these dignitaries who made treaties for them frequently sold them out to the whites, making profit and annuities in some cases for themselves. The Sioux in 1867–'68 petitioned the peace commission to abolish their chiefs and have but one chief for all the Sioux Nation, and that no treaty be of force unless signed by two-thirds of a tribe. The commission acted favorably on these suggestions.

INDIAN TRAINING OF YOUTH.

The Indian reservations are now ideal homes for Indian youth. Many of them absolutely do nothing in the way of labor or work until 12 or 14 years of age. They roll about in the dirt, play games, ride ponies, and copy the manners and ways of the older Indians. Indian mothers, who, as stated, are most affectionate, have control of their children. The Indian father never strikes nor attempts to control his children. The Indian boy, when ready to become a warrior, passes under the control of his father.

In tribal or reservation life the young are taught the glories and legends of Indian life. The boys are taught to hunt and trap, the splendor and horrors of war, to scorn manual labor, and to consider women as beasts of burden. The girls are taught to labor for man, and the value and beauty of obedience to man. Cunning old men fill the minds of the youth with hatred of the white man and his methods. The Indian youth educated at national institutions, away from tribes or reservations, upon their return are hounded, threatened, ridiculed, and in many cases forced into a return to the breechclout and blanket, and to again take up the Indian language. From all his surroundings and education with his tribe the Indian boy when he reaches manhood is usually unfit to cope with the youth of like age among the whites. The sooner the Indian youth is thrown among the whites the better his chance for making a livelihood when a man. The Indian is essentially imitative, and will soon learn the white man's ways when forced to; besides the Indian likes money, and many of them will work when they are paid for it.

THE EDUCATED INDIAN ON THE RESERVATIONS.

Unfortunately, so far, the returned educated Indian has not led the mass of reservation Indians in any movement toward Anglo-Saxon civilization. The reports of the special agents show this in detail. The following data by Mary McHenry Cox, of Philadelphia, Pa., one of the most noted and earnest friends of the Indian youth in this country, is of value. In addition to zeal she has good sense and business capacity of a high order. Her Indian school work at Philadelphia has been noted for results. In September, 1890, she visited Pine Ridge and Rosebud Reservations, in South Dakota, and made the results known in the Philadelphia Ledger of September 30, 1890. Her suggestions as to returned Indian school children are practical. She shows how difficult it is for educated Indians to apply their knowledge, and their position on Pine Ridge and Rosebud Reservations can be taken as a type of the condition of those on a score or more reservations:

"PINE RIDGE RESERVATION.

"As there were fifty-two pupils to return from the Lincoln Institution and the Educational Home to their reservations, and sixty to be brought back to fill the vacancies in the school, and desiring to see for myself what homes they had and how they were to be employed on their return, besides being told that the Indians would give their girls to a lady sooner than to a superintendent, I decided to accompany Mr. Lewis and Miss Knotwell, our superintendent and teacher, who were taking the pupils back. So we started on August 26 from Philadelphia and arrived at Pine Ridge Agency on August 30. The weather was fair and the railroad accommodations comfortable; the meals served on the train and at the station are excellent.

"There is a small hotel at Pine Ridge kept by Mrs. J. A. Findly, clean and well kept; nothing was left undone to make us comfortable. We were fortunate in meeting there Mr. A. T. Lea (special Indian agent appointed to take the Indian census) and his wife; the latter aided me much by her kind sympathy and by writing my official letters to the Commissioner on her typewriter. I visited all our returned pupils I could and found all dressed in citizens' dress, and most of them attending the church services. I invited all to meet me at the hotel in the evening; about thirty came; they were nicely dressed; we had cake and ice cream and all seemed to enjoy the reunion very much.

"The Indian's home.

"But about their homes. These girls that we found so gentle, so refined, so modest, and so neat in their persons while with us, were living with relations, some in tents, some in log cabins, sometimes only one room, sometimes two rooms, ten or more sleeping in a room. The mother in most cases had had four or five different husbands, the father also having had a number of wives; their food consisting of fat bacon, Rio coffee full of grounds, no butter; heavy and oftener sour bread; dried wild cherries, black and unsavory looking in most cases; no table to eat off, no dishes but tin ones; beef killed while running, cut up in thin slices and dried.

"This is the kind of home that awaits these children that we have taught to be good cooks, good washers and ironers, good sewers; about whose food we have been so careful, watching that their meat was fresh, their bread sweet. They are forced in many cases to marry against their will some man who may have other wives, but who can give their parents a pony or two for them. One of the returned pupils, a boy of 17, told me that since his return a year ago several Indians had tried to make him take their daughters and give them a pony for them. Many of our girls wanted to return with us to the school, but their parents would not allow them, and no people that I ever heard of have such influence, or rather authority, over their children as the Indians under similar circumstances.

"A white boy or girl in their teens would defy their parents and run off. These children will simply say, I want to go back. I have coaxed hard, but my father or grandmother says I can not go; and one reason they are so determined that they shall remain is because the family is benefited by the rations they draw. I often heard it charged about returned students that they went back at once to their idle habits. What else can they do? I obtained positions for several of our best girls at the agency, but after a few days their relatives insisted upon their returning home, and gave them no peace until they did. Then there are not six places on the whole agency that require the service of girls; there are no dressmaking or millinery establishments, no work at all for more than a few, even at the Government buildings; no private families to employ them.

"What have they to do then but go to ruin, as we would term it; but it is not so looked upon here. A woman may have a dozen husbands and the man as many wives, and they are treated the same as the others; and, strange to say, there is little quarreling among them. Children of the same mother, but all with different fathers, will live and love each other even better than many of one family with the same parents. No scolding or jealousies that we could see, even between the several wives living with the same man. Several of our girls, I was glad to see, had married white men, and seemed, so far, to be kindly treated; but what their future will be it is hard to say.

"Distributing rations.

"The great curse of the Indian system is this ration business; it is a most demoralizing sight to see a string of hundreds of women standing in line with their children around them waiting for their rations, and coming to their wagons with a bag of flour on their back, a piece of fat unsavory looking bacon in their hands, sugar, rice, etc., in bags, scrambling into high wagons and driving to their homes, some 5, some 10, and oftentimes 70 to 150 miles distant. These rations are given out by the agent once a week to those near, and every two weeks or a month to those at a distance. Some Indians spend most of their time coming for and driving back with their rations; then once every two weeks they have a beef issue, and no Spanish bullfight is more brutal than this method of killing the cattle. You see wagons of women and children around the corral where the bullocks are kept. The men, young and old, on horseback with rifles in their hands, form two lines.

"At a given signal a bullock is driven out of the corral and through this line, and the names of the families to whom it is given called; immediately the men representing them gallop off after the unfortunate brute and run him about half a mile, then shoot him down; the women of the family watch anxiously until the poor beast is down; then they whip up their horses and drive furiously after them, to assist the men to butcher the animal. The hide is taken off at once; the meat, still warm with life, cut up; the liver and all the entrails eaten in their heated state. Imagine such a scene in our Christian country, and think what a demoralizing effect it has upon the rising generation, who, to the youngest, take part in this most brutalizing affair. It was a sickening sight, and I realized how these people are so sickly, so scrofulous, so consumptive; and my great amazement is how, trained up among such surroundings, they can be as gentle, as kind, as affectionate as they are.

"Taking the census.

"I spent a day with Mr. Lea when he went to take the census, and camped out with the party. I never saw anything done more thoroughly than he is doing this work. Not one member of the family is allowed to slip; he will not enumerate anyone who is in the least painted; they must wash it all off before he will take their name. We tried to get some children from the camps. Such a scene! As we approached the camps we could see lots of children running wild over the plains like wild deer, and with scarcely any clothing on. On our approach they would run and hide behind their tents, and, do all that we could, their parents could not be induced to send them to school. The rations they draw for them is more to their mind than all education. By the census now being taken there are hundreds of these children running in this wild way over the plains.

"No chance for school.

"The law is that all children of a proper age should be sent to school some place, but how can the agent enforce this on a reservation covering some 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 acres, with only an allowable police force of fifty Indian men.

"The agent does the best he can, but even the reservation board and day schools are not full, because the children are so near home they are constantly staying away. The only hold the agent has on them is to refuse the parents rations if they do not send them to school, and yet, as he says, he has not the heart to enforce this, as he knows how they would suffer without them. He is not allowed to give us any children that have been enrolled into the reservation school for the past year. We have no authority to take these wild ones of the plains, so we are hindered very much in collecting pupils, while, if allowed to take those who are entered in the schools here, and whose parents are really anxious for them to go to the East, the agent could fill up his vacancies from the camps, and there would not be room enough in all the agency contract schools East and West for half the children of age to be educated.

"Some former pupils.

"Four of our returned male students are employed at the agency; one at a trader's store; one girl as a servant in a minister's family. A good many of the girls are married. We spent one night with one of these, Alice Pousin, married to a half-breed, Joe Brown. We drove 30 miles along the prairie hoping to find children, and when we reached her home, nearly dark, where we were not expected, her face fairly beamed with joy at seeing us. She gave us her room, which was a large one, with a board floor, a melodeon in one corner, sewing machine, bedstead, chairs, etc. She at once proceeded to prepare supper for us, at which she told us she would christen some of her wedding presents. The table was spread with a clean white cloth, clean white linen napkins, nicely plated spoons, forks, and knives. We had tea, bread, tomatoes, meat, bacon, potatoes, and plum jelly. There was a very nice hanging lamp into our room, basin, pitcher, soap, etc. The bed was soft and clean, and we slept very comfortably.

"In the morning we had as good a breakfast and served as nicely as the supper. We had to leave early for our 30 miles return drive, and I am sure our visit gave all the family much pleasure. As for ourselves, we were delighted with our hospitable reception and to find Alice so comfortably fixed. Her husband seems a good, industrious man, and capable of supporting her well. He has not the education she has, and regrets he did not go to our school some years since. This visit repaid us for a good deal of our labor. Another of our girls, Jennie Palardy, is married to Robert Pugh, a white man, who is freight agent at Pine Ridge. She also lives comfortably. She brought her 3-months-old child in a baby coach (there is only one other in Pine Ridge) to see us, and it was as nicely and cleanly dressed as any child East. She was constantly with us while we stayed at the agency, and expressed her appreciation and love for our school very strongly.

"Another of our pupils, Julia Sanders, is married to one of our students, Charles Clifford. Julia met us on our arrival at the depot in Rushville, the railroad station 25 miles from Pine Ridge. She had ridden over with the friends of the children who were returning to meet us. Her husband and she came to see us often. They seem happy in each other, and he is trying to get an appointment for teacher at one of the schools on the reservation.

"Idleness and poverty.

"We did not see the husbands of the other girls, but they are all poor, because there is no place for them to work. No tin shops, no tailor shops, no blacksmith (except the Government one, a small affair, which requires no help). The only work for boys is herding and breaking horses; the others stand around all day idle. If there were flour mills, sawmills, etc., there would be plenty of work for them, but no one can start any such industries on reservations without consent of the Indian Department. We had many of our boys taught farming, but the land is a barren desert. There has scarcely been a good shower of rain for a year. What corn, potatoes, and other things were planted has all dried up and is useless. The Government supplies all kinds of farming utensils, but they are useless. The whole reservation that I saw is a desolate plain, incapable of cultivation on account of the drought.

"Miss Drexel's school.

"The only flourishing kitchen garden we saw was at the Roman Catholic school built by Miss Catherine Drexel, and the only way they have succeeded has been by irrigation. They have gone to much expense, and have the water now running all through their vegetable garden. There is no investment that has been made of Miss Drexel's fortune that is paying as good solid interest as this. Here are gathered one hundred and fifty of these ignorant, neglected, but intelligent boys and girls, who are clothed, fed, and educated under the care of a good, kind father and an earnest Christian mother. The contrast between them and their Arab brothers and sisters is indescribable. Father Jutz and the mother superior are doing a great and good work well; their hearts are in it, and it is blessing many with Christianity and civilization.

"Difficulty in collecting children.

"We had the promise of many scholars. Red Shirt, who was so courted in Europe by crowned heads, etc., came to see us at once. He was most anxious for his children to go to our school, which he had visited, but they had in his absence been enrolled into the boarding school, and neither he nor the agent had any control over them. Many others were similarly situated. The orders from the Commissioner prevent any being transferred from a reservation school to any other. Another cause for the difficulty that all the schools have had this season in collecting children is this unfortunate fanaticism that has seized upon the Indians that Christ is about to come in person. A party of Mormons have been sending their emissaries among the Indians, telling them that Christ is about to come on earth to destroy the white people and give them back their lands, buffaloes, and all the possessions they formerly had, and they have started all over the reservation a dance called the Messiah dance.

"On Friday, when we crossed the plains on our return from our thirty-mile drive, there was scarcely an Indian man, woman, or child to be seen, where on the day before hundreds were roving around. They had all gone to the messiah dance, where they were to remain perhaps a week, dancing and cutting themselves and refraining from all food until they fell prostrated. Then they thought they saw visions. In connection with this the chiefs held a council lately and decided that no children should be sent East to school for the present. They could not say they should go to no school at all, for they know the rule of the Government, but they also know that there is not room for half in the reservation schools, and this resolve of theirs prevents them attending any school. The agent is doing his best to break up these dances. When he went out to them to stop it, about a week since, they drew their revolvers, and had he not put on a bold front there might have been serious trouble. Every Indian nearly has a rifle or revolver. Very many of the bucks have a large revolver and belt filled with cartridges, which they wear at all times. No man East is allowed to carry openly loaded weapons. These Indians, old and young, carry them openly.

"For these reasons we were obliged to leave Pine Ridge with but two girls. There were plenty of boys of 16, 17, 18, and 20 who wished to come, but our experience is that after 15 years of age we can do only temporary good to these pupils. By that time they have been so accustomed and trained in their parents' ways that a five-years course at school can not change their tastes so as to enable them to resist the home influences on their return. Although we found none of our children had gone back to the Indian dress, because perhaps we never had many of the older ones, still we saw enough to convince us that we could do the greater good by taking both boys and girls under 12 years of age.

"A hospital badly needed.

"There is one thing much needed on the reservation; that is a hospital. The sick have no chance of recovery, having no care; their medicine man is sent for and he puts charms on them and says some chants, then demands a pony for payment of his services. In all our missionary efforts now the hospital is considered the strongest agency of civilization; there should be no delay in having them established.

"We left Pine Ridge on the 7th for Rushville, to take the train for Valentine, 30 miles from Rosebud Reservation, and arrived there on the 8th.

"ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

"On our arrival at Rosebud we called at the agency, and were most kindly received by Miss Wright, the sister of Maj. Wright, the agent, and were comfortably quartered at their house, which is quite commodious and nicely furnished. Rosebud Agency is in a valley, surrounded by hills; the roads around are steep and very sandy; no trees of any account to be seen and vegetation all dried up. No rain except a few showers has fallen here all summer. The streams, few in number, are mostly dry. It took us from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. to drive from Valentine to Rosebud. The country we rode through was not as barren as about Pine Ridge, but for miles we did not see a habitation or a living thing.

"We started out the day after we arrived to visit the camps, and met three of our returned scholars, all in citizens' dress; but the same old story of no employment met us, and, of course, idleness brings in its train all kinds of evils. The agency proper is surrounded with a stockade, into which none can pass without an order or for some good reason. This is to keep the Indians from loitering around and preventing the employés attending to their duties.

"During our whole journey so far, with the exception of one or two days, the heat has been most oppressive, but it does not cause perspiration as with us; while very warm your clothes are dry and comfortable.

"Looking for pupils.

"We started the next morning among the log houses and tents to try and induce the parents to send some of their children home with us. There is no boarding school on this reservation, and as there are but a few Indians residing near the agency, only a limited number can attend the day school, which is under the efficient charge of Miss Wright, assisted by Luther Standing Bear, a returned Carlisle student. The various camps are at some distance from the agency and we had to ride miles before reaching them. We found here, as at Pine Ridge, the Indians unwilling to part with their children, indeed many were so sickly that we did not want them.

"We met one of our old pupils, Prairie Chicken; he was the first of our school ars whom we have met that wore the Indian dress; he was not painted, but his hair was long and his costume Indian. He was with us at school only about six months, when we first commenced our work; he was transferred to Hampton, where he remained 2.5 years. He was driving with hid wife, a full Indian squaw, but recognized me at once, stopped his horse and rushed over to shake hands; he has not forgotten his English. He after wards came to see us at the house to ask us to take his wife's brother to our school.

"We visited St. Mary's school, established by Bishop Hare, under the charge of Miss Ives, and found forty-nine bright, intelligent children, with kind, efficient teachers. The influence of this school is telling upon the people and too much can not be said in its favor.

"The white man's bad faith.

"One of our difficulties in procuring children has been, I think, caused by the Indians feeling sore with the white people on account of the Government not carrying out the pledges made to them by the Sioux commission, and on which pledges they signed the late treaty. Gen. Crook, Governor Foster, of Ohio, and Gen. Warner, the acting commissioners, gave not only verbal promises, but written ones, that if they would sell their lands and sign the treaty founded on the Dawes bill, that their rations should not be reduced and that nothing which they now received should be taken from them; not more than a month after the treaty was signed at Pine Ridge the beef issue was reduced 1,000,000 pounds for the year, and at Rosebud 2,000,000 pounds; their annuities were also reduced. It is said that Gen. Crook felt so badly about this that, it is thought, it hastened his death, as he had always kept his word in his dealings with the Indians, and it was their confidence in his integrity that made them sell their lands and sign the treaty. All who desired to benefit these people are now looked upon with renewed distrust; and who can blame them for this?

"Maj. Wright vindicated.

"We read in the papers before coming here severe comments on Maj. Wright, the agent, on account of the number of rations having been issued for 7,500 people, while, when the census was taken this year there were found to be only 5,500 Indians on this reservation. Maj. Wright received his appointment on September 14, 1889, and he acted on the census taken by Mr. Spencer, his predecessor; he could not, of course, take any other basis for his estimate of rations; he received orders from the Department to take a new census immediately after June 30, 1890, the end of the fiscal year; he pressed all his employés into the service, and having stationed his assistants at differents points, took the count on the 7th and 8th days of July and had it all completed by the 15th of that month. Acting under orders from the Interior Department, his count was made without regard to that of Special Agent Lea, whose returns were not made until August 5. The two reports do not materially differ. Agent Wright shows on the reservation about 150 more Indians than Mr. Lea; both reports prove 2,000 less than the number reported as receiving rations.

"The Indians are diseased here; many die of consumption; last year la grippe and measles were fatal among them. With no hospital, their camps miles from the physician, there is scarcely any hope for the sick Indian, man, woman, or child, to recover. Unless those who take the census know these people's ways they will likely number the dead in the count, for if you ask an Indian how many children he has, he will tell you he has ten; when asked to see them he will show you five; the others, he will tell you, are upon the hill, meaning that they are buried there. The doctor reports that during the last year only nineteen died; that means only those he had attended.

"The number who died in the far-off camps he can not possibly know about. Maj. Wright naturally feels annoyed at the misunderstanding in regard to his position in this matter, but a simple explanation is all that is needed to set him right before the community. Even if a man desired to be dishonest in regard to these rations, situated as the Rosebud Agency is, it would be almost impossible for him to do so. Think, 5 miles from any town or railway station, with no means of transportation to or from the place except in open wagons, up and down sand hills difficult for a light carriage even to go; besides, all goods from the storehouses would be seen and recognized by every Indian and employé on the road.

"We remained at Rosebud until Tuesday, September 15, securing only six children, whom we sent on to school. The agent said he was surprised that we got any, as he had, under orders from the Indian Commissioner, tried to get a class for Carlisle and could not get one."

"MRS. COX'S IMPRESSIONS.

"I would sum up the impression made on me by my visit to these two Sioux reservations and the opinion I have formed from my experience there in regard to the best method of civilizing these people in a few words. They are not to be censured for their mode of living, as that is incident to all nations and people of the same class. I have seen in Great Britian, on the continent, in Philadelphia itself, families living in one room and in as squalid a condition. What I do think should be insisted upon in the first place is that they should be made to obey the general law of our land in regard to marriage; that they should be made to contract lawful marriage, and plurality of husbands and wives should be punishable; that education of all children of over 5 years should be compulsory; that hospitals should be established on all reservations, and all the sick obliged to report there, and, if possible, treated there, and so to dispose of the medicine man; that the men should be obliged to cut their hair and wear the citizens' clothes which the Government provides for all; that no man should go about enveloped in white sheets, covering, as they do, their hands and faces, which is a common sight among them, looking exactly like a statue. This they consider a proper costume for courting, as they term it. In this disguise they follow the young girls, and throwing the sheet over them, force them to go with them. We saw, I suppose, hundreds of young bucks in this dress. Then, if the children were sent away to school, the younger the better, where they could not see or feel the influence of the older ones, there would be a greater chance of their never returning to the old ways.

"District schools better than reservation schools.

"Of course, the reservation schools do much good, but in every school we visited there were one or two police constantly on hand to hunt up children who had run off to their homes; and also a great drawback to these schools is that the friends of the children come and tent near them, and expect the school to provide provisions for them. The superintendent of one school near a reservation told me that they did not want children from the neighborhood, they were so annoyed by the visits of their friends and relatives. It would be a wise thing, in my opinion, if the Government, instead of giving them rations, clothing, stores, implements, etc., would allow them each so much money per week, so that they would learn to take care of themselves.

"The Government, of course, in giving them what it does is only paying them for the land purchased from them, but let it be money and they will soon learn the value of dollars and cents, which now they know nothing about. It seems hard to say, 'Take the young children from their parents,' but is it wise to allow generation after generation to be trained as the young Indian is? Is such training ever going to fit them for citizens? Is it not better for one man or woman to suffer than a whole nation to be demoralized? As soon as the parents see that they must act differently or lose their children for a time, they would soon yield to the inevitable, and this great problem would solve itself.

"Amusements for the Indians.

"Another suggestion I would make is to have a large room or hall on every reservation for the purpose of concerts, tableaux, and other civilized amusements. Human nature is the same in men and women of every color; young, middle-aged, old, all need recreation and entertainment. Nothing of this kind is provided for the Indians, and they naturally cling to their wild dances, the only amusement they know of. At their homes they sing their weird songs. And yet they are capable of attaining a high standard of vocal and instrumental music, as anyone can ascertain if they will call at our school and hear the sweet chanting of the Episcopal service. That most difficult of pieces, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and other music is sung by our pupils.

"Why it never occurs to those undertaking the training of any people in Christian and civilized ways to provide proper amusements has always been a surprise to me, and when I found these people rushing to see the Messiah, the Omaha, and other dances, I was reminded of the thousands of our best educated people, even royalty itself, who flocked to such entertainments as Buffalo Bill and other similar shows. Take from our people their public amusements, and in a short time they would institute the same wild entertainments as the Indians have.

"Employment and farming for the men.

"In an experience of thirty-two years of work for poor children I can hardly say that in the seven years of that time that has been devoted to the Indian children I have felt more has been accomplished in spiritual, intellectual, and industrial education than in any other seven years of that period, thus showing the great capability of these people for civilization. I would also suggest that employment be found on the reservation for all able to work. It can be done. The wagons, the tins, and many other goods now purchased by the Government could be manufacturered by the people themselves and would be a great saving of expense. Put a competent white mechanic at the head of each department or manufactory and he would soon have plenty of workers.

"Just one word about farming. The reservation lands that I have seen are unfit for agriculture. The drought of South Dakota would not allow of successful farming, even if the land was good. Two thousand bushels of potatoes were distributed by one agent last year, all planted, and not any result; all dried up. Think of the waste. A fair chance is all the Indian wants. Good land, workshops, good laws enforced, money, not supplies, and in a short time the now uncivilized will become honest, industrious, well-behaved citizens. We have found it so with our pupils here. They would carry it out at home if we could give them surroundings that would encourage and strengthen them.

"I returned home strengthened in my interest in these people and my firm belief of their capabilities under proper treatment."

The conclusion is inevitable, after thorough investigation of the condition of the reservation Indian, after seeing and being with him, studying and observing the laws and their application and execution, with due regard for the several experiments which have been tried upon him by the nation, and the failure of them all so far, that certain radical changes in the present Indian policy must be made. With an eye to the present experiments of allotting him, and the gigantic educational scheme now being tried upon him, in some cases preferring him to other worthy dependent children of the Republic, the following suggestions are made:

First. Let the Government keep its word with the Indian. In studying the North American Indian let us abandon the imaginary and study him in the light of facts.

Second. That a white man can much easier adopt Indian life than an Indian can the white man's customs. In illustration: the squaw men can become virtually Indians in three months, while it takes an Indian years to get to the level of the white man.

Third. Every change of policy by the United States in relation to its Indians, although the Indians decrease, results in an increase of annual expense.

Fourth. Let the Indian understand that at a date quite near the United States will cease to be his "Good Father," that he must look out for himself, and that allotment precedes his removal from Government charge. A total change of system in Indian affairs is needed, not a mere change of officers. Congress could hasten the final settlement of this Indian question by at once passing a law that after a given date all Indians born in the United States are "Indians taxed." This would make them citizens without technicalities or legal machinery. The reservation Indians are not now citizens. The fear that being "wards of the nation" they will be taken advantage of by the whites or that they will become independent of the United States prematurely has heretofore prevented this. If such a law were passed and the Indians told that they were free and had equal rights with other citizens the inducement would cause thousands of them to start to work for themselves. The fact that they are not citizens and have the reservations and the United States to fall back upon makes them dependent and stifles manhood and personal independence. If such a law were passed there would soon be less Indian agency employés and fewer contractors to furnish Indians with supplies.

Fifth. That the Indian is now governed too much.

Sixth. That he is more interested in his earthly future than he is in theology.

Seventh. That he is now an asset on the wrong side of the national ledger.

Eighth. That his salvation, physical and otherwise, depends upon his getting from under Government control.

Ninth. That allotting Indians on sand banks and saying by law "Indians must be farmers" does not make them so; crops will not grow on barren lands for Indians by act of Congress where they will not grow for white men.

Tenth. That the sooner the Indian gets into the school and other systems of the States and Territories in which he now resides on reservations or allotments the better for him and the whole nation.

The above suggestions must be considered with the limitations that before any permanent settlement of the Indian question can take place the nation must by purchase or otherwise close out all Indian trust funds in its hands, amounting to $25,491,430.17½, and certain liabilities of the United States to Indian tribes under treaty stipulations, which on June 1, 1890, amounted to $7,441,666.64, in all $32,933,096.81½. This large amount will have to be paid by the nation to the Indians, or white men for them. The class of claims known as Indian depredation claims, when liquidated, are paid from the amounts due to tribes committing depredations on the property of the whites. They are now of an indefinite and enormous amount. Unless care is had they will eat up the entire amount held as cash due the Indians. The necessity for the above changes is apparent to all who observe the condition of the Indian.

Hon. Thomas J. Morgan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his annual report for 1890, thus speaks of the present system of Indian Affairs under existing laws:

"The entire system of dealing with them [the Indians] is vicious, involving as it does the installing of agents, with semidespotic power, over ignorant, superstitious, and helpless subjects; the keeping of thousands of them on reservations practically as prisoners, isolated from civilized life and dominated by fear and force; the issue of rations and annuities, which inevitably tends to breed pauperism; the disbursement of millions of dollars' worth of supplies by contract, which invites fraud; the maintenance of a system of licensed trade, which stimulates cupidity and extortion, etc."

The condition that the reservation Indian now needs is a condition of prompt and rapid change in most of the incidents of the system now current, and the creation of new laws to meet changed conditions. The reservation Indian is governed in many ways. Congress, the Department, the Indian Office, the State courts, the citizens, and men and women's associations are constantly at him. There are only 133,417 reservation Indians, but they take up much valuable time.

The method now of getting him out of control of the nation is to allot him. Some of his best friends, however, fear that this is merely getting him deeper into the embrace of red tape. When you put an Indian into severalty you place him out of his reservation status at once, at least, in name. Then you say, "You are allotted." The Indian goes on the land ignorant of agriculture as an art or profession, uncultivated, not a worker; and then you provide that neither State or Territory shall tax his land for twenty-five years. Can they tax his personal property? Certainly.

The Indian does not like taxation; he has to give something up; he has been a receiver for many years past; the habit of receiving has grown on him. Who is to teach the Indian to farm? Is a costly establishment to be kept up, either under the school system or agency? Is not the agency, with all its employés, to be maintained as long as you keep this quasi control over the Indian? Is he always to be a dependent? Is he never to be alone?

Let Congress pass a law similar to the law of Canada that allotted Indian lands, in cases where the allottee by reason of illness or lack of means or experience can not utilize them, may be leased for the benefit of the allottee. The United States judge for the district in which the land lies should have this jurisdiction, and the land in such cases would afford the allottee a support.

In allotting lands to the Indians in arid regions the nation does not seem to have considered the necessity or expense of a system of irrigation sufficient to make the allotted lands fit for cultivation or residence. Where the Indians have been permitted to remain on as good land as the whites occupy, as a rule, when in tribal relation, they have succeeded. In illustration of this, see the present condition of the Six Nations of New York, the Eastern Cherokees, the Five Civilized Tribes, the Moquis of Arizona, and the Pueblos of New Mexico.

No separate laws for Indians or Indian reservations are necessary. A law good enough for a white man is good enough for an Indian. Instead of passing a separate code for Indians, pass a law placing them under the control of the laws of the several States and Territories. If the Indian is put upon his own resources, he will not want agents or other persons. What the reservation Indians want is the actual application of things good for them: Adopt useful things, not theories, and practical things will follow.

The present North American reservation Indians, collectively and individually, and their special friends, such has been their tutelage and dependence, seem to be about the only portion of our people who have an exact idea of the possible capacity of the United States Treasury. At all times and in all places, like the white man, he wants money. The reservation Indian will work if he is paid for it. He likes money, wants it, and will work for it. Pay him promptly and as much as any other man for like work and he will do it.

Cadillac at Detroit, in the Northwest, from 1701 to 1710, attempted the only successful method of civilizing Indians: showing them how and teaching them to work; giving them the proceeds of their labor and keeping faith with them. He considered them men and so treated them. He began a settlement for "habitation and the growth of civic institutions." He had a grant of land and upon this he began operations. He bought seed wheat from France, and gave the Indians each a little land to work. He was the father of allotment. In 1718, after he had left, the Indians about Detroit were reported as harvesting wheat and raising corn, beans, peas, squashes, and melons; but the almost constant war between England and France, in which the Indians were used as allies, prevented the growth of the Cadillac idea in the upper Northwest.

Cadillac's idea was the reverse of the clerical; the latter founded missions to convert Indians, near which were trading posts to enrich the owners. The church sought to control the Indian by appealing to his heart and sympathies, which were supposed to be alike in men, and the traders frequently intermarried with the Indians, and thus obtained influence over them. These methods neither aided the Indian to better his actual condition nor tended to the founding of permanent homes or communities.

Cadillac showed the Indian a result from his labor, gave him the proceeds and stimulated his ambition with gain. He appealed to his material side, which order of appeal has been potent with man in all ages; besides, at that time the Indian had not as yet become a dependent upon the public treasury. He had not been debauched by gifts of fire-arms or whisky. The grip of the white man was not then on his throat, his tongue in his ear, nor his touch in his palm.

The remedy of Kit Carson (one of the bravest and most humane of Indian fighters) for the Indian question was to stop the Indian from running at large, place him on reservations of good land, and let him fight the problem out himself;

"The only true remedy * * * is to compel the savages to form settlements by themselves, then and there assist and teach them to cultivate the soil; in time they will be able to gain a maintenance independent of the General Government and to a certain extent they will become responsible for their acts."

This is, as has been noted, the present Canadian Indian policy. The Indians of Canada are placed upon reservations of land which will maintain them, of course with a small area for each, and they are aided to a start in life. They are now practically self-sustaining. The Canadian Indian knows when he goes on the land that it is to be his; the American Indian knows, if experience is worth anything, that it is not to be his, or the chances are largely that it will not be, and in addition it may be a sand bank. Ninety per cent of the present American Indians on reservations are not agriculturists, but the most of them will work in other fields when paid for it. The Indian is too much of a child of nature to wait for slow growing crops. He wants to see an immediate result from his labor. He will work as a laborer provided you board him and pay him cash besides. This has been tested. Money is an actual visible result to him. (See the reports of the special agents as to this.) The Navajos did much of the work of grading the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad in Arizona and New Mexico.

A strange fact in connection with the administration of the Indian Office is, that as the Indians decrease in number and the civilized Indians become more numerous, according to the reports sent out, the number of employés and dependents and the expenditures for Indians increase. Each change of policy costs more money.

The Indian Office now has, in fact, charge of 133,417 Indians, of whom but 34,785 receive rations from the nation, and most of these are on barren lands. About 27,000 of the total are allotted Indians. If the Sioux were removed to good lands they might become self-sustaining citizens, or self-reliant at least, and the ration Indians reduced to a nominal number.

The efficiency of the Indian police at the various agencies is due to the fact that they are paid for their work, are mounted and armed, and have authority. Indians like places of command, as such positions increase their personal influence with the members of their tribe, who believe they have the ear of the agent. To be on terms with the Indian police is frequently to be influential with the agent, as that official mainly obtains his knowledge of the condition of the Indians from the police. Gen. William S. Harney originated the Indian police in a treaty with the Sioux at Fort Pierre, Nebraska Territory, in March, 1856.

The enlistment in the United States Army of about 5,000 able-bodied Indians from among the competent men of the reservation Indians and then their removal as soldiers to distant parts of the Republic, away from the possibility of their marrying or coming in contact with Indian women, would utilize useless material and decrease the reservation Indian population in the matter of births. There are 800 Indian soldiers, and fairly efficient ones, in the service now.

The red man's journey from east to west, poetically described as the "red man journeying toward the setting sun," was in fact making way for the white man to absorb and utilize the arable or productive lands, and has ended in many of the reservation Indians being anchored on sand deposits and sagebrush forests, with coyotes and rattlesnakes for companions.

On many of the reservations the Indian is now a corraled ox, waiting to see what the nation is going to do with him. He is, in fact, merely penned up, and until allotment was devised in 1887 his future was enveloped in a mantle of doubt and he was a most troublesome asset.

There are now about 139 Indian reservations and 54 actual agencies. In some cases the consolidation of Indian agencies, reduction of reservations, and the Indians' removal would be of service to the Indians and profit to the United States. This would better the Indians' moral and physical condition. For illustration: The Jicarilla Apaches of Northwestern New Mexico could be removed to the Mescalero Agency in the southwestern portion of the Territory. These are ration agencies, and both reservations are wretchedly poor in agricultural resources, and are without irrigation. If combined, the expense of one agency would be saved and civilization aided. The Jicarillas number 808 and the Mescaleros 513, which would be a total of 1,321 Indians for a combined agency. The Rosebud and Pine Ridge Sioux Agencies in South Dakota and the Brule Sioux Agency and the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Agencies are unfit for agriculture by reason of lack of water, and hot winds and drought also make them dreadful for living purposes. The Fort Berthold Reservation is also a miserable one for agriculture. The reports of special agents as to reservations, pages 350-717, give much data as to this.

Many other Indian reservations are utterly unfit for occupation by Indians or anyone else. Congress is frequently called upon, through crop failures, to aid whites living adjacent to them, notably in Arizona and South Dakota. The lands of almost all the Indian reservations in North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Eastern Oregon, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona, and Southern California lie in a region which requires artificial irrigation to produce crops. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been or will have to be spent to construct irrigating canals and ditches on these reservations. The Crow Reservation in Montana is an example of the expenditures to procure water for the Indians. The United States has paid this expense, and an irrigating engineer has been employed. Who is to keep up this expense? Who will care for the ditch when the Indian is allotted? Even the lands capable of being irrigated, owing to the small supply of water, are limited in extent, as are those in small valleys adjacent to the streams. Almost all the tribes of Indians on reservations lying in the arid belt in the States and Territories above named are ration Indians. What they are to do for food when present treaties expire is a question.

As an evidence of the character of the land given to Indians in Arizona for reservations to live upon and become self-supporting, the following is taken from the report of Gen. A. McD. McCook, commanding the department of Arizona, September, 1891. On the White Mountain Apache Reservation, San Carlos agency, there are 2,121 Apaches; in fact, it is the chief Apache reservation.

"The location of the San Carlos Reservation (agency) is the worst piece of land I know of where so many Indians are concentrated for an attempt at self-support and civilization.

"San Carlos is situated on the north bank of the Gila River, at the Apache Indian agency. It is 77 miles from Fort Grant, via Fort Thomas. This is an important post, being at and near the homes of the Apache Indians, and will continue a military station as long as the present system of management of the Indians there is continued. Heretofore the troops have been in camp, but temporary shelter is now being made for the officers and men. San Carlos is the most uncomfortable station in the department, on account of the intense heat of summer and dust storms in the spring and autumn. The usual tour of duty at this post is six months.

"There is no grass in this country to make hay sufficient for the use of the public animals. Heretofore a coarse pine grass has been cut and delivered by the Indians. It is not hay. The horses and mules will not eat it. When dry it is hard and rough and without a particle of nutriment. The consensus of opinion of all the officers is that it is not fit for food, injuring the horses who try to eat it."

Rations to Indians, it will be noted, are in most cases issued to Indians living on reservations lying in arid desert sections where white men without irrigation could not make a living.

The Indian Office in its report for 1891 gave the following table of Indians receiving subsistence in 1890, some a pound of beef a week, some a pound a day. The Census Office table for 1890 shows the amount of food equal to a day's rations received by reservation Indians, while the Indian Office table shows the number of Indians to whom food is issued, not specifying quantity, and embracing a large number of Indians not actually under charge of the Indian Office. This table shows worse for the continuance of the desert reservations than the census table. When the area of these reservations is decreased by allotment the Indian's hunting, fishing, and root grounds decrease, and these sources being closed to him, he will become more dependent, unless the allotted land, at a large expense, be prepared for agriculture.

It will be observed that the Census Office report on rations issued to Indians in 1890 relates to the 133,417 reservation Indians who are actually under charge of the Indian Office, but the Indian Office total of 243,534 embraces all Indians in the United States carried on the books of that office, self-reliant and independent as well as reservation Indians. The Census Office returns for 1890 made by sworn officers, and they the agents of the Indian Office, show that food equal to a ration for each day for 34,785 Indians was issued, while the Indian Office returns show that subsistence was issued to 57,960 Indians, or that the actual food supply for 34,785 Indians for one day was given to 57,960 for the same time, or about half rations.

The natural surroundings of some of the present reservations and their resources unfit them for residence. Nature never smiles bountifully on a precious metal mining region. Gold and silver are usually found in barren regions and distant lands raise food for the miners. Arizona, rich in precious metals, is no exception to this rule. The Indian reservations there are deserts, and the mountains upon and about them the depositories of rich ores. The Apaches on the several Arizona reservations should be removed to a country where they can sustain themselves, and the mines upon the reservations turned over to men who can develop them.

The Sioux on the Standing Rock, Rosebud, and Pine Ridge Reservations could be removed from the barren and arid lands they occupy and the lands turned over for cattle ranging or to those who will irrigate by canals or artesian wells, provided sufficient water can be found. Irrigation is a costly system, both to establish and maintain.

The 1,811 Piegans of Blackfeet Agency, Montana, are all ration Indians and have been since 1855, a period of thirty-five years. But little advance has been made by them toward self-support; they are simply stalled oxen, fed on a reservation by the United States. The area of this reservation permits of roaming, and its physical features do not permit of agriculture to the extent of feeding these people. Wise and prudent administration would have long since looked to the removal of this tribe to a location of such a character that advancement toward self-support would be possible. The cost of this tribe to the United States in the thirty-five years past has been simply enormous.

Many agencies should be abolished, some reservations abandoned, and tribes consolidated and removed to localities where it is possible to make a living. Congress should at once take this in hand, as proper action in this will save millions of dollars and tend to the bettering of the condition of the Indians. When agencies are ordered abolished the inspectors of the Indian Office can take charge and close them up.

The following agencies at different points, as shown by the reports of the special agents, should be abolished as useless: the Six Nations of New York; Eastern Cherokees of North Carolina; Lapwai, Idaho; Pueblo, New Mexico; Round Valley, California; Hoopa Valley, California; Siletz, Oregon; Umatilla, Oregon; all agencies in Washington, viz, Colville, Neah Bay, Puyallup, Tulalip, and Yakima; Quapaw, Indian Territory; Osage, Oklahoma, and Sac and Fox, Iowa; all agencies in Minnesota; all agencies in Wisconsin. Some of the agencies named were recommended for abolishment by officials ten or fifteen years ago.

The Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, should be at once abolished, as the Indians under charge of the agency are not reservation Indians in fact. The so-called reservation is owned by the Indians in fee, and no one has a right to invade or molest it. All reqhirements of law can be attended to by the United States district attorney for the district in which the Sac and Fox lands are located, or by an inspector of the Indian Office, and like matters at most of the other agencies when abolished could be so attended to.

The 300 Chippewas at the Turtle Mountain Reservation should be removed and allotted or made to work somewhere else, and the reservation promptly abolished.

The illustrations in this volume, showing types of Indians of almost all the reservation tribes, should be convincing as to the propriety of dropping many of the present reservation Indians from wardship. Thousands of American citizens are not half as well dressed or cared for as some of these wards, who still hold on with a death grip to the nation's purse.

Reservation Indians in the following States and Territories, as shown by the illustrations, should be forced to take care of themselves, and, as suggested, for bettering the condition of the Indians the agencies therein should be abolished: in Washington, Oregon, California (except the Yumas), Idaho (except the Bannocks and Shoshones), Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, and some in Oklahoma.

Many of the tribes in North Dakota and Montana also show about the same dress and condition as the average Western whites.

The Six Nations of New York, Eastern Cherokees of North Carolina, Moquis of Arizona, and Pueblos of New Mexico, and the Five Civilized Tribes of Indian Territory have agents, but what for no one knows, except for nominal duties or as ornaments. Their duties could be performed by inspectors from the Indian office at stated times once or twice a year.

Still, no general inflexible Indian system can properly settle the Indian question or change the condition of the reservations. There must be much discretion allowed in the execution of any system, as the conditions surrounding most of the tribes differ.

In illustration of the difficulties ahead in the national Indian policy, the Navajoes of New Mexico, Utah, and Arizona may be cited. They occupy a reservation of 8,174,720 acres in the three Territories named. The most of it is desert or mountainous, and a system of irrigation to make it fit for agriculture will cost a vast sum.

The Navajos now have large bands of horses and herds of sheep which they can only keep by having an enormous area to pasture them on. If they are allotted under existing laws their herds must go, as the area allotted would not maintain them. The herds gone, then Government support must follow. At the present time, and for years past, they have been entirely self-supporting. A new policy toward them will be an attempt to at once change a pastoral people, 17,204 in number, into an agricultural people by act of Congress. Such attempts have utterly failed in the past; the expense will be enormous, and the failure must be correspondingly great. In the matter of the Navajos Reservation, the probabilities are that it is better employed now in sustaining 17,204 people by a pastoral life and their herds than it can be made to do in any other way, except at an enormous outlay.

The reports of Dr. Washington Matthews and Special Agents Walter G. Marmon and Julian Scott, pages 375–390, can be read with much profit.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. A. McD. McCook, commanding the department of Arizona, in his report for 1892 devotes much space to the Navajos. Gen. McCook is a man of wide experience, and has given the subject thorough investigation. He was a member of the commission appointed by President Harrison in 1891 to visit the Navajos, and joined in the report which showed that there were no precious minerals in the Carrizo Mountains. In the following extract he indicates the large expense which the Government must incur to make the Navajo lands fit for agriculture:

"The conditions surrounding the Navajo Indian Reservation are a constant source of anxiety to the Indian Bureau, the Army, and the civil authorities of Arizona and New Mexico. There are 9,000 Navajo Indians living beyond the limits of the reservation set aside for them, where they have been living upon the unsurveyed lands for generations and claim these locations as their homes. They know nothing of the land laws and it is hard to make these people understand that they are trespassers outside of their reservation. In addition, they claim their people were in full possession of these lands before any white men were in this country; that they should have the same rights in the unsurveyed public lands as the white men. The white men deny this, claiming that the unsurveyed public lands are in spirit and fact for their use only, and the Indian having large tracts of lands set aside for occupation and use, he should be driven back upon them and compelled to stay there.

"This last proposition seems reasonable and right to those who do not understand the situation and circumstances governing in this case. Those portions of the Navajo Reservation with which I am familiar consist of timbered mountains known as the Navajo forest, high table-lands, sandy valleys, but with little living water upon the whole area. In the dry seasons this country presents a desolate appearance. The Navajo Indian is a nomad, and has for his reservation the northeastern portion of Arizona, northwestern New Mexico, and the strip of the Territory of Utah lying south of the San Juan River, containing in all 8,205,440 acres of land or 12,821 square miles. They number 16,102, of whom 9,241 are living off the reservation, and together they own 9,188 head of cattle, 118,798 horses, and 1,583,754 sheep, making this large tribe self-supporting. There is not sufficient water upon the present reservation to support these people together with their large herds and flocks.

"In order to assist this people, and make it possible for them to withdraw to the lands allotted them, I submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a plan to divide this large reservation into districts of proper size and numbers, having an officer of the Army, with proper escort, sent into each of these districts to make examination with a view to establishing and maintaining a system of irrigation and developing a stock-water supply sufficient for the Navajo Indians, together with suitable places for artesian wells, bore-wells to be worked by windmills, reservoir sites, or where springs, etc., may be developed.

"These places are known to be limited in number and extent, but for all practical purposes it will be sufficient to report in detail upon all such localities, giving maps, drawings, etc. Such localities can be carefully marked upon the existing maps of the geological survey, which have been made with great care and labor, and which represent the topography faithfully. This plan having met with the approval of the President, it is recommended that one party be charged with reporting upon all waters flowing into the Little Colorado on the Navajo Reservation, also Chinlee Valley as far north as the mouth of the Cañon de Chelly. A second party should be assigned to that portion of the reservation east of the Cañon del Muerto, and east of the Tunitcha, Lukachukai, and Carrizo Mountains.

"A third party should examine the northwestern portion of the reservation, including the remainder of the Chinlee Valley, the western slope of the Lukachukai and Carrizo Mountains, and as far west as the boundary of the reservation. The San Juan River should be divided between the second and third parties. The officers in charge of these parties will be instructed to locate upon the map of the geological survey the points at which any work recommended is to be done. This work will be made in detail, and as far as possible estimates be made of the amount of labor required for the work. In case it is reported that sufficient water for irrigation can be obtained, it is recommended that this plan be elaborated.

"The above plan was suggested by me, first, in the interest of peace, for a conflict with Navajoes, who are great in numbers and are well armed, would be a serious business; second, for the welfare and prosperity of this most interesting people; third, to eliminate from the civil and military administration of the affairs of this tribe the constant anxiety existing, produced by large numbers of these people living off their reservation, and the friction made thereby with their white neighbors."

The Navajos favor schools, but want them on their reservation, as assured by the treaty of 1868; while now a peaceful and quiet people, anxious to increase their herds and flocks, they watch closely any attempt to invade their reservation by unauthorized persons, and are ready to resist such an invasion. The wool grown by the Navajos has for almost a quarter of a century been dyed or marketed at Philadelphia, Pa., and the bright-colored blankets of this people are now principally made from Eastern dyed wool. The Navajos are superior Indians, and their material condition now makes them anxious for peace. War with them will be begun by the United States. Several times during the past two years there has been danger of war with the Navajos, but not brought on by themselves. The census of 1890 was taken with some difficulty, as is shown below.

NAVAJO CENSUS OF 1890.

The census of the Navajos was taken in 1890–1891 under many embarrassments, the great difficulty being the attitude of these Indians in the matter of the school children. The following report of Special Agent John Donaldson, who was in charge of the census, indicates a serious condition of affairs:

"GALLUP, N. MEX., April 22, 1891.

"In January, 1891, during our council with the Navajo chiefs at Fort Defiance, Arizona, in relation to the census of their tribe, they had a great grievance about their school children. Indian Inspector Junkin, on the part of the Indian Office, heard the complaint of the Indians. He promised to call the attention of the proper authorities at Washington to the matter. Some time ago Indian Inspector Lewis came to Fort Defiance, and, without the consent or knowledge of their parents, took a number of Navajo school children from the Fort Defiance school to the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo.

"Some of these children ran away from the school at Grand Junction and returned to their parents on the reservation. They walked home over deserts and mountains, suffered severely from exposure and the hardships of the journey of several hundred miles, and of course they had a serious tale to tell of bad treatment and abuse while at the Grand Junction school: whether true or not, they tell it.

"The Navajos, already incensed at the removal of the children from Fort Defiance to Grand Junction without their consent, were terribly aroused when the children returned with their long stories, and consider the whole matter an outrage. They talked this to Mr. Junkin during the entire time of the council with him.

"The last Congress, he said, had passed a compulsory educational law for the Indians, or rather gave the Commissioner of Indian Affairs authority to force compulsory Indian school attendance, and the Indian children must attend school. This law and its proposed execution is going to make trouble. The Navajos are men of means and sense. It is useless to try to frighten them by threats of using soldiers to take their children to distant schools. If the Government will keep its word with these people there need be no soldiers sent here. It is a funny thing to hear the agents of the Indian Office threatening war about so trivial a matter as the attendance of a few children at a boarding school when the Government is in default to these Indians on a contract made years ago to give them schools on their reservation.

"I question if Congress intended to give a bureau office the power to order out an army to kill men because they will not send their children to school; besides, the Grand Junction school is a long distance off, and is a failure as to its location, because there are no Indians around it to draw from for scholars; but I presume the school must be kept up to please local interests. I venture that Gen. A. McD. McCook, who commands this department, will not favor using the army with which to collect school children. Such proceedings seem to me to smack too much of an empire for our day and country.

"Personally, Mr. Parker is a good, square man, and officially he is a 'rustler.' He gets about rapidly, has seen most of the big men among the Navajos, and is deadly in earnest to get these children for the school. He has raised much excitement among the Indians, and it is hurting our census.

"I explained to the chiefs at the council in January that we were here to get their names, and for no other purpose; that we did not mean to tax or remove them or in any manner interfere with their children.

"I have just returned from Fort Defiance, where Mr. Parker had a council of the big men of the Navajo people, including Manuelito, last Monday. The Navajos like Mr. Parker because he is a thoroughbred, but are down on his Grand Junction school scheme. They are not opposed to the education of their children; on the contrary, they are a unit in favor of education, and everything that will elevate their children, but they want them educated on the reservation where they can see them occasionally and know their condition. They want day schools at home.

"A great many of the parents of the children taken to Grand Junction by Agent Lewis now believe their offspring dead, not having heard from them since their departure.

"The last treaty with the Navajos provides that the Government shall provide a school upon the reservation for every 30 Navajo families; of course none have been provided under the treaty. The Indians want this carried out. They want education here, not in Colorado. The Indians are excited over the matter, and are very suspicious of any official from Washington, believing that all are working against them.

"Mr. Parker, in his talk Monday, threatened to use the troops, if necessary, to get school children. The Navajos did not like this. If soldiers are sent to their reservation it wants to be 5,000 to 6,000 men, or the Navajos will clean them out. They have recently held two or three powwows among themselves over this matter, and last Monday night I counted over forty of them in a room at Fort Defiance discussing it. The conference lasted almost all night. I was ordered from the room when I entered.

"The presence of Mr. Parker upon the reservation for this school business is hurting our census work. The damage, however, is done and can not now be rectified. The Indians now suspect everything and everybody.

"If Mr. Junkin made a report to his chief of the council held in January, I can not conceive how the Department came to send Mr. Parker here to further excite the already aroused Navajos about their school children and the Grand Junction school. The Navajos say that it is a queer system which threatens to use soldiers to obtain school children.

"The Navajos support themselves, are independent, and receive little or no Government aid. What they receive they do not ask for, and will fight for their children. Troops moved to this reservation means war. The people are able and honest. Reason will reach them better than bullets.

"One of our enumerators, George Sampson, informed me yesterday that a Navajo woman threatened to kill him with a knife when he called at her hogan for census information, supposing that he was there for the purpose of getting her children for a distant school. Col. W. G. Marmon, who is working district No. 9, told me yesterday that the day before he stopped at a hogan to enumerate, and got but two names, the Navajo and his squaw. They stated that they had no children. After he left the hogan he was joined by an Indian policeman, who was present at the hogan during the enumeration, and the policeman informed Col. Marmon that the family contained three children, who were concealed under a blanket in a corner of the hogan while the enumerator was present, the parents fearing to give their names for fear that the children would be taken from them and sent to the Indian school at Grand Junction. Some of the enumerators state that upon their approach the Navajo women conceal their children or hurry them off to the hills.

"Owing to this excitement I fear that we will fall short of the estimate in the total returned.

"If the Government wants a war with the Navajos it can get the accommodation on sight; no days of grace are requisite in the matter. These Indians are peaceable, industrious, earnest, and keeping faith with the nation under all treaties made. They kill no one and mind their own business. In case of war the Government must begin the killing. The Navajos are about the best armed and equipped Indians on the continent, and, including men, women, and children, can put 6,000 to 7,000 fighting people in the field. Their herds of cattle, horses, and sheep will be a good commissary for them in case of war. I hope sincerely that the Government will not send an army here to make a show of force or go to killing these people for a civic offense or for disobeying the Indian Office. By the way, was a compulsory Indian education law ever passed by Congress? What an extraordinary way of enforcing it!

Indian children on reservations should be placed as soon as possible into the public school systems of the States and Territories in which they live and where English alone is taught. There is no objection to their going to these public schools, for there is not the prejudice existing against the Indian that there is against the negro; still, the Indian is not usually a taxpayer; and this might be an objection. The nation could see to this. Public schools are not denominational schools, and creed is not taught in them, so this would be an advantage. Indians should have a school system where necessary under their own authority or the authority of the States and Territories in which they live after they have ceased to be wards of the nation, and industrial education should only be given where the Indian children show mechanical taste.

In the case of the allotted Indians, who are not taxpayers, local school privileges would probably be reluctantly given. The solution of this is the abolishment of the large reservations and the placing of the Indians somewhere on lands on which they can make a living, and then allotting them, and the payment by the United States for, say, 10 years, to the States and Territories in which the Indians are, of a monthly allowance for each child equal to the cost of schools for white children in the several districts.

The establishment of an Indian industrial training school is an event in a community. It adds immensely to the revenues of the adjacent city or town. It also increases population and booms things generally. As long as Congress gives liberally, the policy of increasing the number of such institutions will be popular with the people where they are located and aid some public men in retaining popular favor.

No thorough investigation of the best method of educating Indian children resulting from the several attempts has yet been had. The Government has been experimenting for many years in Indian educational matters, but no one plan has yet been settled upon as the best; still, the existing system is a great advance on previous systems, and is the best we have had. This is largely due to the efforts of President Harrison, Secretary Noble, and Commissioner Morgan. Congress makes or unmakes plans in the annual appropriation laws. The denominational question is always at the front in Indian education. The truth is, that for the past half century or more the various churches have been the most interested of all organizations in the Indian question, and have largely framed the Government's several Indian policies.

Their several boards and societies and the religious press have enabled them to reach and arouse the interest of the mass of the people, and being prominent and influential, they have exercised an enormous influence in this matter. They deserve credit and thanks for their efforts. In fact the Government has largely relied upon the churches in Indian matters, and while they deserve thanks and commendation, the result of the various denominations reaching out for the Indians' spiritual welfare has been on many reservations discord and contests among themselves, which the Indians have closely watched.

The greatest and most difficult problem now of Indian education is what to do with the Indian boys and girls belonging to reservations after they have been educated in Government boarding or industrial schools away from reservations. Shall they be sent back to the reservations? If so, what will they do when they go back; and once back, will they resume their Indian customs?

The Indian boy fresh from Carlisle or some other Government Indian school goes back to his people and reservation. He has learned a trade, perhaps that of a slater, a tinsmith, or harness maker. Such trades are useless among his people. His clothes wear out; he sees no employment at hand; he has no money. Soon a blanket takes the place of a coat, then leggings of blankets for trousers, and finally he is an Indian in appearance. The Indian boy educated at the United States Government boarding and industrial schools should only be sent back to his people when the conditions warrant it, and unless these conditions are as favorable to his remaining as they were at the school he left, he should be encouraged to live among the whites. The educated Indian girl is at a greater disadvantage than the educated boy, as she can only become the wife of a buck.

As stated, the prejudice that exists among whites against the negro does not exist against the Indian, and this should be weighed at its full value in the question of the final disposition of the Indian. The Indian, left to himself, should invoke sympathy and get a helping hand from the whites, both on account of his being the original American and because he will help himself when he knows he is to be paid for his work. The Indian likes money and will work to get it and the comforts which come from its possession.

If a national system of Indian education is to continue in schools away from the reservations, then the Indian youth so educated should be encouraged to remain with the whites until his people are allotted, when he can become an allottee. Indian school children are enrolled for allotment.

The statements of the special agents, pages 351-710, show conclusively that many Indian boys and girls educated at Government industrial or boarding schools away from reservations, after returning to their people have not realized expectations, and have not assisted the mass of Indians on their several reservations in the march of progress, but that they are usually overpowered in sentiment by the old Indians, and are either forced to their old ways and habits or go back to them of their own motion.

Employ Indian men and women as teachers, where competent, in Government schools and in every position possible about the agencies or on the reservations, while they exist, and when so employed pay them as much as you do whites in like positions.

Daniel Dorchester, D. D., superintendent of Indian schools, in his annual report for 1890, after an extended tour over the several Indian reservations, arrived at the following conclusion in connection with the question of church schools for Indians under Government aid, the argument in which is that it is the correct thing in Indian administration to civilize Indians before Christianizing them by creed:

"While the Government can not organically promote Christianity, it can, nevertheless, open the way for the churches, remove obstacles, and encourage them, irrespective of sects, in their work. This is important, because the Indians are thoroughly controlled in all their ideas and customs by their pagan notions. It is surprising to how many very common customs these old beliefs apply and how firmly they are held by them. Their pagan beliefs therefore constitute the chief basis of life."

Let the Indian's harmless games, dances, and customs alone. He dances because he believes it is his duty. He dances; we pray. Leave the Indian a little personality, a little independence, and teach him a little manhood while you are reconstructing him. The sun, scalp, and war dances, all exciting and brutal, have long since been abandoned; the remaining dances are merely for pleasure or duty.

On almost all of the reservations are some aged, crippled, deformed, and otherwise dependent Indians. These should be cared for, and no permanent change in the present system should take place without this being seen to. Of course, these dependent Indians are allotted, and the United States court of the district in which they are could lease their allotments for them, the proceeds going toward their support; or it might be best to make an appropriation direct for their care to the States and Territories in which they reside, or to gather them all in one locality and maintain them. There are only about 1,500 of them.

The nation should at once consider the Six Nations of New York in the matter of the Ogden Land Company's claim. The fee to the land in question, it is said, is claimed by the Ogden Land Company. The United States guaranteed a right of occupancy to the Indians. At present a clear title does not rest in the Ogden Land Company, these Indians, or the United States. The United States will have to initiate a movement to quiet and perfect this title, perhaps by purchase of the Ogden Land Company claim. Nothing in the way of a division of this land among the Indians can be done until the nation so acts. To properly allot the remaining unallotted Indians and cash the trust and other funds, which are about $33,000,000, will cost in round numbers $100,000,000.

In all future dealings with the reservation Indians let them understand that they must become self-sustaining; make them understand this by the law; show them the way; give them the means to become self-sustaining and they will succeed. Teach the Indian that it pays to be clean, to be industrious, to have one wife, to have property, to have but one family of children, and teach him to follow the best habits of white people. Show him that it is to his interest to be like other men.

Whatever is to be done with the reservation Indians, do it at once. Ten years can close this question up. Do not dole this out through another fifty or one hundred years at a cost of $200,000,000 or $300,000,000.

In the final settlement of the Indian question an equity lies with the citizen Indians of California, who were never paid for their lands. Something should be done for them by the nation in the matter of homes and schools from public lands, or with money derived from sales of public lands. Perhaps the nonreservation Indians of Nevada should also be included.

Finally, the changes necessary in the Indian policy to improve the Indian's condition are: Enforced education under authority of the nation or the States and Territories; enforced labor, by making the reservation Indians work for themselves, either as laborers, herders, or farmers; enforced allotment on proper land, with allowance for houses, cattle, and horses prior thereto from the proceeds (perhaps) of their surplus lands; in fact, a start in life, especially for the squaws and children, thus securing for them settled homes.

This is the culmination of the success and failure of the entire Indian administration for the past one hundred years, and the earthly salvation of the remaining reservation Indians depends upon it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations considered this bill very carefully in the light of the estimates and of the action of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. The proposition of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] that Congress should, upon the opinion of a single inspector, however intelligent he may be, change the whole policy of the Government, notwithstanding the reports of the heads of Departments and the action of the two Houses of Congress in respect to the administration of the Indian service, is certainly somewhat extraordinary.

I shall not at this time undertake to go into any argument upon this subject, but I will say that in respect to having agents for Indians who have allotments, and who are not upon reservations, I know by the experience of the Indians in Florida that they do require an agent as much if not more than those who are upon reservations.

I think the Government has a duty to perform to these half-civilized, and some uncivilized people, and that the policy of the Government in respect to Indian agencies is one that ought to be preserved, and not be ruthlessly abolished without consideration by a committee of this body, and without reference to the reports of the heads of the Departments.

I hope the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] will withdraw the amendment, which certainly ought to have the consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and have a bill reported and acted upon deliberately by the Senate in reference to the allotments of the reserved portion of the reservation. In view of the difference of opinion which exists here, I do not think there can be any intelligent disposition of the subject. I therefore hope that in order to avoid the further consumption of time we may act upon the remaining amendments and that the Senator from Kansas will not press his amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. As I said before, I think this is a very easy way of disposing of the matter, and I therefore insist upon my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the end of line 7, on page 68, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to discontinue contract schools as rapidly as the same can be done without interfering with the education of the Indian children, and that he submit to Congress, in his next estimates, proposals for substituting Government schools for contract schools in all places where, in his judgment, the same can be substituted without detriment to the education of the Indian.

Yesterday when the matter of contract schools was under discussion every Senator who spoke on the subject put himself on record as being in favor of accomplishing this purpose as speedily as it is possible to accomplish it, the objection being urged that under existing law and the administration of the appropriations of Congress it could not be done suddenly without detriment to the education of the children. The amendment simply provides that we shall make a beginning in that direction, and at sometime in the future it is to be hoped the full result may be brought about, the matter, however, being largely left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

I have no disposition to prolong this discussion, but I wish to read just a few words from the utterances of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday touching this point. He said:

Mr. President, there is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations who does not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that whenever it is possible to do so, in deference to the growing public sentiment of this country, it would be better that all Indian schools should be under the direct control of the Government. He does not differ—from the committee in that respect, nor the committee from him. The public opinion of this country, of the great masses of the religious people of all churches, is opposed, I believe, to the policy of sectarian schools.

Alluding to myself—

I could not have expressed my own convictions any more clearly, nor could I have stated them as well as the Senator from Florida expressed them in the paragraph which I have read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The amendment which I have offered looks to the beginning of a scheme under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior which, if honestly carried out, will ultimately take the appropriation entirely out of the hands of sectarian institutions and cause it to be spent wholly in schools controlled by the Government, in which sectarian teachings will presumably and probably be excluded.

This, as I view the matter, is something which ought to be done. It can not be done abruptly. We were told yesterday that these schools should not be discontinued arbitrarily, for the reason that contracts exist which can not and ought not to be summarily repudiated; but there seemed to be a concensus of opinion in the Senate yesterday that the suggestions made in the discussion were in the right direction, and that the ultimate purpose to put the schools under the control of the Government is correct in principle and ought in some way in the future to be worked out.

I never knew anything accomplished that was not begun. Rhetoric does not amount to anything in dealing with a great public question. Oratory never solved a great problem. If this is to be accomplished it must make a beginning. I submit to the Senate, and especially to the committee having the matter in charge, that the amendment I have offered is one which can not do any harm and that it properly, as I look at it, commits us to a policy which will result in great good. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the committee, and if it is not accepted I trust it will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate can do as it chooses in regard to the matter.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire whether his purpose would not be better advanced by not interfering with the matter in that shape. Would it not be better to adopt by legislation some practical method prescribing exactly what schools should be established by the Government, where they should be established, and the means provided for them? The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is an empty declaration. It simply declares that the Secretary shall as rapidly as possible discontinue the use of contract schools it has always been the duty of the Secretary to provide Government schools wherever it could be done.

The main question will occur to the Senator just as much after his amendment is adopted, if that be the desire of the Senate, as before. Here is a school established by private charity. What shall the Government do, establish another one immediately alongside of it, and let the two schools be in competition? Will the Indians be withdrawn from one school and carried into the other? Shall we have no school there at all, or shall we leave it entirely to private charity? The whole subject is an important one, and in order to advance the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire and others, looking to the establishment of nonsectarian schools for the adequate education of Indian children, it seems to me there ought to be a system and a plan carefully considered and reported, and then acted upon by both Houses of Congress, with whom the responsibility lies.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been somewhat impressed with the suggestions of the Senator from Florida, and I will modify my amendment so that I think it will be agreeable to the Senator from Florida as well as to myself, and, I trust, to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not know that there has been any declaration of policy on the part of Congress, by any formal action, relating to this matter. I think it very proper that in some way and by some amendment to the pending bill Congress should declare that it is its purpose to do away with all schools for Indians except Government schools.

I think it is a very great mistake that Congress ever permitted the Indians to be educated in schools outside of the Government schools. I suppose it grew out of the disposition of a great many charitable, benevolent, and religious people to do missionary work among the Indians, supposing that missionary work could best be done through the medium of educational schools. However laudable that idea may have been, I think that as it has been carried out it has been greatly to the disadvantage of the Indians. Either the Government should leave the whole work to denominational associations or it should do the whole work itself. I can think of no reason why the Government should have schools for the education of the Indians and then allow a portion of the Indians to be educated in private schools.

I do not know why religious bodies should establish, maintain, and carry on schools among the Indians any more than that private individuals should carry on schools among the Indians. The Senator from Florida says this is the work of private individuals in some instances, and that in all cases contracts are made with individuals; but the fact nevertheless remains that these schools, conducted and carried on by the different denominational associations of the United States, are really understood to be a part of the work of the churches among the Indians. The object of the persons and the denominations engaged in it is to Christianize the Indians according to their idea of Christianity.

As I said, it may be a very laudable wish, but it seems to me sadly to interfere with the Government system of education of the Indians. The Government is not responsible for what is done in these schools, and whatever may be the nominal supervision which the Government exercises over them, they are not directly under the supervision and care of the Government as our Government schools are.

My own idea about Indian education is that the Indians need very much more work in the line of special education and training; manual and industrial education. Of course, that is to a certain extent foreign to the object of the private denominational schools. I have been hoping that the Government Indian school might assume more and more the feature of being a training school or an industrial school, carried on with the idea and purpose of enabling the Indian child, who is educated in the Government school, to earn a living and to learn how to work in connection with learning the letters and the rudimentary branches of education. I deem it very much more essential that that should be done than that the Indians should be educated along the lines of a common-school education simply and entirely.

To do that the Government should control all the schools. As I said, that can not be to any extent the purpose of the denominational schools. These are established with a kind of missionary object and missionary enterprise, to convert the children rather than to educate them. Just as long as that goes on, the education of the children will not be that which is best adapted to make them citizens and to enable them to take part with other citizens in the race of life.

I am very glad to observe that very many of the denominations of the country are adopting this idea with regard to Indian education. I believe that the Government schools can be best adapted to teaching the Indians those things which it is necessary they should learn in order to become self-sustaining and useful members of society. It does very little good to educate the Indian child above and away from the surroundings to which he or she must be relegated when his or her school life closes.

When the child thus educated goes back to his or her place among his or her associates, then he or she must adopt the customs, manners, and, so far as such a word can be used in connection with the Indian, the aspirations of the other Indians, or life is to be made a burden to them. So, looking at it in whatever way you will, from whatever standpoint you will, the denominational schools are, in my judgment, a hindrance to the civilization of the Indian; and the first great object is civilization, and giving them such an education as will enable them to make their way in life. This is not new talk; this is not a new doctrine. It has been repeatedly affirmed here, it has been repeatedly affirmed by Indian Commissioners and by Secretaries of the Interior, and yet in some way the system of contract schools goes on, and the tendency all the while is to the enlargement of the system rather than to the diminution of it.

Therefore I think it is very proper that we should express in some way on the pending bill the determination of Congress to reduce the contract school system as rapidly as it can be done without leaving the Indians without the means of education at all, and to substitute in place of the contract schools, as rapidly as it can be done, Government schools under the direct care and supervision of Government officials.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to modify my amendment. I will state in connection with it that I have received valuable assistance from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in formulating the amendment in its modified form. I desire to modify the amendment so that it will read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inquire into and investigate the propriety of discontinuing contract schools, and whether, in his judgment, the same can be done without detriment to the education of the Indian children; and that he submit to Congress at the next session the result of such investigation, including an estimate of the additional cost, if any, of substituting Government schools for contract schools, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer an amendment, to come in after line 24 on page 56.

The SECRETARY. Add after line 24 on page 56:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized to examine the accounts of James A. Cooper, late special agent of the Interior Department, upon the principles of equity and justice, and allow him such credits as he is entitled to and incurred by him under direct authority and orders of his superior officer, the Secretary of the Interior, and give him credit for the per diem due him while detained here in Washington under orders of the Interior Department.

Mr. MARTIN. In regard to the amendment I desire to say that I have submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as well as the Senator from Florida, having the bill in charge, and I think it meets with their approval. As the only explanation of the amendment which is at all necessary I submit a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, explaining the whole situation.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, July 16, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 14th instant, calling for a report as to the work done by Special Indian Agent James A. Cooper, for the commission appointed by act of July 13, 1892, to negotiate with the Yankton Indians in South Dakota.

All such commissions require that one of its members be designated as a disbursing agent under bonds, so that funds can be placed to his credit to meet the expenses of the commission. For this purpose Mr. W. L. Brown, one of the commissioners, was so designated, and the necessary funds were placed to his credit from time to time; but under date of December 24, 1892, he resigned.

Neither of the other members of the commission being under bond, funds could not be remitted to them for the compensation and expenses, and as it was believed that they had nearly completed their duties, it was thought to be better to detail a special agent already bonded to act for them until the end of the work.

Therefore, under date of February 8, 1893, Special Indian Agent Cooper was directed by this office to proceed to Yankton Agency and assume the duties of disbursing agent for the Yankton Commission.

He was specifically instructed to pay all legitimate claims incurred by the commission if he was satisfied that they were necessary and proper for the speedy execution of the work, provided each claimant swore to his claim and the chairman of the commission indorsed his approval thereon.

The commission having finished its duties in February, 1893, the Secretary of the Interior telegraphed Agent Cooper to accompany the members to this city, which order he complied with, remaining here with them, assisting them in completing their work and settling their accounts until the 17th of the following May, when he was ordered to proceed to New Mexico on special duty.

As it appears that Agent Cooper acted entirely under Department authority, even in the payment of the commissioners, Adams and Cole, in full, without deduction for absence from duty, and as he was detained here until ordered to another post of duty, I think that his accounts as presented in accordance with the regulations of the Department, and in compliance with the specific instructions above referred to, should be allowed, which would include the commissioner's compensation in full and his per diem while detained in this city as above explained.

Respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN MARTIN, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I also offer an amendment, in relation to certain homeless Wyandotte Indians, to follow line 2, on page 40. I will state that I have submitted this amendment also to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and some of the other members, as well as to the Senator having the bill in charge, and I think they have no objection to it. The amendment is recommended by the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 40, insert:

Whereas there is due the Wyandotte Indians from the Government of the United States, as ascertained and reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his letter to the Secretary of the Interior of February 17, 1894, a balance of $15,686.80; and

Whereas there are absentee Wyandotte Indians, who are poor and homeless, numbering between 150 and 200 persons, and for whom no provision has been made:

Therefore, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to purchase for said absentee Wyandotte Indians 80 acres of land per capita, or so much thereof as said sum of $15,686.80 will purchase, at a sum not to exceed $1.50 per acre; such lands to be purchased from the Quapaw Indians in the Indian Territory, or, if this be found impracticable, then such lands shall be purchased of other Indians in the Indian Territory, where the land may be most conveniently and advantageously obtained by the Secretary of the Interior; said lands to be taken in allotments, as provided in the severalty act of Congress of February, 1887, and amendments thereto. And the sum of $15,686.80, so due the said Wyandotte Indians, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of making the purchase of the lands herein and hereby provided for.

Mr. MARTIN. I submit a letter from the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs in relation to the matter, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 17, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I am in receipt of a communication from Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, dated February 9, 1894, in which he incloses copy of a letter from this office to R. B. Armstrong, esq., dated January 8, 1891, relative to the claims of certain Wyandotte Indians, and a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, and asks for my views in relation to the claim.

With the papers submitted by Mr. HOLMAN is the draft of what appears to be an item intended for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill, as follows:

"Whereas there is due the Wyandotte Indians by the Government of the United States, as ascertained by a report of special commissioners appointed by Congress to investigate the claims of the Wyandottes, transmitted to Congress March 19, 1869, the sum of $24,811.50; and whereas there are absentee Wyandotte, Indians who are poor and homeless numbering between 150 and 200:

"Therefore the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to purchase for said absentee Wyandotte Indians 80 acres of land per capita, such purchase to be made of the Indians comprising the Quapaw Agency in the Indian Territory, or if found impracticable, of other Indians in the Indian Territory, said lands to be taken in allotments as provided in the severalty act of February, 1887, and amendments thereto, and to be paid for at the maximum price of $1.50 per acre; and the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of the general fund not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out this provision."

The thirteenth article of the treaty of February 23, 1867, known as the Omnibus treaty (15 Stats., 516), as originally agreed upon, provided "that there shall be recognized as due and paid to the Wyandottes of all classes the sum of $83,814.40," as shown by a schedule attached to the treaty.

The items in said schedule were as follows:

1. Annuity due under the sixth article of the treaty of January 31, 1855	$8,750.00
2. Amount discounted on $53,594.53 in State bonds on the 13th of May, 1859	15,187.03
3. Interest on the above $15,187.03 from May 13, 1859, to February, 1867, at 5 per cent	6,150.87
4. Amount discounted on $53,000 in State bonds, March 24, 1860	11,130.00
5. Interest on above $11,130 from March 24, 1860, to February 24, 1867	4,618.85
6. Moneys heretofore appropriated in fulfillment of treaty stipulations, but transferred to surplus fund	3,635.05
7. Amount for depredations on Wyandotte property, claim approved by Secretary of the Interior, March 21, 1863	34,342.50
Total amount	83,814.40

The schedule also contained the following statement:

"The above-named total sum is designed to represent the full claim of the Wyandottes against the United States under former treaties.

"The first, second, and fourth items, together with another named in the fourteenth article of the foregoing treaty, were examined and approved by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and their payment recommended. (See Congressional Globe, page 1037, part 2, second session, Thirty-eighth Congress.)

"The third and fifth items constitute the interest on the moneys discounted on the bonds mentioned in items 2 and 4. Although the committee did not recommend the payment of this interest they acknowledged its justice, but said that its allowance would possibly endanger the passage of the appropriation, as the general feeling was averse to paying interest on claims."

In ratifying the treaty the Senate struck out the above provision of the 13th article and inserted the following in lieu thereof:

"And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and required to appoint three persons whose duty it shall be to ascertain and report to the Department the amount of money, if any, due by the United States to the Wyandotte Indians under existing treaty stipulations, and the items mentioned in Schedule A, appended to this treaty, and the report of the persons so appointed, with the evidence taken, shall be submitted to Congress for action at its next session."

This amendment was accepted by the Wyandottes, and Messrs. James H. Embry, Julius A. Fay, and James P. Taylor were appointed commissioners thereunder. March 2, 1869, these commissioners submitted their report, in which they found the following sums justly due the Wyandottes from the United States, to wit:

A. Interest on deferred payments	$11,612.00
B. Loss on sale of bonds, May, 1859, with interest	18,547.00
Loss on sale of bonds, March, 1860, with interest	12,630.00
C. Money heretofore appropriated in fulfillment of treaty stipulations, but transferred to the surplus fund	3,844.69
D. Taxes unjustly collected by the Territorial government of Kansas in 1859 and 1860, to be refunded with interest	14,582.62
E. Grant of $5,000 for Wyandottes to establish themselves in their new homes	5,000.00
Total	66,206.31

This report was transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of the Interior, March 17, 1869 (Senate Executive Document No. 6, Forty-first Congress, first session).

In a supplemental report the commissioners allowed for claims of various parties for losses by depredations committed on their property	6,293.50
Making the total amount allowed by the commission	72,499.81

It will be observed that there are three items of interest included in the above amounts:

First. A. Composed entirely of interest on deferred payments	11,612.00
Second. In B. Interest on loss on bonds, which is found to amount to	11,444.50
Third. In D. Interest on taxes illegally collected found to amount to	2,879.06
Total	25,935.56
It also appears from the records of this office that item C included the sum of $1,755.18 for interest	1,755.18
	27,690.74

The draft submitted with Mr. Holman's letter appears to be composed of these several items with the exception of No. 3, the correct amount of the other items being $24,811.68.

By the act of May 29, 1872 (17 Stats., 165), the sum of $16,703.50 was appropriated to refund the taxes unjustly collected, being item D of the commission's report, less interest, $11,703.56, and for the payment of the $5,000 for removal, being item E.

By the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stats., 421), the sum of $28,109.51 was appropriated to be paid to members of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians, which appears to include the following items:

Losses on sale of bonds, May, 1859	$11,592.50
Losses on sale of bonds, March, 1860 (being item B with interest omitted)	8,130.00
Money theretofore appropriated but transferred to surplus fund (being item C without interest)	2,089.51
And depredation claims (being amount allowed by commission in supplemental report)	6,293.50
	28,105.51

The commissioners allowed the sum of $44,809.07, exclusive of the items for interest, and Congress had up to 1891 appropriated the sum of $44,813.01 in payment.

It having been ascertained that, in the payment of the foregoing appropriations, the citizen Wyandottes had not received the amount to which they were entitled, Congress, on March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1009), appropriated the sum of $13,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to pay balances due the citizen Wyandottes.

There has, therefore, been paid to the Wyandottes of all classes, in carrying out the provisions of the amended thirteenth article of the treaty of 1867, the sum of $57,813.01, leaving a balance, according to the report of the commission, of $15,686.80.

I see no reason to differ from the conclusion of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as referred to in Schedule A attached to the treaty of 1867, and of the commissioners appointed under the amended thirteenth article of that treaty, that the Wyandottes are justly entitled to the items of interest.

I think, however, that the tribal Indians should be charged with the $13,000 paid to the citizen class, to equalize the payments to each, as full payment of their entire share of the amount found due by the commission, the balance to be paid the citizen class in full discharge of their share of said amount. This would reduce the proposed appropriation from $25,000 to $15,686.80.

It is understood that the latter Indians will be satisfied with the proposed disposition of the money, but regarding this I have no other information than that conveyed by Mr. Armstrong.

It is probable that such disposition would be for the best interests of the Indians referred to in the item submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK C. ARMSTRONG.
Acting Commissioner.

The Honorable The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the letter of the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs be also printed as a miscellaneous document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. As I am obliged to leave the Chamber, I wish to return to an amendment which was made on page 49, in lieu of the matter contained within line 15 to line 25, inclusive. The last clause of the amendment which was adopted reads:

But this provision shall not apply to any lands now held by either of the five civilized tribes.

I wish to add at the end of the amendment "nor to any of the lands within the Quawpaw Indian Agency."

That agency is in the Indian Territory, and the same reason exists for it.

Mr. CALL. We accept the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Is it the wish of the Senate that the vote shall be taken on concurring in the amendments in gross?

Mr. JARVIS. I ask that the amendment made in line 24, page 59, reducing the appropriation for the Cherokee training school at Cherokee, N. C., from $1,400 to $1,200, may be reserved. I wish to speak about three minutes on that amendment, and ask the nonconcurrence of the Senate in it.

Mr. CALL. I ask that all the rest of the amendments be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is a separate vote desired on any other amendment? The amendment indicated by the Senator from North Carolina will be reserved for a separate vote. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole with that exception.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment reserved at the request of the Senator from North Carolina. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 24, before the word "hundred," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "four" and inserted "two;" so as to read:

For support and education of eighty pupils at the Cherokee training school at Cherokee, N. C., at $167 per annum each, $13,360; for pay of superintendent, $1,200.

Mr. JARVIS. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to a fact which I presume has been overlooked. I would have done so before the amendment was made as in Committee of the Whole, but I happened not to be in my seat at the time.

Prior to 1892 there was at the Indian training school at Cherokee an agency. The agent received $800. The superintendent of the school received $1,200, making in all $2,000. The act of 1892 abolished the agency and imposed the duty of the agent upon the superintendent of the school, increasing his compensation from $1,200 to $1,400. It gave the superintendent of the school $200 for the discharge of his duties as agent, and required him to give a bond. The provision will be found in the Statutes at Large, page 122, of the acts of 1892. I will read it.

The superintendent of the Indian training school at Cherokee, N. C., shall, in addition to his duties as superintendent, perform the duties heretofore required of the agent at said Cherokee Agency, and receive in addition to his salary as superintendent, $200 per annum, which sum is hereby appropriated for the purpose, and shall give bond as other Indian agents, and that the office of agent be, and the same is hereby, abolished at that place.

The same act fixed his salary as superintendent at $1,200, in the very language which is now copied in this proposed act. The attention of the House of Representatives was called to the dual duty he performs, and they put in his salary at $1,400. The committee of the Senate struck out $1,400 and made it $1,200, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole agreed to the amendment. To reduce this salary, as the officer is under bond, it seems to me would be doing him a manifest injustice for the sake of saving $200 a year. As I said, I presume the fact that the act of 1892 imposes these other duties upon him escaped the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state to the Senator frankly that he is exactly correct in some particulars. I will give a statement of the case showing the exact condition of the matter.

In the appropriation laws for the fiscal years 1891, 1892, and 1893 we find for the Eastern Cherokee Agency $800. In the law for the fiscal year 1893, we find the following:

The superintendent of the Indian training school at Cherokee, N. C., shall, in addition to his duties as superintendent, perform the duties heretofore required of the agent at said Cherokee Agency, and receive in addition to his salary as superintendent $200 per annum.

The other House, in this bill, on page 2, retained that clause. It reads:

Additional compensation to superintendent of said school for performing the duties heretofore required of the agent at the Cherokee Agency, $200.

Then evidently by an oversight they put his salary at $1,400, which was intended to be the aggregate amount. The committee of the Senate cut it down to $1,200, just what it has been all the time, leaving $200 to be paid to the superintendent acting as agent, as it was in the former law.

Mr. JARVIS. Then I learn from the chairman of the committee that the appropriation for the duties of the superintendent as agent has been made.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be found at the top of page 2 of the pending bill.

At the Cherokee School, North Carolina: Additional compensation to superintendent of said school for performing the duties heretofore required of the agent at the Cherokee Agency, $200.

There was evidently a mistake made in the other House. I thought the Senator was right until I discovered the reason why we reduced the appropriation from $1,400 to $1,200. That is the reason why we struck it out. We wanted to leave it just as it was.

Mr. JARVIS. The explanation of the Senator from Missouri is entirely satisfactory. I withdraw the objection to concurring in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the reserved amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 5894) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; and

A bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

STATUS OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MANDERSON. Personally I would feel very greatly obliged to the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I know the Senate generally would be very glad for information from him concerning the probabilities as to the remaining appropriation bills. I understand that all the appropriation bills are now disposed of, so far as original action in the Senate is concerned, except the sundry civil appropriation bill and the deficiency appropriation bill. Can we have any intimation as to whether the bills I have named will be out of the committee before next week, and if not, about what time next week?

Mr. COCKRELL. The subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and myself, have been at work on the sundry civil appropriation bill, preparing it for the full committee at every leisure moment we have had for some days past. Unfortunately yesterday and to-day we had no time except a short while before the Senate met at 12 o'clock. The subcommittee on the deficiency appropriation bill, consisting of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and myself, have not looked at that bill. We have not had time to get to it. We hope to get the sundry civil appropriation bill reported to the Senate on Saturday, but it is not a certainty.

We can not tell how much of the time of the Senator from Iowa will be taken up to-morrow in the tariff discussion. That has been the trouble. We could not consider the sundry civil appropriation bill at any time as the other bills were considered, because the Senator from Iowa could not leave the floor of the Senate while the tariff bill was under discussion. We shall have that bill before the Senate, and hope to get it through early in the coming week, but it will be impossible to name the exact day when it will be reported.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am aware of some of the difficulties which have attended the consideration of these bills, especially the sundry civil appropriation bill. It occurred to me that time might perhaps be gained if the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge these two particular bills might be disengaged entirely during to-morrow and Saturday, which could very easily be accomplished, and at the same time we could give that prayerful and careful consideration which the action to-day elsewhere demands at the hands of the Senate by adjourning over until Monday. Of course, I simply make it as a suggestion for the consideration of the majority.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish we could do it as far as the labors of the Committee on Appropriations and our individual convenience are concerned, but it would not be just or proper under the circumstances to do it, as the Senator from Indiana (Mr. VOORHEES], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, has given notice that immediately after the reading of the Journal in the morning he will call up the message from the House of Representatives on the tariff bill. Otherwise I would be perfectly willing to do it.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 20, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 19, 1894.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 19, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. J. H. McCARTY, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. If I am correctly informed, the statement of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER], made yesterday, which like statement is always accepted in the House, shows that there was not a quorum present at the time when action was taken on what I think was the bankruptcy bill. If that be the case, and there are no corrections to be made otherwise, it will show that there was not a quorum present; and it will become the duty of the House to commence where the error occurred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the fact that on yesterday the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] corrected the RECORD and the Journal by having his name recorded as present and voting, he having been present.

Mr. REED. He said he was present. I called the attention of the tellers to this omission yesterday, and was informed that it only showed 179; and therefore I felt it my duty to call attention to the matter.

The SPEAKER. That is correct; and he stated afterwards that he voted.

Mr. REED. He afterwards stated that he voted. That is all right then——

Mr. SPRINGER. And the gentleman from Iowa said he was present.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the Committee on Rules, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That after the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order, when the House conferees on House bill 4864 make a report of disagreement, to move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to said bill in gross, and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. That two hours of debate shall be allowed upon said motion, and then, without delay or other motion, a vote shall be taken thereon. Should such motion prevail, the Speaker shall at once appoint the House conferees, and the matter shall then for the time being pass from the consideration of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before that is done, I ask if the gentleman will allow me to offer an amendment, that the debate be four hours instead of two? Will you allow the House to vote on that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have asked for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. REED. I desire simply to say that I shall vote against this resolution, because it does not seem to me to allow adequate debate in the House upon the subject. Some gentlemen, upon the other side especially, had indulged in the hope that under the new régime this would be a deliberative body. But that hope has gradually grown less and less, until with what is now proposed and what is in the womb of the future, the last hope has disappeared. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am in entire accord with the Committee on Rules in their effort to pass a rule limiting debate on the report of disagreement of the conference committee to some reasonable time, say two or four hours; for I believe that the amendments the Senate has proposed all tend, with a few trifling exceptions, in the wrong direction. But I do complain of the rule coming in from the Committee on Rules, in that it purposely, as I think from hearing it read, cuts off a motion to instruct the conference committee. I do not know whether I interpret it right or not, but I have inquired of members of the committee, and they say that the rule has been purposely framed so that we can not instruct the conferees to bring in a separate report on the subject of sugar.

Now, I believe it is the interest not only of the Democratic party, but of every member of this House, after the great scandal in connection with the sugar schedule, to have a separate and distinct report on sugar in order to allow this House to express itself on that subject separately, without any complication with other schedules. There is but one way to get this report, and that is by instructing your conferees to report separately on the sugar schedule, for if you allow them to report on the bill as a whole they are apt to do so.

The only opportunity you are likely to have is right now. You will find that the conference report will come in with other questions involved, and you will be face to face with the alternative of having to vote for a great many things that you do not want in order to get what you do want. The conference report has to be voted either up or down. You must vote for everything in it or against everything in it. If there is free sugar in the bill—and this House wants free sugar—and there is a duty on coal, those who oppose one will find that the two propositions are put side by side, and they must vote for both or against both.

It is bad enough that in order to secure two votes in the Senate, a sugar schedule which makes concessions to the Louisiana sugar-planters, has been proposed. I believe absolutely in free sugar, and that it is bad politics for the Democratic party to put any duty on sugar; but the criminal part of the schedule is the concession to the sugar trust. Now, we hear on every side the claim that unless concessions are made to the sugar trust it will defeat the bill. If that is true a greater question than that of mere schedules arises. If it is true that there is a power in this country which has grown so great under protection that it can dictate, not only to Congress, but to the people of the United States, that it can dictate to both political parties, that it can make schedules, whether the Democrats or the Republicans are in power, then I say, there is a greater question here than that of mere rates.

Whether the Gorman bill or the McKinley bill is better, is a question which sinks into comparative insignificance. And if it is true that this power exists, it is time that we should appeal to the people of the United States and let them decide whether the sugar trust or the other trusts are to legislate for them. [Applause.] I, for one, welcome the issue, and have no doubt of the result. Their lobbies can only work under cover, and on small bodies of men. I am fighting against the proposition of the Committee on Rules because it prevents this House from instructing its conferees to bring in a separate report on the sugar schedule, although I am in hearty accord with the report of general disagreement.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry to ascertain whether my interpretation of the rule is correct, that the opportunity to instruct is by this rule cut off.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the House should adopt this rule and then insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, the Chair, under the rule, would at once appoint conferees and the matter would pass from the consideration of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. The Chair would not recognize, as a privileged motion, just before the appointment of conferees, a proposition to instruct?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. That is my interpretation of the rule, and for that reason I believe we ought to send it back to the Committee on Rules, and let them report a rule that will give us an opportunity to instruct the conferees on so important a question. I yield back the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I yield back the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio in charge of the rule [Mr. OUTHWAITE] will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I understand that the gentleman from New York rises to a parliamentary inquiry, and it is not necessary that I should yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from New York for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WARNER. My inquiry is this: Whether an insistence upon a disagreement under the circumstances will not practically be an instruction in favor of free sugar? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to occupy any more of his time?

Mr. REED. I do; but if the gentleman from Ohio desires to proceed now, I am content.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; I intend to speak only about five minutes.

Mr. REED. Then I will follow you.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I prefer to close the debate, and I do not care to divide a five-minute speech into two parts.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this House can see, after the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], just exactly what it will do with itself if it passes this rule. Of course there are certain arguments for as well as certain arguments against, and the gentleman from Ohio very well states one of the arguments against, namely, that the House has no opportunity to specially indicate its determination upon a particular point, which point is one of the great elements of dispute. The House, for instance, instead of stating that it is irrevocably opposed to the sugar amendment made by the Senate, mingles that with all the other Senate amendments without any particular stress or any particular emphasis.

This will be the result of the action of the House if it takes the direction of the adoption of this rule. On the other hand, gentlemen on the other side have to consider what would be the effect of opposite action. They have this subject under complete control. They can go to the Senate with a general denial, or they can go to the Senate with a specific denial. The question is which course will strengthen the hands of their committee in the great game of—I hardly know what to call it——

A MEMBER. Bluff. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED (continuing). In the great game of moral courage to be displayed on the one side and on the other. It is, I say, a question for them to determine which will be the most strengthening. If they adopt this rule, for instance—and here I am anticipating a part of the work of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]—if they adopt this rule they will contrive to muzzle the expression of a great deal of Democratic sentiment, and the Senate will not know how many friends they have in the House. They will not know how much support they have arising from the opinions of individual members here.

As this House will present itself to the Senate, it will seem to be solid, and that will be liable to be misleading [laughter]; but I think also that your committee needs all the factitious support that they can possibly get, and that is another reason why you should adopt this rule, because it is in your power and you want to hold up the hands of the brethren—which are not very strong [laughter]—and make them vigorous, because they are contending not with idealists, not with individuals with a theory, but with individuals who have definite purposes, definite aims, definite motives; gentlemen who know precisely on which side their provisions are buttered. [Laughter and applause.] And in order to make your committee strong, you ought to take every means of suppressing what looks like undisciplined riot, such as is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], who has been specially singled out to be stricken down by this rule. So that you see your position is one where you have got to carefully balance these different reasons in the little arrangement into which you are about to enter.

Allow me, however, to say to you that there is one gleam of hope for you in the future. This business is entirely—with the exception of a single Senator, and he not in the most robust of health—the whole business is in the hands of the Southern Democracy. The whole business is where the control of your party is. The whole matter will be disposed of in connection with these interests; and if you can work them properly it is possible you may succeed in establishing a great coal company in Nova Scotia, that you may do some great service toward the iron mines of Cuba; and the ownership of those mines has been carefully attended to beforehand in hopes that this matter may come to some point.

Now, I have no doubt I have rendered unnecessary the remarks which the gentleman from Ohio is intending to make, by this careful charge to the jury who are to pass on this case. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I might upon some other occasion be disposed to thank the gentleman from Maine for the very valuable assistance he has rendered me at this time.

Mr. REED. No thanks, please; don't mention it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, I do not think thanks are needed.

The Constitution of the United States commits to the House of Representatives the duty of preparing revenue bills. It commits to us that duty, because the members of this House are nearer to the people than those of the other legislative branch. The House of Representatives, after sufficient deliberation, after careful consideration, framed a revenue bill—framed it upon great party lines—framed it upon the great principles that sent the great majority of these Representatives here. The present question simply presents to the House of Representatives the opportunity to say whether at this time it will adhere to the position it has taken heretofore upon this great question.

The gentleman from Maine was extremely felicitous in his choice of language when he designated the proposition that we should take up the items of this bill by piecemeal and adopt instructions upon those separate items, as "undisciplined rioting" in the party. The American people are not disposed to countenance anywhere "undisciplined rioting"——

Mr. REED. I shall have to yield time to your colleague if you abuse him in that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And this House is not at this time disposed to countenance it. The passage of the resolution will be an instruction covering the point upon which the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, desires a separate vote. The House of Representatives expressed its legislative determination upon the sugar schedule when it passed the bill, and we have no reason to think that this House is inclined at this time to recede from the position it then took. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Maine says that it would be wise for the House of Representatives to stay the moral courage of its conferees. He does not mean that this should be taken in anywise as a personal expression, because he knows that the conferees of the House on this side of the Chamber have exhibited the noblest example of moral courage that any group of conferees ever exhibited in refusing to agree to amendments and coming back to this House at this time with that disagreement. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Maine could not close his remarks without the customary sneer based on the fact that the large bulk of the Democratic party comes from the South, and that the long service of the members sent here from that region has entitled them to a preference upon this conference committee by virtue of the rules that obtain in this House and the other. But we have those conferees sacrificing the interests—the private interests they might be termed—of their own section, as much as they require any sacrifice from us of the North. This bill, framed, if it may be said to have been framed, by a majority of gentlemen from the South, gives to the poor and shivering wretches of the North, with its long winters, free wool and cheaper garments with which to clothe themselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The great leader in that movement, who at the time he began it was a Representative on this floor and is now a Senator in the other end of the Capitol, was the representative at that time of a great woolgrowing region of the United States, and his State is still one of the great producers of that staple. Yet he said, "If it will give cheaper garments to the people of this country my people will not ask that yours be taxed a dollar for their benefit." I could give other equally noble instances——

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Will my colleague allow a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Why do you object to giving us an opportunity to instruct the committee of conference on sugar?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why should we not commence to parcel out and piecemeal the action of this House on all the various questions involved? This rule virtually insists that the House conferees shall adhere to the position it has already taken on sugar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Why should you not give the House an opportunity to say whether they will give instructions or not?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The House is going to say it when it has the opportunity this afternoon. For the same reason, you might ask, Why not give the House an opportunity to have a separate report on the wool schedule? Why not give them an opportunity to make a separate report on the iron schedule, on the wool schedule, on coal, on cotton goods, on glassware, on chemicals, and every other question of difference existing between the two Houses? We regard it as a single question involving a principle, and propose to treat it in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. But if the House wants separate action on these various matters it ought to have it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My answer to the gentleman is that, up to this time at least, so far as we are able to perceive, there is no difference of sentiment on this side of the House on this great question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Ohio has paid a touching tribute to the stern persistence of the conferees on the part of the House on this bill. They have persisted, so far as my knowledge is concerned and that of the other Republican conferees on the part of the House, just two days, one day lasting one hour and the other lasting just ten minutes. If there has been any other persistence on the part of the conferees of this House than that, I am not aware of it. There have been but the two meetings, one lasting an hour, as I have said, and the other about ten minutes of the full conference.

But we may suppose that they have been resisting in private, and their heroism is dragged before the public for the first time by the gentleman from Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Ohio in his reserved time, or in mine, will tell us just how long this courage is to last. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] What does "courage" mean, or what does it amount to when it backs down as soon as the time comes? [Laughter.] What does courage that lasts only a week amount to, when it is the courage of two weeks that does the business?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There has been no backing down up to this time, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. REED. But how long is it to last? When is the courage to fail? Can the gentleman from Ohio in his reserved time give us that information? Is it to be permanent? The gentleman from Ohio is silent. Into the future he does not desire to penetrate. [Laughter on the Republican side.] His mind is not of a prophetic cast, and he is wise, absolutely wise; and he took the first opportunity, and perhaps the last he will ever have, therefore, to praise the courage of the conferees. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything requiring a response from me in what the gentleman from Maine has said, and I ask a vote.

The question was taken, and the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the majority of the conferees on the part of the House on the tariff bill to report to the House that they have not been able to agree with the Senate conferees upon the bill as to the proposed Senate amendments.

I move, therefore, that the House further insist——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from West Virginia send to the desk the statement of the conference committee, and the papers accompanying the bill?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I send to the desk the papers connected with the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The conference committee on the bill H. R. 4864, after final, full, and free conference, failed to agree. The Senate conferees insist on their amendments to said bill, and the House conferees insist on their disagreement to the Senate amendments.

W. L. WILSON,
BENTON McMILLIN,
H. G. TURNER,
A. B. MONTGOMERY,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I submit the motion, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and ask for a further conference, and upon that motion I shall submit a few explanatory remarks to the House.

It is true, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has just said, that there have been but two meetings of the full conference committee of the Senate and House.

A tariff bill, of recent years at least, and perhaps almost always in the history of this country, has been a political measure—a measure proposed by one party and resisted by the other. The present tariff legislation does not differ from that historic character. It was fully recognized and cordially expressed by the Republican conferees of the Senate that it was the duty of the dominant party in the two Houses, through their special conferees, first, to try if they could reconcile their own differences before they brought to the attention of the full conference committee their proposed action.

I say this was fully and cordially and handsomely recognized by the Republican conferees on the part of the Senate. While, therefore, there have been but these two meetings of the full conference committee, there have been, since the first appointment of the conference committees, daily, protracted, earnest, and laborious consultations on the part of the House conferees representing the majority party in this House, and the Senate conferees representing the majority party in that House, as to the six hundred and thirty-four amendments, in the hope that we might reach some agreement that could be reported to the full conference committee when it should be called together. It is because no such agreement has been attained, it is because no such agreement seems at present in sight, that we have felt it our duty to bring the whole matter back to the House, and receive afresh from this House its instruction as to our duty in the further proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to be perfectly frank and as complete as possible in any statement I may make to the House to-day, and yet I recognize that there are some limitations to completeness of statement which probably it would be best for me to observe at this stage in the controversy between the two Houses. But I think I may say with truth and frankness and courtesy that if the conferees of the Senate on the part of the majority party had met us of the same party in the House as free and untrammeled as we ourselves were, with nothing to control our action but our sense of duty to the people and to our party and to the House; if they could have come to us, I say, as free and untrammeled as we came to them, a tariff bill would have been agreed upon in one day's session that would have been satisfactory to the Democratic party and that would have given hope and courage and enthusiasm to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, sir, we were not long in finding out, greatly to our disappointment, that whatever might be the personal opinions, the personal judgment, the strong personal wishes of the Democratic conferees of the Senate, they came to us somewhat fettered and somewhat limited as to any action that they might agree to upon this bill, either by the supposed moral obligations of party caucus, or the apprehension that there were forces in the Senate, however small, yet powerful enough to resist successfully the passage of any bill which did not make concessions to great corporate and trust interests, that we, representing the House, did not feel free on our part to agree to. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there would be any great difficulty in coming to a compromise or an agreement upon the vast majority of the six hundred and thirty-four amendments proposed to this bill by the Senate; but there are important amendments proposed by the Senate which give to this bill in the main a different character from what it had when it went from the House, and on which amendments we seem, up to this time, to be irreconcilably divided. It is because of these amendments and because of the statements made to us in all kindness and courtesy, and I might almost say in sadness, that such was the condition of affairs at the other end of this Capitol that unless this House was willing to accept the Senate bill practically and substantially as it passed the Senate there was to be no tariff legislation at this session of Congress; that we could not agree.

We did not feel, Mr. Speaker, representing the House of Representatives, that we could without a sacrifice of its dignity and of its equality as a legislative chamber, respond to any such proposition as that. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Least of all did we feel that in the great question of taxation, resting by the very theory of free institutions and by the language of the Constitution as a peculiar and original trust on the representatives of the people, we could for one moment entertain and agree to such a proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But aside from that question, Mr. Speaker, the differences between the bill as it passed the House and the bill as it comes back to us from the Senate are so marked, are in the main so objectionable to tariff reformers in the country generally, that we could not, without the guidance and the instruction of this House, agree to accept those differences and thus adopt a different and modified scheme of tariff reform.

Whatever imperfections may have attached to the House bill—and those who framed that bill were perhaps more aware of its imperfections than anybody else could be—it did seem to be accepted by the people of this country as a fair and substantial performance of the pledges by which the Democratic party came into power at the beginning of this Administration. It was framed upon Democratic lines in the main. It sought in levying taxes to consider chiefly and primarily the wants of the public Treasury, and not the profits and schemes of great private interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The bill which comes back to us from the Senate has not met the approval of the great tariff-reform sentiment of this country. It has not been accepted by those who, through defeat and victory, have followed this standard with so much enthusiasm for ten years past, as the fruition of their efforts, as the performance of their pledge, and as the full and substantial realization of their great victory.

It remains for me simply to add, Mr. Speaker, that the chief points of controversy between the representatives of the dominant party in the two Houses, and thus between the conference committees of the two Houses, was, first, the sugar schedule, to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] has addressed himself; next the duty upon iron ore and upon coal and the duty upon silver-lead ores and some of the duties in the woolen schedule, and especially to some of the duties of the iron and steel schedule, prominently those upon pig iron, upon steel rails, and upon cutlery and structural iron.

But the great difficulty in the pathway of an agreement has been a proper adjustment of the sugar schedule. This House voted for free sugar, raw and refined. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] It voted down the proposal of the Committee on Ways and Means for a gradual repeal of the bounty and a reduction by more than one-half of the duty upon refined sugar. The Senate has reintroduced into the proposed tariff bill a sugar schedule, which, whether truly or not, has been accepted by the country, by the press of the country, by the people of the country, as unduly favorable to the great sugar trust. It proposes a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem on all grades of sugar, a differential of one-eighth of a cent upon refined sugar, in addition to a differential of one-tenth of a cent on sugar imported from countries that pay an export bounty upon their sugar.

There is reasonable ground for difference of opinion among Democrats as to whether any duty upon sugar should be placed in our tariff bill or not. It has always been contended by most of those who have been leaders in the great tariff-reform movement in this country that of all the articles yielding large revenue sugar was the one article upon which an ideal Democratic revenue tariff could be placed.

There would be substantial agreement, I think, with that position to-day in the Democratic party except for the fact that the framers of the McKinley bill, in their zeal to cut off taxation the larger part of which went into the public Treasury, in order that they might increase taxes the larger part of which went into the pockets of their beneficiaries [loud applause on the Democratic side], placed raw sugar upon the free list, gave a half cent protection or six-tenths of a cent in the case of sugar imported from bounty-paying countries on the refined sugar, and provided a bounty to the producers of sugar in this country. By this action the people have had a taste of untaxed sugar, and it is difficult for us to get back [laughter on the Republican side] to the position originally occupied by the Democratic party.

It is our hope that we shall give them, if we succeed in passing any sort of a wise and proper tariff-reform bill, a taste of so many other untaxed articles [loud applause on the Democratic side] that protection can never raise its head again in this country. [Renewed loud applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not possible, Mr. Speaker, for anyone to state accurately, on the proposed sugar schedule of the Senate, what would be the amount of duty upon refined sugar which would inure as a protection to the great refining company of this country. Although I had not fully reached that conclusion when the House bill was prepared, I have no doubt myself to-day that the business of sugar refining can be carried on as cheaply in the United States as in any country in the world [loud applause on the Democratic side], and I have not the slightest doubt, although sincere tariff reformers differ with me on that point, that any differential duty whatever upon refined sugar is simply so much bounty provided for the great monopoly of refining sugar in this country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

If, therefore, the House conferees were prepared to recede from the House position for free sugar and attempt to agree upon some revenue taxation for sugar, they could not, without the mandate of this House, accept such a provision as that which is offered in the Senate bill. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] If it be true, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], of which I have myself seen some affirmations in the press; if it be true that the great American sugar trust has grown so strong and so powerful that it can say that no tariff bill can pass the American Congress in which its privileges are not adequately guarded; if, I say, that be true, I hope this House will never consent to adjournment. [Great cheering on the Democratic side.] I hope, whatever the fate of the general tariff bill is, that this House will not consent to an adjournment until it has passed a single bill putting refined sugar on the free list. [Renewed cheers on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House with any argument upon the other point of dispute between the two Houses. I have indicated the items. I have, perhaps almost beyond the limits of proper repetition, gone over from time to time the arguments in favor of a release of the great materials of industry from taxation under any bill that may be passed by Congress. I will simply therefore, in closing, call attention to the position in which we find ourselves to-day with reference to tariff taxation. This great question of tariff reform has been the dividing, the burning, question of American politics for the last three Presidential campaigns.

The American people have three times voted for the present occupant of the White House on the great issue of tariff reform. When in 1888 we were defeated by a narrow margin before the people of this country there was not a Democrat in all this land who did not feel on the morning after the election as enthusiastic and as determined to press forward in that fight as he did when the hope of victory was with him the day before. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It was because of that determination, it was because of that growing enthusiasm, it was because we felt the spirit and the thrill of the spirit of American liberty inciting us, it was because we felt the incitement of a great moral purpose which multiples men by ten, that we took up this cause in 1888, fought for it in 1890, and prevailed in 1892. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The American people have given us the responsibility. It remains to be seen whether we also have the power to fulfill their mandate. The bill which passed the House was not only approved, prepared, and voted for by those who are the immediately chosen servants of the taxpayers of this country, but it has been officially approved and indorsed by the President who was chosen by them to carry out this great reform of the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Thus every part of the machinery of the United States Government to-day deriving its authority from the direct vote of the American people—for the electoral college now amounts to nothing, and the President is virtually chosen by a direct vote—every part of the lawmaking machinery deriving its authority from the direct vote and mandate of the people has indorsed the scheme of tariff reform proposed here and carried through this House.

No man in this country, Mr. Speaker, has been more interested in the progress and successful termination of this great movement than the man whom the people selected to lead them in this great campaign. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has never spoken an uncertain word as to his position on this question. In his official message of last December he emphatically and unqualifiedly indorsed the action of the House and the bill which had then been prepared for its consideration.

While the proprieties of his position have compelled him, as a matter of courtesy to the two branches of Congress, to remain in a large measure quiet during the pendency of these bills, yet he has felt it to be his duty to express in every suitable manner exactly what his position is to-day, and, just as we were entering on the great work of conferring between the two Houses I had the honor to receive from him a long personal letter, which, with his consent obtained this morning, I will now send to the Clerk's desk to be given to the people of this country. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

[Personal.]

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 2, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: The certainty that a conference will be ordered between the two Houses of Congress for the purpose of adjusting differences on the subject of tariff legislation makes it also certain that you will be again called on to do hard service in the cause of tariff reform.

My public life has been so closely related to the subject, I have so longed for its accomplishment, and I have so often promised its realization to my fellow-countrymen as a result of their trust and confidence in the Democratic party, that I hope no excuse is necessary for my earnest appeal to you that in this crisis you strenuously insist upon party honesty and good faith and a sturdy adherence to Democratic principles.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe these are absolutely necessary conditions to the continuation of Democratic existence.

I can not rid myself of the feeling that this conference will present the best if not the only hope of true Democracy. Indications point to its action as the reliance of those who desire the genuine fruition of Democratic effort, the fulfillment of Democratic pledges, and the redemption of Democratic promises to the people. To reconcile differences in the details comprised within the fixed and well-defined lines of principle will not be the sole task of the conference; but as it seems to me its members will also have in charge the question whether Democratic principles themselves are to be saved or abandoned.

There is no excuse for mistaking or misapprehending the feeling and temper of the rank and file of the Democracy. They are downcast under the assertion that their party fails in ability to manage the Government, and they are apprehensive that efforts to bring about tariff reform may fail; but they are much more downcast and apprehensive in their fear that Democratic principles may be surrendered.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

In these circumstances they can not do otherwise than to look with confidence to you and those who with you have patriotically and sincerely championed the cause of tariff reform within Democratic lines and guided by Democratic principles. This confidence is vastly augmented by the action under your leadership of the House of Representatives upon the bill now pending.

Every true Democrat and every sincere tariff reformer knows that this bill in its present form and as it will be submitted to the conference, falls far short of the consummation for which we have long labored, for which we have suffered defeat without discouragement; which in its anticipation gave us a rallying cry in our day of triumph, and which in its promise of accomplishment is so interwoven with Democratic pledges and Democratic success, that our abandonment of the cause or the principles upon which it rests means party perfidy and party dishonor.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

One topic will be submitted to the conference which embodies Democratic principle so directly that it can not be compromised. We have in our platforms and in every way possible declared in favor of the free importation of raw materials. We have again and again promised that this should be accorded to our people and our manufacturers as soon as the Democratic party was invested with the power to determine the tariff policy of the country.

The party now has that power. We are as certain to-day as we have ever been of the great benefit that would accrue to the country from the inauguration of this policy, and nothing has occurred to release us from our obligation to secure this advantage to our people. It must be admitted that no tariff measure can accord with Democratic principles and promises or bear a genuine Democratic badge that does not provide for free raw materials. In these circumstances it may well excite our wonder that Democrats are willing to depart from this the most Democratic of all tariff principles, and that the inconsistent absurdity of such a proposed departure should be emphasized by the suggestion that the wool of the farmer be put on the free list and the protection of tariff taxation be placed around the iron ore and coal of corporations and capitalists.

[Applause.]

How can we face the people after indulging in such outrageous discriminations and violations of principle?

It is quite apparent that this question of free raw materials does not admit of adjustment on any middle ground, since their subjection to any rate of tariff taxation, great or small, is alike violative of Democratic principle and Democratic good faith.

I hope you will not consider it intrusive if I say something in relation to another subject which can hardly fail to be troublesome to the conference. I refer to the adjustment of tariff taxation on sugar.

[Laughter and applause.]

Under our party platform and in accordance with our declared party purposes sugar is a legitimate and logical article of revenue taxation. Unfortunately, however, incidents have accompanied certain stages of the legislation which will be submitted to the conference that have aroused in connection with this subject a natural Democratic animosity to the methods and manipulations of trusts and combinations.

I confess to sharing in this feeling; and yet it seems to me we ought, if possible, to sufficiently free ourselves from prejudice to enable us coolly to weigh the considerations which, in formulating tariff legislation, ought to guide our treatment of sugar as a taxable article. While no tenderness should be entertained for trusts, and while I am decidedly opposed to granting them, under the guise of tariff taxation, any opportunity to further their peculiar methods, I suggest that we ought not to be driven away from the Democratic principle and policy which lead to the taxation of sugar by the fear, quite likely exaggerated, that in carrying out this principle and policy we may indirectly and inordinately encourage a combination of sugar refining interests. I know that in present conditions this is a delicate subject—and I appreciate the depth and strength of the feeling which its treatment has aroused.

[Laughter on the Republican side]—

I do not believe we should do evil that good may come, but it seems to me that we should not forget that our aim is the completion of a tariff bill, and that in taxing sugar for proper purposes and within reasonable bounds, whatever else may be said of our action, we are in no danger of running counter to Democratic principle. With all there is at stake there must be in the treatment of this article some ground upon which we are all willing to stand, where toleration and conciliation may be allowed to solve the problem without demanding the entire surrender of fixed and conscientious convictions.

I ought not to prolong this letter. If what I have written is unwelcome, I beg you to believe in my good intentions.

In the conclusions of the conference touching the numerous items which will be considered the people are not afraid that their interests will be neglected. They know that the general result, so far as these are concerned, will be to place home necessaries and comforts easier within their reach, and to insure better and surer compensation to those who toil.

We all know that a tariff covering all the varied interests and conditions of a country as vast as ours must of necessity be largely the result of honorable adjustment and compromise. I expect very few of us can say when our measure is perfected that all the features are entirely as we would prefer. You know how much I deprecated the incorporation in the proposed bill of the income-tax feature. In matters of this kind, however, which do not violate a fixed and recognized Democratic doctrine, we are willing to defer to the judgment of a majority of our Democratic brethren. I think there is a general agreement that this is party duty.

This is more palpably apparent when we realize that the business of our country timidly stands and watches for the result of our efforts to perfect tariff legislation, that a quick and certain return of prosperity waits upon a wise adjustment, and that a confiding people still trust in our hands their prosperity and well-being.

The Democracy of the land plead most earnestly for the speedy completion of the tariff legislation which their representatives have undertaken, but they demand not less earnestly that no stress of necessity shall tempt those they trust to the abandonment of Democratic principle.

Yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Hon. WILLIAM L. WILSON.

[Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has twenty-three minutes, which he reserves. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is recognized.

Mr. REED (who on rising to speak was greeted with loud applause on the Republican side). I take it for granted, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman to whom the letter was addressed to which we have just listened has observed all the proprieties which gentlemen ordinarily observe with regard to their correspondence, and that a letter which is marked "personal" having been addressed to him, he has not been guilty in any way of making it public in this fashion without the express consent of the author. Hence we have here to-day the somewhat remarkable spectacle of a message sent by the President of the United States——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit me to correct an error of fact?

Mr. REED. Surely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The gentleman from West Virginia stated that he made the letter public with the consent of the President given to him this morning.

Mr. REED. I took that for granted, and was proceeding upon that assumption.

We now understand, then, that the President has been pleased to address a communication to the House of Representatives through his faithful Committee of Ways and Means. This seems to be a just reciprocal action on his part; for the House will recollect that the Committee of Ways and Means communicated to this House its intention of having an income tax through the kindness of the President of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Whether this relationship thus intimate between a committee of this House and the President of the United States was contemplated by the Constitution of the United States or not is hardly worth the trouble of inquiry in the shape in which the matter now stands before the House. Least of all would anybody on this side find fault with the severe language which the President—the Democratic President—has seen fit to use about a Democratic Senate. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Undoubtedly his personal intercourse with the members of that body and his official relations with them have enabled him to put vigorously all the strength of reproof which that letter contains. But the transaction as it stands to-day is between them and him. Far be it from us to interfere. If he has made a righteous charge, their characters are blackened; and if he has made a false charge, it is for them to see that justice is done to the truth of history. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have no concern with it except as spectators. The public aspect of this affair, however, shows that the newspaper rumors have had all the truth that newspaper rumors ever have in regard to the relations between this committee of the House and the President of the United States; and it is shown very clearly that the committee has his directions to consent to a sufficient tax upon sugar in consideration of the fact that coal and iron ore shall be brought here free. In other words, in the great contest between the trust which manufactures the sugar of this country and which is a home corporation, and the great corporation which is to exploit the mines of Nova Scotia and enrich by $10,000,000 the set of men who are engaged in that enterprise, the President and a committee of this House take the side of the Boston corporation. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Which is best, let them decide. Which is most satisfactory to the people, let the country decide. It is a matter that does not concern us.

The gentleman from West Virginia was kind enough to compliment the Republican conferees in the Senate, and by inference to refrain from complimenting us, in stating the declaration that was made, he said, by the Republican conferees that the Democrats had better disagree. It is curious how two men, witnessing the same scene, put a different interpretation upon it.

To my mind the scene which occurred was only part and parcel of the statement which was made, that inasmuch as these gentlemen had called us in, not for the purpose of consultation, although that was their avowal, but for the purpose of removing the reproach which had been cast upon them by the greatest Democratic newspaper, which is the representative of the Democratic ideas of the day—the New York World—they should act as they had determined, of course our Republican conferees saw that we went there as a mere matter of form, and said: "If you have made up your minds to disagree, why not like men do so, and let us not waste our time upon immaterial matters." But under the influence of that editorial they wasted another day before they brought before the people of this country their resistless determination to make the Senate yield to their wishes.

But the gentleman from West Virginia, in the course of his remarks, has been pleased to observe that in their private meetings with the members of the conference board on their side—the three other Southern gentlemen and the Northern gentleman in somewhat ill health—they treated them in a tone almost of sadness in regard to their willingness to agree, but were held back by their "bad partners," the Jorkinses of the Senate. But, unfortunately, in this confessional mood, the gentleman from West Virginia did not permit himself to give particulars. He stated that the members of the Senate were "fettered," but he did not state to what the "fetters" attached them.

I hope when the conference committee next meet—the real conference committee, and not the Democratic politicians, seven Southern and one Northern—we shall have a diagram and printed aid to our memory, so that we may know exactly to what amendment each Senator is "fettered" and what the size of the "fetter" is. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from West Virginia has pledged this House—amid the uproarious applause of the other side—has pledged this House of Representatives to stand out against the Senate, to break the fetters which bind these gentlemen to their present positions. I have no doubt that what the gentleman says is probably true, that the Southern gentlemen in the Senate met their Southern brethren with sadness. I have no doubt that sorrow filled their hearts, because there are many amendments of the Senate which it is fair to say are improvements on the House bill and in the direction of protection. The Senate bill is not what this country ought to have. It is not such a bill as would do justice to its industries; but the House bill was so bad, that almost any change in an upward direction was for the better.

But what was the trouble with these Southern gentlemen? These Southern gentlemen met with the interests and the industries of their Northern Democratic conferees—their fellow-Senators—and what is a tariff bill but one which relates to the interests and the industries of the country? When a distinguished Senator held out for collars and cuffs and the Democratic party in the Senate marched up to the full measure of protection on them, that Senator was acting not merely for his own interests, but for the interests of his constituency. And if it is, as stated, that he himself was in any way interested in business in that town—not of that kind—and that that business would lose its vigor and life on account of the destruction of the collar-and-cuff industry, he was representing his people, because this country and its prosperity are made up of its industries and its interests. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Ohio, in that moment of truth which sometimes comes from exhaustion of the intellect [laughter and applause on the Republican side]—I meant weariness, for I do not mean to be disrespectful—said that the Southern gentlemen who are running this matter for the House sacrificed their own interests, and notably in one instance the interests of their constituents, and the Democrats on the other side applauded the sentiment, showing that in spite of all they say they do recognize the fact that the taking off of the tariff is the sacrifice of interests and of industries.

No, Mr. Speaker; if they did sacrifice their own States, it was because they wanted to sacrifice us still worse. And they are engaged to-day in the process, so baleful to this nation, of endeavoring to bring the prosperity of the rest of the country down to their level instead of doing what we are trying to do, to bring their prosperity up to the great level of ours. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

We believe, not in the success of the North, but in the success of the whole country [applause on the Republican side], and we stand as ready to give the South the benefit of the laws of the land, which make higher wages for men and an increase of wealth for all, as freely and as readily as we give it to our own people. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia——

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Seventy million bread-earners—free American citizens, victims of vicious legislation—are to-day bowed on their knees to the American Congress, asking emancipation from the worst tax laws which ever disgraced the statute books of any country.

The beneficent legislation which we seek to enact is opposed by the few, who for thirty years have been the recipients of bounties levied upon the sweat and toil of American freemen.

I desire to express myself in favor of a most thorough and complete reform in the tariff laws of our country.

The gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, has spoken of the sacrifices imposed upon Southern people by this bill.

Let me say to him that they have never asked for bounties at the expense of the people of other sections, and I stand here to-day firm in the conviction that they are not, that they never were, and that they never will be actuated by selfish or personal considerations. They have shown willingness to submit to a full share of sacrifice in this grand and commendable movement to lift burdens from the great mass of the people of our land—an effort to give them cheap clothing, cheap food, and all other necessaries for the maintenance of themselves and families.

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Cheap labor?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama (continues). Any sacrifice necessary to add to the happiness of the people and the glory and prosperity of our country.

But we must never adjourn this body until a tariff-reform bill has been enacted into law. If not full and complete reform, then by all means as full and complete as can be attained under the conditions with which we find ourselves confronted. We must, as far as lies in our power, redeem our pledges to the people, and I feel I can, in the name of every Representative from the State of Alabama, say that we all pledge our voices and our votes to carry out the promises made to the people in the platform upon which we won victory in the election of 1892. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia to insist upon the disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. REED. I believe I have some time left, Mr. Speaker; I do not know that any gentleman desires to occupy it.

Mr. GROW. I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. REED. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr GROW].

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, in the entire history of the legislation of Congress up to this time all parties have been in favor of collecting the revenue necessary for the support of the Government in time of peace from duties on foreign imports. This Congress proposes a departure from this uniform and unbroken practice of more than a century. For the first time it is now proposed to raise only a part of the revenue necessary for the Government in time of peace from duties, and to seek for other sources of taxation from which to raise the deficiency. It is unnecessary to go outside of the imports in order to raise all the necessary revenue, for we have the proof under the operation of the McKinley tariff law itself that revenue enough can be raised for the Government in all of its peace expenditures without resorting to an income tax or any of the other taxes known and recognized as war taxes. For three years sugar and molasses have been on the free list, and the duties were so adjusted on foreign imports as to raise sufficient revenue for the Government.

Yet the present majority in control of Congress propose to depart from the old uniform practice, approved by all parties for more than a hundred years, and to so adjust duties in a tariff as to raise only a part of the necessary revenue from duties on the products of foreign labor and to resort to what is known as war taxes for the residue.

I shall not discuss any of the particular clauses of the bill or the differences between the two Houses.

I only wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that without disturbing reciprocity treaties, some fifteen or sixteen of which have been made with different nations to increase the markets for our agricultural and mechanical products, without violating good faith by the Government in its legislative promise of bounty to the sugar producers of this country, sufficient revenue could be raised by an adjustment of duties on foreign imports, as it has been done for the last three years, and has been done since the beginning of the Government except in time of war, without resorting to these outside sources of taxation in time of peace. With $850,000,000 in valuation at the point of shipment of foreign imports, this party has not shown thus far the ability to so adjust duties upon this vast importation as to raise the necessary revenue for the support of the Government.

Internal taxation pays the war debt and the pensions. When they are disposed of there will be no reason for resorting to anything but the duties on foreign imports to raise the necessary revenue for the Government. Why arrange a scale of tariff duties which will not raise within $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 of as much revenue on the same amount of importations as is raised under the McKinley tariff, and then propose to put from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 on sugar to make up the deficiency, and in addition thereto an income tax, selecting forty or fifty thousand people out of the seventy millions in this country from whom you propose to collect this special tax?

There is no necessity for the adoption of this class legislation. Under the system that has had the approval of all parties for more than a century of taxing the consumption of the country, greater prosperity has come to all its industries than in any other previous period of its history. Its industries have grown from a valuation of $16,000,000,000 in 1860 to over $65,000,000,000 in 1890. Railroads have increased from 30,000 miles in 1860 to 176,000 miles in 1893. With this vast unprecedented expansion in national wealth, with all of its industries prosperous and successful, why disturb that state of things by resorting to a new method and new sources of taxation, never approved before by any political party except in time of war.

Two years ago, when labor was finding ready employment everywhere at wages greater than ever before, except during war, with every manufactured article selling for less than at any time heretofore, with money abundant in circulation, whether gold, silver, or paper, interchangeable one into the other, at such a time of prosperity, with that inherent disposition of human nature never to let well enough alone, the majority of voters sowed the wind, and the business of the country since has been waiting to see what the harvest shall be. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a correction to the House. I inadvertently stated in my remarks an inference which I drew from hearing the President's letter read, which seems to me upon examination to be erroneous. The paper not being printed as usual as an executive document, I had no opportunity to examine it and consequently was liable to fall into that error.

It seems to me from a careful reading of the letter, so far as one can make a careful reading amid the confusion on the floor of this House, that the President has not taken the position which I supposed he had, of opposition to the sugar trust which his faithful friends had taken here, but he seems rather disposed to support both the trust and the Nova Scotia syndicate. I give him credit for that situation. I do not know whether we ought to parcel out that Executive communication to the Committee on Ways and Means and other committees to which it is appropriate or not. The governing authorities of the House will probably attend to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALL, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. MCMILLAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3978) for the relief of John M. Rice.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1591) to provide for the reservation, sale, and settlement of certain lands in several of the States and Territories; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6424) to authorize Rear-Admiral John G. Walker and Surg. Gen. J. Rufus Tryon, of the United States Navy, to accept the decorations of the "Busto del Libertador" of the third class from the President of Venezuela;

A bill (H. R. 5525) authorizing John E. Johnson and others to accept medals of honor and diplomas from the Government of Spain;

A bill (H. R. 4734) to authorize the Secretary of State to accept for the United States of America a painting by G. F. Watts, Royal Academician, entitled "Love and Life;"

A bill (H. R. 3458) extending the time for final proof and payment on lands claimed under the public land laws of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 7498) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River from a point within the limits of the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, known as Eagle Point, to the opposite bank of said river, in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. 69) prescribing limitations of time for completion of title to certain lands disposed of under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory and supplemental thereto, and commonly known as the "donation act," and for the protection of purchasers and occupants on said land;

A bill (H. R. 4209) for the relief of the securities of John S. Bradford;

A bill (H. R. 7475) authorizing Commander C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of Spain;

A bill (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana;

A bill (S. 322) to place Dunbar R. Ransom on the retired list of the Army;

A bill (S. 1513) for the relief of Maj. Gen. George S. Greene;

A bill (S. 2208) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River at the foot of Main street, in the borough of Bellevernon, in the State of Pennsylvania;

A bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.;

A bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial district; and

A bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 126) authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the meetings of the International Geodetic Association;

MUSCLE SHOALS CANAL.

The SPEAKER. The vote will now be taken on the bill which was before the House on yesterday afternoon. The Clerk will report the title of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5930) to appoint a commission to report and determine upon certain damages done to citizens of Lauderdale County, Ala., by the building of the Muscle Shoals Canal.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered on the final passage of this bill, which brings it over for consideration to-day. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the vote was taken, and no quorum appeared; so that the question now is upon the final passage of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Perhaps not more than 25 per cent of the members of this House were present when that bill was considered. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read again. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three officers of the Army to examine and report to the Secretary of War upon the amount of damages claimed and sustained by the following citizens of Lauderdale County, Ala., from the building of the Muscle Shoals Canal, to wit: Emmet O'Neal, William Douglass, Dr. J. A. Douglass, William and Lee Butler, Felix Jackson, Ben Davis, and J. M. Cunningham.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered on this bill may be reconsidered, so that the vote may be taken without the yeas and nays. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 81.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Tellers.

Pending the count on the demand for tellers,

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. That point the gentleman did not make. Twenty-four gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for tellers; not a sufficient number.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no other side on this question. It requires one-fifth of a quorum to order tellers. Twenty-four only have arisen, and it requires 36; so that tellers are not ordered; the noes have it, and the bill is lost.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18, 27, 28, 29, 36, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 35, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "That all officers who have been appointed to any corps of the Navy after service in a different branch of the Navy, shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reëntry into the Navy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, and down to and including the word "treatment," in line 5 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after the word "Navy," insert the words "in his discretion;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For paying Justin McCarthy, contractor for building the dry dock at Port Royal, S. C., in full for loss and damage caused by the cyclone of August 27 and 28, 1893, as ascertained by the Navy Department, $18,521.42."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Dry dock at Algiers, La.: For the purpose of completing the purchase of additional lands necessary for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, La., cost of advertising, plans and specifications for said dry dock, and expenses of judicial proceedings instituted for the condemnation of such additional lands, $23,025.03."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "namely," insert the following: "For sealing all the walls to remove existing disease germs and for antiseptically finishing and painting them, removing rotten wooden floors and replacing them by tile with slate sidings impervious to moisture, scraping and painting all doors and woodwork, refitting windows so as to be utilized in ventilation, remodeling cased wooden stairways and renewing them with iron or other suitable material, $15,000; for construction of one ward of modern design of sufficient size and cubic air space to accommodate at least fifty sick and wounded men, to be one story high with suitable elevation and to be constructed of the same material used for present hospital, $25,000;" and in line 14 of said amendment strike out "forty-four" and insert "sixty-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8, page 24 of the bill, after the word "laboratory," insert the words "and department of instruction;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of said amendment strike out the word "temporarily;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following as a separate paragraph:

"That every Member or Delegate of Congress whose district or Territory is now unrepresented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who is not an actual resident of the district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of September, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy, and the Secretary of the Navy shall nominate such candidate for appointment to the Academy, subject to qualifications now prescribed by law. Such cadets, when appointed, to be in addition to the number of cadets now allowed, and the sum of $5,500, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated for the additional number of cadets herein authorized."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Construction and steam machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore or herein authorized, $5,955,025, and from this amount there shall be paid all speed premiums upon new naval vessels earned previous to January 1, 1894, and which remain unpaid at this date, the amount of such speed premium in each case being according to the official report in the trial of each vessel approved by the Secretary of the Navy.'

And the Senate agree to the same.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
J. A. GEISSENHAINER,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. P. GORMAN,
JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN,
EUGENE HALE
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I now send up the statement of the House conferees.

The statement is as follows:

Statement to accompany H. R. 6748, making appropriations for the naval service.

The undersigned conferees on the part of the House on the naval appropriation bill beg leave to state that the effect of the agreement reported, as the result of the conference as aforesaid, is as follows:

Amendment numbered 1 of the House is agreed to by the Senate conferees, with an amendment limiting the benefits to officers already appointed to any corps of the Navy after service in a different branch of the Navy.

2. House conferees agree to so much of Senate amendment numbered 2, which provides:

"That in order to fill vacancies that may exist in the grade of ensign in the Navy and in the grade of assistant engineer in the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy shall, in case the number of vacancies in either of such grades exceeds the number of naval cadets in the line division or in the engineer division of the class of naval cadets finally graduated in the year 1894, or in any one year thereafter, select a number equal to such excess from the final graduates of said class in the engineer division or in the line division, as the case may require, who shall be reported as proficient and be recommended thereto by the Academic Board, and such final graduates shall be appointed to fill vacancies in the grade of ensign in the Navy or in the grade of assistant engineer in the Navy, respectively, and the naval cadets so appointed to fill vacancies in such grades shall take rank in those respective grades next after the naval cadets appointed from the line division or from the engineer division, as the case may be, to fill vacancies in those grades, but among themselves according to merit as determined by the Academic Board."

3. The following Senate amendments, agreed to by the House conferees, are merely formal and do not involve appropriations or any important change of law, viz, Nos. 3, 6, 9, 12, 13, 14, 17, 30, 31, 32, and 33.

4. House conferees agree to Senate amendment No. 4 by adding a proviso making the purchase of "the Ousdan & Kolb letter engraving machines discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy."

5. The House conferees recede from disagreement to amendment No. 5, which appropriated $150,000 for modern battery for United States steamship Hartford.

6. Senate conferees recede from amendment No. 7, and House conferees agree in lieu therefor to the following:

"For paying Justin McCarthy, contractor, for building the dry dock at Port Royal, S. C., in full for loss and damage caused by the cyclone of August 27 and 28, 1893, as ascertained by the Navy Department, the sum of $18,521.42."

7. House conferees agree to Senate amendment No. 8 with an amendment appropriating an additional $1,000 for advertising and plans for dry dock at Algiers, La.

8. House conferees agree to amendment No. 10, appropriating $5,000 for gas plant at Naval Academy; and also to amendment No. 11, appropriating $3,000 to pave certain streets at Annapolis, Md., contiguous to the Academy.

9. Senate conferees recede from their amendment No. 15, providing for completion of hospital building at Brooklyn, N. Y., and agree that the appropriation under this head be increased to $60,000. House conferees agree to recede from their amendment No. 16.

10. Senate conferees recede from amendment No. 19 with an amendment transposing the words "and department of instruction."

11. House conferees agree to amendment No. 20, with an amendment striking out the word "temporarily." The effect of the amendment as agreed upon provides for the detail of an officer of the Pay Corps as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

12. House conferees agree to amendments Nos. 21 and 22, which respectively provide appropriations of $8,000 and $150,000 for repair of the United States steamships Constitution and Hartford.

13. The House conferees recede from their amendment No. 23, thereby reducing the appropriation of $100,000 which it was proposed to expend for new machinery, engines, and boilers for United States steamship Hartford.

13. Senate amendment No. 24, under "Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy," corrects the total and reduces the appropriation thereunder by $36; which is agreed to by the conferees of the House.

14. House conferees agree to amendment No. 25, which provides "that naval cadets shall have been at least two years immediately preceding the date of their appointment actual and bona fide residents of the district in which vacancy exists."

15. The Senate conferees recede from the amendment numbered 26 with an amendment striking out the word "August," and substituting therefor the word "September;" and also by striking out so much of the amendment as provides for the appointment of but one naval cadet from the State of South Dakota, at large, as was provided for in the said amendment.

16. Senate conferees recede from amendment No. 27, which is in words, as follows: "And for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders."

17. The Senate recedes from amendment No. 28, relating to the pay of the drum-major of the Marine Corps.

18. Senate conferees recede from their amendment No. 29, which struck out the words "or San Francisco, Cal."

19. The House conferees recede from amendment No. 34, with amendments, so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

"Construction and steam machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $5,955,025; and from this amount there shall be paid all speed premiums upon new naval vessels earned previous to January 1, 1894, and which remain unpaid at this date, the amount of such speed premium in each case being according to the official report in the trial of each vessel approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

20. The House conferees agree to the amendment of the Senate No. 35, which remits the time penalties on the dynamite-cruiser Vesuvius.

21. The Senate conferees recede from their amendments Nos. 36 and 37, which has the effect of reducing the appropriations $135,000.

In conclusion, your committee state that the total estimates for 1895 were $27,951,279.70; the amount in bill as it passed the House was $25,339,580.27, and the amount as it stands in the conference report is $25,192,090.72. This is a net reduction from the estimates of $2,759,188.98. The bill as agreed upon by the conferees carries $147,489.55 less than the House bill.

Respectfully submitted.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
J. A. GEISSENHAINER,
JONATHAN P. DOLLIVER,
Conferees on part of the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House assent to the agreement of the conferees, with the exception of the paragraph in relation to the Vesuvius, about which there appears to be some difference of opinion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask assent to the agreement as reported by the conferees, with the exception of the paragraph relating to the Vesuvius.

The SPEAKER. You can not do that. If this is a complete agreement, the House must vote it up or down as a whole.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen opposed to the paragraph concerning the Vesuvius have informed me that they wanted time for debate over that proposition. I would be glad to give them an hour if they desire it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me, when he was speaking about the Vesuvius, as I recollect it, the other day, the understanding was that there should be be no agreement in conference touching that amendment until the House had a chance to instruct or concur upon that amendment. Now, it comes in the report, and it must be adopted or voted down as a whole. If it is voted down as a whole then there can be a complete agreement upon every other item except the Vesuvius.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote upon the report as a whole.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire, in justice to my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS], that his notice shall be called to this matter.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You can try to vote it down.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am quite sure, when the gentleman takes a second thought, with the conference report in this condition, that he will not cut off debate.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. He just asked for an hour.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do this for the purpose of getting the matter before the House. I demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will wait a minute until my colleague comes in.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. The gentleman insists upon it being taken now.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does the gentleman want an immediate vote upon this conference report?

Mr. CUMMINGS. You can vote it down.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. You can reach it by voting down the report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does my friend propose to ask that the conference report be rejected, and go back to conference.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want the conference report adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, with this Vesuvius and all.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does my friend think it is good faith to the House to have brought in a complete agreement?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The rules force me to this. I am willing to give you all the time you want.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am not trying to embarrass my friend in the adoption of the report.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Thank you.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But I want the gentleman to recollect what he is doing, and see if I understand. When this bill came up on disagreement to the Senate amendments, if I recollect properly, my colleague, now absent [Mr. HOPKINS], asked the gentleman whether or not the House would have an opportunity to act upon the Vesuvius amendment later on.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. The chairman has said he desired to give you an opportunity, but the rules prevented it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no; I beg your pardon. The gentleman from New York, in charge of the bill, if I recollect aright, said this——

Mr. CUMMINGS. I said that I could not be responsible for the action of a conference committee which had not been appointed, and the RECORD will bear me out in this statement.

I am perfectly willing to give you time for debate if there is a possibility of getting it. I told your colleague [Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois] before the vote was taken on the tariff bill that this report would be called up immediately afterwards.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word to the House. For the first time in forty years this bill comes from the conferees of both Houses with a reduction of $147,000 from the bill as it passed the House, and a reduction of $2,759,000 from the estimates as originally submitted. I am sorry that the rules do not give me an opportunity to offer the gentleman from Illinois debate upon the paragraph relating to the Vesuvius amendment. I am sorry that the rules compel me to the action which I have taken; but I do now ask a vote upon the conference report, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. KILGORE. How much did the bill carry when it left the House?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The bill carried when it left the House $25,339,580.27.

Mr. KILGORE. How much did the Senate add to it?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The increase in amounts made by conferees in Senate amendments was $237,546.45. The reductions made by the conferees in the amendments of the Senate amounted to $385,036. The total amount in the bill as agreed upon by the conferees is $25,192,090.72.

Mr. KILGORE. That is a little less than the bill stood as it passed the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. One hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars less than when it passed the House.

Mr. PICKLER. What was the agreement in reference to the cadets at Annapolis? Was the provision in the bill agreed to, and was the time extended?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Senate receded from its amendment and the cadets stand in the bill as they stood in the House, with the time for their appointment extended to September 1st.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would be glad to have a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Reserving my right to the floor and to the previous question, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have in my hand the RECORD of the 17th of June, from which it appears that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] asked nonconcurrence to the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill, when this took place:

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I wish to inquire whether the amendment of the Senate, in which the gentleman moves to nonconcur, is the appropriation for the Vesuvius?

Mr. CUMMINGS. There is with the other amendments one containing an appropriation for the Vesuvius.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I would like to know something about the attitude of the committee on that matter. Gentlemen will remember that that was before the House in a separate bill, and was partly discussed. I understand the appropriation has been put on this naval appropriation bill as an amendment of the Senate.

I would like to have in some form that amendment brought before the House so that we can have a vote directly on the question as to whether the parties interested shall be reimbursed the sum of $50,000 that was taken from them by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Thirty thousand, not fifty thousand. I can not speak, of course, for the conferees; they have not yet been appointed on the part of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But of course you understand who they will be.

Mr. SAYERS. I would suggest, if the gentleman from New York will permit me, that it is usual when there is a particular amendment placed by the Senate on a bill which has been a subject of discussion in the House, that the conferees shall bring in such proposition in a shape so that it may receive the direct action of the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I wish to say to the gentleman that I shall endeavor to carry out the usual method of procedure in such cases.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is all I ask. I desire that the question shall be brought before the House and an opportunity given for discussion, and the conferees can then be governed by the action of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I recollect about the Vesuvius amendment, it remits a penalty exacted from the contractor for not finishing in time a vessel that he had contracted to build. What its merits are I say frankly I do not know.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. But the naval committees of the Senate and of the House do understand the merits.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. One moment. I recollected what my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] had said about it on the floor, and that is why I have called attention to what took place on that occasion. Now, in view of what was stated here and which I have just read from the RECORD, what would have been the proper course for this conference committee? If I had been upon it, or if the usual course as I understand it had been pursued, in the event that the Senate and the House conferees agreed upon the bill generally, the proper course to have pursued would have been to have agreed upon every item in the bill except the Vesuvius amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman has had more experience on conference committees than I have had.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The proper course, I say, would have been to have agreed to every item in the bill except the Vesuvius amendment, thus closing up the bill by that agreement, and then to have reported to the House a disagreement as to that particular amendment. Then the House could have adopted the report of the conference committee and that amendment would have stood alone upon its merits, and a motion could have been made that the House recede from its disagreement to the Vesuvius amendment, and if that motion were adopted it would pass the bill.

But instead of pursuing that course, what have we here? Without any chance on the part of the House to pass on the merits of that Vesuvius amendment standing by itself, the committee comes in with a report closing up every amendment, including the Vesuvius amendment, and we must adopt or reject this conference report as a whole. In my judgment, if my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] insists upon it, the proper thing for the gentleman from New York to do (and I suggest it to him) is to ask that the House reject this conference report, insist further upon its amendments, and send the bill back to conference; or, closing the matter up, except as to this one item, let the House act upon it separately, receding or insisting, as it may choose, or adopting whatever instructions on the subject it may desire. Otherwise, the pledge which has been given—and it seems to me what I have read amounts to notice that the House should have a chance to pass upon this amendment separately from any other—is not fulfilled.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is now here; and I hope the gentleman from New York will yield to him.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois rose.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. To the "gentleman from New York." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the "gentleman from New York" has done all that he could do to carry out what the gentleman from Illinois says was an implied contract with his colleague [Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois]. The "gentleman from New York" had only one vote in the conference committee. This question of the Vesuvius has already been discussed four hours on this floor, and it ought to be thoroughly understood by members of the House.

The proposition to make this payment in the case of the Vesuvius was favorably and unanimously reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. But if it were in my power now I would yield to the gentleman an hour, if he desired it, to discuss the question. The rules of the House, however, are imperative. The committee of conference has done its duty. It has reduced the appropriation in this bill from what it was when it passed the House by $147,000; and I submit that for its action the committee deserves the approval of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me——

Mr. MALLORY. I have been waiting to ask a question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman from Florida wishes to ask me a question, and I yield to him.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will not the gentleman from New York give me a little time before he calls the previous question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I gave time to your colleague, and he has answered for you.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. You occupied considerable time yourself.

Mr. CUMMINGS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I presume that this claim in reference to the Vesuvius is an honest claim. If it be so, the gentleman from New York can not afford in the light of this record to put it through in this way.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs and has been repeatedly reported from that committee. It is now reported from the conference committee. It is an honest claim, or I guarantee my word as a man it never would have come from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman now give me ten minutes?

Mr. MALLORY. With regard to this appropriation for the Algiers dry dock, I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if that matter has ever been before the House?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It came before the House on the last naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MALLORY. And was stricken out?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, it was accepted in an amendment offered in the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Accepted?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes, sir; it was carried through the last House.

Mr. MALLORY. How is it, then, that it comes up here again?

Mr. CUMMINGS. This is an increase in the appropriation to perfect the purchase of the land for the dock.

Mr. MALLORY. I know something about this dry dock business; and I think this is an absolute waste of money.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think it due to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that I yield him ten minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I trust I may have the attention of members of the House during the brief time that is allowed me to discuss this subject. I supposed I had a definite, clear, explicit agreement with the gentleman from New York that when the conference report should be made time would be given to debate this Senate amendment and an opportunity allowed for a separate and distinct vote upon it.

Now, I have confidence enough in the integrity of the gentleman from New York to believe that if his individual views could have prevaled in the conference committee this agreement with me would have been carried out; and I accept in its fullest extent his remark that he was overruled, if that expression may be used here, by his colleagues on that conference when this amendment was agreed to.

Now, what I want to say to members of the House is this: if this report of the committee of conference be voted down, we shall then have an opportunity of having a reinvestigation of this Senate amendment, separate and distinct from all the other claims in the report of this committee. And I say from the investigation that I have given to the subject that if the report goes through in the manner it is now presented to the House, $39,000 of the money of the people of the United States will be filched from the Treasury and paid to parties who are not entitled to a dollar of it.

I am amazed, Mr. Speaker—I repeat I am amazed that the conferees on the part of the House, under the conditions in which this amendment is here presented, should have acceded to it. And I judge that the gentleman from Maryland, who was such a zealous advocate of this measure when it was pending in a separate bill, was one of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I was not.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, the reason I made the statement was because of the zeal manifested by the gentleman to get action on this question without any opportunity to discuss it when the bill was reported to the House.

But I repeat, the facts of this matter will not bear investigation on the theory that this $39,000 shall be paid by the Government. This Pneumatic Dynamite Company was organized for the express purpose of manufacturing a vessel of this character, and came and procured a special act of Congress to authorize the construction.

Everything was granted to them in that legislation, precisely as they asked. They represented to the Government that they had a gun that would exceed in efficiency anything known in naval warfare, and under these representations they obtained an appropriation of $350,000 from the Government of the United States. They went on and constructed this vessel. What is the result? After the Government has paid out $350,000, minus the $39,000 withheld under the contract from them, this vessel and its guns have both proved perfect failures for the purposes for which they were originally constructed.

Why, Mr. Speaker, when the first report was made it was under conditions that looked as though it were corrupt. The vessel was to have a capacity of a certain number of knots an hour, and they simply tested it for six minutes and thirty-nine seconds in one direction in a calm sea, and seven minutes the other way and then reported to the Government of the United States that the contract has been complied with and obtained the money from the Treasury! From that day to this that vessel has never complied with the conditions of the contract. The pneumatic gun which was to work such wonders in naval ordnance is a perfect failure, and the Naval Committee of the House, during this session of Congress, has recommended that the Vesuvius be taken out of the list of war vessels, for which it was designed, and placed in the Navy as a torpedo boat.

A better torpedo boat can be constructed at from $90,000 to $100,000, and it seems to me that after losing the amount of money already paid, and after expending more than $100,000 in the way of experiment, the Government of the United States ought not now to pay back to these parties the $39,000 taken from them by a Republican Secretary of the Navy because they failed to comply with their contract. I say it looks as though there were something corrupt here. I can not understand how men can vote in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Well, a Republican Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracey, said that the claim was a just one, but that he had no power under the contract to remit the penalty.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. He had the right to do so, and could have remitted it if he believed it to be just; but he refused to do it because he did not regard the claim as a valid one.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The records do not bear out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In place of paying the money over to these parties he took that amount from the appropriation and put it into the Treasury. And it is left now for a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate to take that $39,000 from the Treasury of the United States and pay it over to these parties after their utter failure to comply with the conditions of their contract. I hope and trust, Mr. Speaker, that this report will be voted down, and that the members of the House will have an opportunity to investigate the matter, and decide after that full investigation whether my position is correct or whether the views of these gentlemen who are seeking to filch from the Treasury this sum of money are correct.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have said before that this question has been discussed for four hours in this House. The morning hour of the Committee on Naval Affairs was lost in the discussion. The facts in regard to the Vesuvius are just as true coming from my lips as they would be in coming from the lips of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Vesuvius, under her contract, was to make a required rate of speed. She was to carry a gun specified in the contract. When the contractors came to build the vessel they thought that by making her a little longer and larger, and by increasing the size of the gun they would be enabled to furnish the Government with a better vessel than they had contracted for.

The reason why they were willing to do this at their own expense was because they thought if she was such a grand success as they imagined she would be, that they would get the contract for another vessel, the appropriation for which was already made by Congress, and thereby would be selected to build the sister ship. At their own expense then, at an expense of $80,000 paid out of the pockets of the contractors, beyond the contract price for the vessel, they built such a vessel, with the assent—with the willing consent—of the Secretary of the Navy. But in increasing the size of the vessel, and in making her nearly a knot more speedy than the contract called for, they did not deliver her within the time specified in the original contract.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But they were allowed time——

Mr. CUMMINGS (continuing). She would have been delivered within the contract time if she had not been altered with the consent of the Navy Department.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. They asked for more time when they were going to increase the size of the vessel and the gun, and all the time was granted, so that no claim can be made on that ground.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, sir; it was the extra qualities which they had given this ship which consumed the time not reckoned in the contract.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It has no "extra qualities." It is a failure.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Oh, no; the ship is a good ship. More than this, Secretary Tracy has acknowledged the justice of this claim, and said that the money would have been remitted if he thought he had it within his power to remit the penalty under the contract.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman has mentioned a change in the construction. Was that authorized or consented to?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It was willingly authorized and consented to by the Government.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. And the Secretary of the Navy admitted that the Government had sustained no damage by reason of the delay.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That change in the construction was asked for by the company for their own benefit, and was allowed at their request, and not at the request of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have only used ten minutes in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, and I now demand the previous question and await the action of the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 18.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, no quorum.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. CUMMINGS and Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 169, nays 42, answered "present" 4, not voting 136; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5994) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5994) "making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 24, and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26, and 29, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: Strike out in line 6 of said amendments the words "made available," and insert in lieu thereof the word "reappropriated," and strike out in line 7, page 19, of the bill the following: "to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,460;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
JOSEPH H. OUTHWAITE,
W. W. BOWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.
CALVIN S. BRICE,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I send up the statement to accompany the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5994) "making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action of the conferees as embodied in the conference report:

Amendment No. 1, as agreed to, provides that "hereafter no graduate of the Military Academy shall be assigned or detailed to serve at said Academy as a professor, instructor, or assistant to either within two years after his graduation, and so much of the act of June 30, 1882, as requires a longer service than two years for said assignments or details is hereby repealed."

This amendment was recommended by the Secretary of War, and does not increase expenses.

Amendment No. 2, as agreed to, simply corrects an addition, increasing a total $12.

Amendments Nos. 3, 4, and 5, as agreed to, increase the appropriation for pay of enlisted men from $280 to $560.

Amendment No. 6, as agreed to, provides "that any of the foregoing sums for the department of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology not expended for the purposes named, may be used in fittings of the laboratory of the new academic building." This amendment does not increase expenses.

Amendments Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17½, 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26, and 29, as agreed to, strike out the words "to be immediately available." These words became unnecessary, as after July 1 the whole appropriation becomes "immediately available."

Amendment No. 14, as agreed to, also adds a total by incorporating these words, "in all, $350."

Amendment No. 15, as agreed to, appropriates $1,500 for water pipe, plumbing, repairs, etc., which is $500 less than was recommended by the Secretary of War.

Amendment No. 16, as agreed to, fixes the appropriation for contingencies for the Superintendent of the Academy at $1,000, the amount appropriated by the House, the Senate having receded from its amendment. This is $500 less than was recommended by the Secretary of War.

Amendment No. 17, as agreed to, strikes out the word "said," which does not affect the bill.

Amendment No. 18, as agreed to, provides that "the appropriation of $2,000 made by the act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, for asphalt road and walk in front of and around the new gymnasium, is hereby reappropriated for the construction of said road and walk of asphalt or other suitable material." This amendment does not increase the amount carried by the bill. The House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Amendment No. 22, as agreed to, fixes the amount appropriated for new mangers and general repairs to interior of cavalry stables at $1,400. This is one thousand less than the Senate amendment, and one thousand less than the amount recommended by the Secretary of War.

Amendment No. 24, as agreed to, fixes the amount for "building a breast-high masonry wall on each side of the road from north gate to entrance of post cemetery," at $1,000. Senate receded from its amendment. The amount appropriated is $800 less than the Senate amendment, and $800 less than the amount recommended by the Secretary of War.

Amendment No. 27, as agreed to, fixes the amount appropriated for placing gas pipes and gas fixtures throughout the barracks of Company E, Battalion of Engineers, at $300, the Senate having receded from its amendment. This is $100 less than the Senate amendment and $100 less than the amount recommended by the Secretary of War.

Amendment No. 28, as agreed to, appropriates $4,000 for one steam road roller. This is $500 less than the Senate amendment and $500 less than the amount recommended by the Secretary of War.

The bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of	$401,283.08
Which is less than any bill passed by Congress for the Military Academy since 1889.
The Senate increased the bill	8,920.00
Making the total amount	410,203.08
The conference reduced the Senate amendments as follows:
Pay of enlisted men cavalry detachment	280.00
Water pipe, plumbing, and repairs	500.00
Contingencies, Superintendent of Academy	500.00
New mangers and repairs to stables	1,000.00
Masonry wall from north gate to post cemetery	800.00
Placing gas pipes in barracks	100.00
Steam road roller	500.00
Total reduction	3,680.00
The net increase of the bill as agreed to in conference is	5,240.00
Which added to the House bill	401,283.08
Makes the total amount as agreed to and reported by the conferees	406,523.08

JOSEPH WHEELER,
JOSEPH H. OUTHWAITE,
W. W. BOWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. MARSH. I want to take about a minute now.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let us have the previous question, and then I will yield to you as much time as you want.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask my colleague on the committee——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire the previous question, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama, in charge of this bill, what the effect of the first amendment is there which has been agreed to in conference.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The law——

Mr. MARSH. I understand that under the existing law officers may be detailed to take professorships in the colleges of the country, but that an officer is first required under the existing law, before he can be detailed, to have rendered four years' service.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, you are mistaken. The law says the officers can not be detailed for duty at the Academy until they have been in the Army four years.

Mr. MARSH. That is the same thing.

Mr. SICKLES. No.

Mr. MARSH. Especially does it apply to West Point. I will accept the correction, if it is a correction. Now, that question, Mr. Speaker, was carefully and very thoroughly considered in the committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And adopted in the committee.

Mr. MARSH. And now you ask us——

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And as I recall it was adopted unanimously.

Mr. MARSH. If it was adopted it was not adopted unanimously, for it was opposed by myself and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and others; and if it was adopted there, it was defeated in this House.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, it was not defeated; it went out on a point of order in this House.

Mr. MARSH. Then it was defeated.

Mr. SICKLES. It was ruled out.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, in consideration of what I have said, and in consideration of the fact that I believe there is good ground for compelling these graduates of West Point to serve for four years in the open field before they are allowed to be detailed as teachers at West Point, I hope that the gentleman will allow this House to have a separate vote upon that proposition.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It would be impossible to do so under the rules. I regret that I could not comply with my friend's request.

Mr. MARSH. It can be done, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent. There is nothing that this House can not do by unanimous consent unless it be prohibited by the Constitution of the United States; and, in view of the fact that this legislation could not be adopted originally in this House upon an appropriation bill, and which could not be here to-day except by the action of the Senate in placing this amendment upon the bill, in contravention of the rules of this House, defying the rules of this House, I ask unanimous consent that this House may have a vote upon that proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I hold that a young gentleman just graduating from West Point is not the kind of man who should be placed in charge of the cadets who are there in that school. I hold that he ought to go out into the world, into active service; he ought to come in contact with men of the world and with the soldiers and officers of the world. He ought to have four years of schooling outside of the walls of that Academy before he should be detailed to teach the young men of this country who are there being educated.

Mr. SICKLES. That is right. I agree with you in that.

Mr. MARSH. It is not only necessary that a teacher should have a good academic education, but he should know something of the world, especially when he is detailed to teach in the greatest military school of the world the young men of this country in military affairs. I hope that a separate vote will be taken and allow this House to vote upon this proposition, a proposition which is forced here against the rules of the House and which could not come into an appropriation bill under our rules, but is stuck on at the other end of the Capitol, in absolute disregard of the rules of this House, which is the body which represents most closely the people of this country.

It is the body that furnishes the great mass of the scholars in that Military Academy. The members of this House are clothed, under the law, with the power and right to nominate the great bulk of the young men who are in that Academy; and I think that this House ought to reserve to itself the right to have some voice in determining what shall be the character of the teachers who are placed over those young men.

I know it has been said in support of this proposition, if not here elsewhere, that when one of these young men graduates and goes into the field and has four years of service there, he is thereby unfitted to teach the technical knowledge of that institution. Sir, I repudiate the idea that the graduates of West Point in four years of service in the field become unfitted for teaching. I think, on the contrary, that such service fits them to teach if they had the necessary academic knowledge before, for it enables them more intelligently to perform the duties of teachers. Now, all I ask is that this House, which has so great an interest in that school, shall have an opportunity to vote separately on this proposition.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is because the House has such a great interest in this institution that we endeavored to have this bill so framed as to meet the needs of the Academy in the best possible manner. The gentleman is mistaken when he asserts that officers lose the ability to teach in the Academy by being out of it for four years.

Mr. MARSH. The statement I made was made with due consideration. It was claimed in the room of the Committee on Military Affairs that one of the objections to men serving four years before they became teachers was that in that time they would have lost the technical knowledge which would fit them for teaching.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I never heard that point made. The point made was this, that at the end of four years of service the best officers have generally built up reputations which cause them to be assigned to other important duties, so that the best men can not be obtained as teachers in the Academy. The gentleman speaks of the necessity of having officers mix with the world for four years before they are fitted to control cadets——

Mr. MARSH. I said to teach.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Or to teach. The gentleman, when he made that point, must have forgotten that the discipline at West Point is largely maintained by the cadets themselves. They command the companies; they are the captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and corporals; upon them depends almost entirely the discipline of the corps, and to say that those gentlemen after two years of service are not fitted to teach, is certainly to contravene the experience of those who have had charge of the Academy. To show my friend the difficulty that has been experienced in getting proper officers for these duties, I will tell him that last year the superintendent had to apply for thirteen different details before he was able to get a suitable person to fill one of the positions at the Academy.

This bill only enlarges the field. It does not confine the detail to men of two years' studies, but simply provides that men of two years' studies shall not be excluded. I think this is a very important amendment. The House committee adopted it, but it went out on a point of order.

Mr. HULL. It was adopted by a very close vote and not, as the gentleman stated a few minutes ago, almost unanimously.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think the RECORD shows a close vote; I do not think it shows anything. But the Senate committee adopted it, the Senate passed it unanimously, the conferees agreed to it, and that, I think, ought to terminate the discussion of this question. I ask the adoption of the report.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much for this House to have a vote on that proposition, and inasmuch as unanimous consent can not be obtained, I know of no way by which this House can take control of this amendment, placed upon the bill by the Senate in defiance of the rules of this House—I know of no way by which the House can reach that amendment and express its opinion upon it except by voting down the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama. I hope, therefore, that the House will vote it down and thereby take this matter into its own hands for consideration.

The question being taken on agreeing to the conference report, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MARSH. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 14.

Mr. MARSH. No quorum.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 16, answered "present" 12, not voting 166; as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, when my name was called I was absent in attendance upon a meeting of a committee which was sitting by order of the House. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request.

Mr. KYLE. Then I wish to be recorded as present, as I was in the House before the roll call was concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be so recorded.

Mr. BRICKNER. My colleague, Mr. SOMERS, was taken ill, and was obliged to go to his room. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. SOMERS was excused.

Mr. PENCE. I believe I was not present when my name was called; but I was here during the roll call and I wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. When my name was called I was absent in attendance upon the meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. But I desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. DOCKERY. When my name was reached on the roll call I was absent on official business. I wish to be noted as present.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6108) "making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 9, 14, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 48, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 8, 11, 12, 13, 16, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 67, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$330,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$54,275;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$304,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Belize (British Honduras);" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and in lines 16 and 17, page 20 of the bill, strike out the words "eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$94,730;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Commercial Bureau of American Republics, $10,000: Provided, That any moneys received from sale of the Bureau publications, from rents or other sources, may be paid into the Treasury as a credit in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Bureau."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
ROBERT R. HITT,
Managers on the part of the House.
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6: Fixes the salary of the minister to Belgium at $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the House, and the salary of the minister to Switzerland at $6,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 7: Provides for a secretary of legation and consul-general to Honolulu at $4,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 8: Provides for a secretary of legation to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, at $1,800, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 9 and 10: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate for a stenographer and typewriter for the ambassadors at London, Paris, and Berlin at $1,500 each.

On amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15: Provides for interpreters to China and Turkey at $3,000 each, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, and for an interpreter to Japan at $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, and for an interpreter to Corea at $500, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 16: Appropriates $105,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of foreign missions.

On amendment numbered 17: Strikes out the provision appropriating $5,000, proposed by the Senate, to purchase of Mr. John H. Haswell certain manuscripts.

On amendment numbered 18: Appropriates $25,000 instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, and $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, for printing reports, maps, etc., of the preliminary survey of an intercontinental railway.

On amendments numbered 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26: Makes provision for the salaries of the several consuls-general, as proposed by the House, instead of as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49, concerning the salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents: Appropriates $3,000 for the consul at Nuremberg, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,500, as proposed by the House; $2,500 for the consul at St. Thomas instead of $1,500, as proposed by the House; $2,000 for the consul at Cologne, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,500, as proposed by the Senate; $2,500 for the consul at Jerusalem, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House; $2,000 each for the consuls at Bahia and Para, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,500, as proposed by the House; $1,500 for the consul at Belize, British Honduras, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the Senate; $2,000 each for the consuls at Bermuda and Auckland, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,500, as proposed by the Senate; and restores the appropriation of $2,000 proposed by the House and stricken out by the Senate for the salary and expenses of a commercial agency at Boma, in the Lower Kongo Basin.

On amendments numbered 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 66: Appropriates in the aggregate $94,730, instead of $91,850, as proposed by the House, and $96,530 as proposed by the Senate, for allowance for clerk hire at the several consulates.

On amendment numbered 67: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the Senate instead of $150,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of consulates.

On amendment numbered 68: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Commercial Bureau of American Republics.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $1,563,918.76, being $6,473.76 more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year, $27,300 less than the bill as it passed the Senate, and $52,180 more than the bill as it passed the House.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
ROBERT R. HITT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire about some of these increases and the reasons that were given for them in conference. For instance, the salary of the minister to Belgium seems to have been increased about $2,500.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. As the country is somewhat poorer than it was last year, I should like to know why the chairman of the House committee consented to yield on this point. I hope he will state the reasons which seemed to him powerful enough to justify this increase.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended the bill by increasing the salary of the minister at Belgium from $7,500 to $10,000. The committee believed it was proper to do this in order to put Belgium on an equality with Peru, Chile, Turkey, and Colombia. Our ministers to those countries receive $10,000 each. At Brussels the expense of living is as high as it is at almost any other place in Europe.

If we are to have a minister at Brussels, it was believed by the committee that he should be paid $10,000. The position is an important one. All of the great nations of the world have ministers at Brussels, and it was deemed proper not to abolish the Belgian mission. Our commercial relations with Belgium have improved very much in the last few years, and a great international exposition is being held this year in Belgium, where costly and important exhibits are being made by citizens of the United States. Our Government has been the recipient recently of special courtesies from Belgium. When our country was hunting a place at which to hold the International Monetary Conference an invitation was extended to the President of the United States by the Belgian Government to hold the conference at Brussels, and there have been two other international conferences held there.

It was believed by the committee that if we are to continue to have a minister at Brussels, we should pay him a salary sufficient to enable him to live as comfortably there as at his home in the United States. Therefore the Belgian mission was raised to the same rank with Peru, Chile, Turkey, and Colombia, these being missions of the third class.

Mr. REED. I presume the expediency of lowering the salaries paid to our ministers to Turkey, Peru, and those other nations was not suggested; nor was the poverty of our country at the present time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. No such proposition could have been considered, as the gentleman well knows, in a committee of conference, because there was no disagreement as to the salaries of ministers to the countries named.

Mr. REED. Who is the gentleman who now occupies the position as our minister at Brussels?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Ewing, of Illinois.

Mr. REED. From what part of Illinois does he come?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not know.

Mr. REED. From Bloomington?

Mr. MARSH. He comes from Bloomington, Ill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. He is the cousin and the law partner of the Vice-President.

Mr. REED. I do not regard the fact that he is the law partner of the Vice-President as one which should disqualify him for receiving the increase which would naturally result from the courteous treatment received by our representatives in the monetary conference at Brussels. [Laughter.] That is a perfectly natural thing. I only want to get at the facts.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I would like to say to the gentleman from Maine, in response to his suggestion, that the amount appropriated in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, when he was Speaker, was $1,710,815, and that the amount appropriated by the pending bill is $1,563,000, or $147,000 less. Further, let me state that the amount of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill passed at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress was $1,684,500, and that the present appropriation bill is $41,000 less than that.

Mr. REED. Where is the gain?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. This bill appropriates less than the appropriation bills of the years just named.

Mr. REED. But where do we make the gain on the business?

A MEMBER. On a deficiency bill, perhaps.

Mr. REED. Is it to be made on a deficiency bill that is to be introduced hereafter, as suggested by a Democratic gentleman whom I will not mention? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman is going to answer my question.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I thought I had answered it.

Mr. REED. I wish to know where we make the gain of $41,

000; whether it is for a deficiency bill in the future or whether it is in practical business a real, substantial gain?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It is a real, substantial gain.

Mr. REED. Then in what way do we gain it?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It will not be necessary, I think, to have any deficiency bill for the benefit of our foreign service.

Mr. REED. But how about the gain of $41,000? How do we get that?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Because certain appropriations made in the Congresses referred to are not made here.

Mr. REED. For instance, what appropriations?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Well, there are quite a number of items.

Mr. REED. What are they, if the gentleman will kindly give the items?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am not able to give them all.

Mr. REED. Well, the main body of them would be grateful to me.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The amount appropriated for the preliminary survey of the intercontinental railroad is one.

Mr. REED. That is, we stop that job?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. That is not in this bill.

Mr. REED. How much do we make on that?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I believe $65,000.

Mr. REED. Well, that is a very good slice.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. We save that amount by not appropriating for that purpose.

Mr. REED. In other words, we make $65,000, but do not get but $41,000. Is that the condition?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The amount of the bill is that much less than the amount carried in the preceding bill.

Mr. REED. Then how about the minister to Switzerland? Is there an increase there?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The salary of the minister to Switzerland, under the Revised Statutes of the United States, is fixed at $7,500 a year. That salary was paid to him for a number of years, but it has been reduced, so that under the present bill he gets only $6,500.

Mr. REED. That is, you dock him $1,000.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. No, we do not do that; but the Senate allows the same amount that the House allowed in the appropriation bill, $6,500.

Mr. REED. Did not the Senate demand a thousand more for him?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, sir; but the House did not concur.

Mr. REED. Who is the minister to Switzerland under this Administration?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Broadhead.

Mr. REED. From St. Louis?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes; I believe from St. Louis.

Mr. REED. Is that the gentleman who used to be a member of this body?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I think so.

Mr. REED. It is a great pity he could not have received the same consideration that he would have received if he had gone to Brussels. Has there not been an increase in the cost of living there?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Living is not so expensive in Switzerland as in Brussels.

Mr. REED. And there were no "conferences" there? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. No.

Mr. REED. Now, I must say it does seem to me the committee on conference in this regard have failed to do their duty either one way or the other. I am quite certain that Mr. Broadhead is as good a man as the Illinois man, the executive partner, and I do not think we ought to discriminate against one in favor of the other. Nor does it seem to me that we have really made any money out of the transaction. We have abandoned the international project, which was to take railroads down through the Central American States, and got $65,000 out of that, according to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky. That ought to be "a dead open-and-shut game." But instead of that amount, $20,000 or more of it has been spent in the return of courtesies which were rendered by the Brussels people on the occasions mentioned by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now I can not quite understand the logical connection between the courteous action of the Brussels Government and our giving our minister more money. There does not, somehow or other, seem to be any logical connection between those two things, and I was in hopes that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] would make that a little plainer. But perhaps he has made it plain enough to enable his Democratic brethren to pass the bill. Only I want to say here and now that it is perfectly evident that we are $24,000 more extravagant than the wicked persons who preceded us; and $24,000 with a ruined country is a good deal. We are $24,000 worse than the most extravagant Congress except one—the Congress which immediately followed it; $24,000 worse than that Congress, and Democrats are proposing to pass that bill and to do so without a single—I will not say without a single whimper, because I have noticed on the countenances of Democrats in front of me a sort of approval of my idea, although they failed to approve of my action.

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] a question.

Mr. REED. I was in hopes the gentleman from Brooklyn would appear, because I was quite sure that the Democratic defense would not be complete without him. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOMBS. I shall not attempt to match the gentleman's kind of wit, but I want to ask him this question: Does he not think it is important that as American commerce extends its field abroad we should be better represented, and that we should spend more money in our representation? I ask that in all candor.

Mr. REED. I am going to answer it in perfect courtesy. I can only say that this salary seems to be anticipatory of the commerce which is going to occur. Perhaps on the gentleman's principle it might be well enough to wait until the commerce had happened. The Democratic party is hopeful always, on impossible subjects. It is always hopeful about the increase of our foreign commerce. It never seems to be quite hopeful of the increase of our internal commerce, but curiously enough the foreign commerce does not seem in the Democratic mind to bear any relation to the increase of internal commerce.

Now, I can not see the slightest connection between the minister at Brussels and the commerce of the United States. Yet if the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] does, I will say frankly to him that this increase does not trouble me. What I say about it is that logically it ought to trouble the Democratic brother, and I am awaiting some expression on his part, after this exposition of this increase has been made, at a time when we were bound to be the most economical. The only reason or suggestion yet offered is by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], who says that it ought to be done on account of a commerce which has not yet occurred.

Mr. COOMBS. I did not say that.

Mr. REED. Well, I add that.

Mr. COOMBS. Our remarks are addressed from different standpoints. The gentleman from Maine made the remark that the total of the bill had increased, after deducting that $65,000 for an intercontinental railroad survey. I point out the fact that within the last two years our commerce to all South American and Central American ports has increased enormously.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Under reciprocity.

Mr. REED. That seems to be the result of reciprocity, as gentlemen around me remark.

Mr. COOMBS. Do you honestly believe that the consular service of the Government should be crippled by too much economy?

Mr. REED. The gentleman is a little superfluous in his question when he asks me if I "honestly" believe. Whenever I believe, I always do it honestly, and I beg to say that I am in accord with him in the increase of the consular service, and as he is a little outside of the Democratic party in that respect, my remarks were not at all addressed to him. But I was referring to some of the gentlemen whom I see in front of me, who are so strongly in favor of economy and do not pay any attention to the considerations so ably urged by the gentleman from New York, either upon this or any other commercial question. [Laughter.] I was not addressing my remarks to him. He and I are in accord on these points; but I am referring to those persons from the interior regions who do not fully understand the necessities of the case and whose emotions are not world-wide.

Mr. COOMBS. In answer to the remarks of the gentleman, I fully understand the necessity of making all kinds of political capital out of this that you can, even although you have to pick up little shreds here and there; but I do not believe you want to record yourself as being in favor of too much economy in expenditures for the consular service.

Mr. REED. Did you ever know me to record myself in favor of anything Democratic, speaking in a party sense? Why, you are revolting against your party! [Laughter.]

I am only pointing out to your party how inconsistent it is to increase the salary of the minister to Brussels as compared with their pledges of economy. That is all. I do not think, after the gentleman from New York has examined the matter, that he will desire to interfere. I simply want to see if this Democratic House wants to vote this increased expenditure without any good reason.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of House Resolution No. 20; that on Friday, the 20th instant, after the second morning hour, the consideration of said resolution shall be resumed, and at the hour of 4 o'clock the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendments, if any, and the final passage of the bill, and the vote shall then be taken without any delay.

That Saturday, the 21st instant, after the second morning hour, it shall proceed to the consideration of House bill 3249; that at the hour of 4 p. m. the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendments, if any, and on the bill to its final passage; and the vote shall then be taken without delay.

This order not to interfere with conference reports, or revenue bills, or general appropriation bills.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire what bills they are, as they are referred to only by number.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The bill which is to be considered to-morrow is one reported from the Committee on Elections of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress, which looks to a constitutional amendment so as to have Senators elected by the people.

Now the next, for Saturday, is a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, providing that all postal clerks who were dismissed from the Railway Mail Service between the 15th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889, shall be eligible to appointment.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think that is a great deal of time for the discussion of that amendment in connection with the election of Senators?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. This last bill, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, is a bill that under the rules of the House should go to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. I would like to know if this resolution is adopted if it prohibits the question of consideration being raised. I desire to make the point of order against this bill that the Committee on the Judiciary has no jurisdiction over it, and to state that there is a bill now pending before the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service embodying the same question.

The SPEAKER. It does not occur to the Chair that that question could arise now.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The reason why I ask that question now is the day is being set for consideration; and if I do not raise the point now will I not be precluded from raising it hereafter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that this is a public bill and not a private bill. A committee may get jurisdiction of a public bill, if not a bill providing for a claim, by reference; and even if it be an erroneous reference, yet, when the committee acts upon it and makes a report, there is no way of undoing that work in the case of a public bill, and that is because a private bill is referred by the member and not by the Speaker.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If this resolution is adopted, will I have the parliamentary right to raise the question of consideration on that bill?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean as to the right of the committee to report?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I mean if this resolution now reported from the Committee on Rules is adopted on Saturday when this bill is taken up, will I have the parliamentary privilege of raising the question of consideration, or any member who seeks to raise that question?

The SPEAKER. If the bill is made a special order the Chair does not think the gentleman would have that right. Without having looked up the precedents on the subject, it seems if the order be adopted it would provide that it should be considered at that time.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. REED. I desire to say a word about the resolution.

The SPEAKER. But the matter has been debated before the previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 20) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, at large, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the Legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the Legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House in any discussion of this measure. Two years ago I discussed it as fully as I know how. I have had the resolution read. It is identically in the same words as the resolution which passed the House two years ago without a division. With this statement, and reserving my time, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DE ARMOND.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia reserves his time, the Chair will now recognize some gentleman in opposition to the joint resolution, if any one desires recognition.

Mr. TUCKER. I suggest, then, that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. NORTHWAY, be now recognized.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should prefer to be recognized later.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, as has already been stated to the House, the joint resolution now pending is a copy of one which was reported from the same committee in the last House, and adopted by that body. That resolution, having passed the House, went to the Senate, since which time nothing has been heard from it.

In the formation of the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, while the general design was to establish a government by the people, to recognize the fundamental principle that the people themselves are the source of all power, and that all just government emanates from them, the framers of our Constitution, with monarchies all about them, naturally retained some features of a monarchical character, which we believe have been shown by the lapse of time and by experience to be unnecessary if not positively harmful.

Among those features of arbitrary power are the veto power of the President as it exists, the life tenure of the United States judiciary, and the long term of office and the peculiar method of selection of United States Senators. To one of these features, the election of Senators, public attention has for some time been directed, and we believe that a well-founded public sentiment now exists in favor of changing the manner of electing these important legislators, and that it is the desire of the people—a natural desire, a desire the gratification of which will inure to the good of the country and the perpetuity of the Government—that the Senators shall be elected more directly than now by the people themselves.

In order that the people may have the opportunity to pass on this proposition and, if it meets with their approval, to make a change in the fundamental law of the land, this joint resolution has been introduced and has been reported back to this House, as a resolution precisely the same was reported to the last House.

I will not detain the House with any minute discussion of the supposed abuses which exist in the present method of electing United States Senators. It is enough for my purpose at present to say that it is the conviction, I believe, of a very large proportion of the people that if the Senators were elected by popular vote, they would feel to a greater extent their responsibility to the people, and in the discharge of their legislative functions would more nearly and more surely meet the reasonable expectations of the people.

It is a notorious fact that in not a few instances in the history of this country, particularly its more recent history, persons have been elected to membership in the United States Senate by the present method of selection by the Legislatures of the various States, who certainly would not have been chosen had the choice been left with the people. It is further true that in some instances at least the persons thus chosen were not, perhaps are not, average Senators in ability, in character, in usefulness, and have not, to the full extent to which they ought to have, if they were the proper sort of men, selected in the proper way, the confidence and support of those whom they were chosen to represent.

It is true, I think, that in some instances men have been selected by the powerful agencies and influences of special interests, corporations, or other aggregations of wealth and power; and, without dwelling upon recent history, I think that even now the transaction of business in the Senate would be more satisfactory to the country, and more nearly in accord with the decisions of the people at the polls, if some of the men who are members in that body were to give place to those who would be selected, or who would have been selected, had a different method been employed. Obscure, unknown men, men supported by powerful interests——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What does the gentleman say of the recent experience of the Democratic party in the State of Illinois in the selection of a candidate for the United States Senate? All over that State a distinguished member of this House was recognized as the favorite of his party. Probably nine-tenths of the Democrats in the State of Illinois——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Does the gentleman desire to make a speech in my time, or, as he proposed, simply to ask a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I just want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then please address yourself to the question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Probably nine-tenths of the Democrats in the State of Illinois would have selected the gentleman to whom I have referred in preference to the man who was selected by the convention——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield for a speech. If the gentleman desires to ask a question let him ask it. I yield for that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, does the gentleman believe that the recent selection of a candidate for United States Senator by the Democratic party in Illinois is an illustration of the benefits that would result from the adoption of the law which he now advocates?

Mr. DE ARMOND. This gentleman believes, Mr. Speaker, that different men have very different ideas of propriety in debate. I was addressing myself to the general question of whether or not there should be a change in the method of selecting Senators of the United States. According to the idea of propriety which evidently obtains with the gentleman from Illinois it is appropriate, and may perhaps be thought smart, to endeavor to inject a speech of his into the remarks of someone else.

Now, I am by no means vain in my judgment of my own remarks, but I do really believe that they would not be greatly improved, on an average, by the incorporation into them of such suggestions as that which the gentleman from Illinois has just made. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe this: that the principles and platform on which the Democratic party in Illinois is at present acting and proceeding are a vast improvement over any which its great adversary has adopted in that State, or, up to this time, elsewhere in this country.

Coming back now to the question of——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Missouri does not answer my question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The "gentleman from Missouri" does not propose to be diverted from the line of his argument.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. After what the gentleman has said, I submit that I am entitled to a reply.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I presume the gentleman will have the floor in due time in his own right.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not desire the floor——

Mr. DE ARMOND. And I do not desire the gentleman to interpose his remarks in my time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman allowed me to ask a question, and instead of answering it he has made a statement——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri declines to be interrupted and is entitled to proceed unless he yields the floor by his own consent.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not yield to the gentleman.

I fancy, Mr. Speaker, that it is not at all an entertaining performance to this House, and certainly not an instructive one to the members present, to consume the time of the House in such a colloquy as the gentleman from Illinois would like to indulge in as a part of these proceedings. In considering whether there should be a change in the fundamental law in regard to the election of the members of one of the branches of the National Legislature, how trivial it must seem to insist upon getting the opinion of a Representative from some other State, as to whether the Democracy of Illinois should have nominated for Senator Franklin MacVeagh or Gen. JOHN C. BLACK!

As far as I know, each of these gentlemen is infinitely superior in material for making a good, useful, and honest United States Senator to any man who is likely to be put up for that high office by the party in opposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I was saying when the gentleman from Illinois desired to have an expression of my opinion upon this subject, as to the choice between Mr. BLACK and Mr. McVeagh, that I believe, without going into particulars, that if some persons now occupying seats in the United States Senate had been compelled when the time came for the selection of representatives from their several States to sit in that body, to submit their claims or their ambitions to the judgment of the great populace—the voting people of their States—the high place which knows them now would never have known them, and that there would be in their places men who would more nearly represent those whom they ought to represent, but perhaps do not represent fully or fairly.

Now, as I have said already, when this Government was formed those who formed it looked abroad into the world and saw everywhere arbitrary governments—saw monarchical governments prevailing. Their experiment was a great and a grand but to some extent a most hazardous one. They determined to found here, on this continent, a government of the people.

While some of them would have gone the full length, looking far enough into the future and realizing in advance the vast capacity, the splendid ability, of our American people for self-government; would have thrown away all of the shackles and forms of arbitrary government which were in part retained—others, less hopeful, more cautious, less bold in their views, insisted on retaining in our form of government some of those hampering influences and agencies which were borrowed, in some degree at least, from the monarchical governments surrounding them.

I believe the experience and the demonstrations which we have in this Goverment of ours, in its century of existence, are sufficient to convince us that the experiment is not a failure, is not destined to be a failure, if we follow it logically and as we should, and insure actual free government to all the people of the American Republic.

Mr. Speaker, the dangers which menace us to-day do not arise from trust and reliance in the common people of the country. There is no serious danger from misguided influences or evil motives originating amongst the people themselves, because the judgment of the people in the main is sound, and the motives of the vast body of American citizens are in the main pure, lofty, and conservative.

But the dangers which threaten us, and the dangers which we must meet and conquer, unless we would have our Government overthrown, and this experiment of a free Government by the people perish, are dangers from other directions, from the concentration of power, from the neglect of the rights, wishes, and majesty of the people by the powers, influences, and traditions of comparatively small bodies. I believe the apprehensions felt in respect to the House of Representatives, its members coming fresh from the people, liable to be influenced by popular excitement and prejudices and the moving sentiments of the hour—I believe such apprehensions, based really upon distrust of the people, may well be dismissed.

With all its uncertainty, with all of its vagaries, here, in the membership of this House, is the great representative body of all of the American people; here after all is the place in this Government where, when necessary, can be heard the voice of the common people; and here, if necessary, is where the rights of the people will be asserted; and where, so far as the constitutional power of this body goes, those rights will be protected and enforced. [Applause.]

I believe to-day that instead of the other body, the so-called conservative body, the so-called "balance wheel" in the machinery of the Government—instead of that being a source of safety and of benefit to the country as contradistinguished from this body, the eyes of the people turn here in hope, and the eyes and the thoughts of the people turn in the other direction, to the other end of this massive and splendid Capitol, in dread and apprehension.

I believe that where the popular voice may be heard, where the popular feelings may be echoed, where the popular needs may be proclaimed, the rights of the people are far safer than where tradition rules over reason, and where so-called "courtesy" has far the better of principle.

I believe, sir, that that other body, the Senate, so far as all useful conservative features that inhere in it or can justly or properly inhere in it are concerned, will be a far better body if its members are selected directly by the people.

I believe it is far more difficult to impose upon the people of a whole State than upon a few of them an unworthy man; unworthy because he lacks sufficient intellectual ability or sufficient moral stamina; unworthy because he is under bad influences, because he will look after special interests instead of great general public interests. I believe the chances of imposing such a man upon the people of a great State, in the full light of the discussion which takes place in campaigns when important officers are selected, will be less than the prospect of his imposing himself upon a Legislature, or of a Legislature inflicting him upon the people.

There is comparative safety where a man may be judged in the open field, in the full light of day, according to what he is and what he stands for, what he probably will be, scanning his future by his present and his past. In view of all these things, may we not safely conclude that, upon the whole and on the average, the people themselves, if given the power, will elect better, truer, more reliable men to the Senate, men of greater intelligence, men more completely in sympathy with the people, men better grounded in the principles of republican institutions, men freer from all influences adverse to the rights and interests and welfare of the great people of the Commonwealth represented.

Believing these things, I believe that this House, and of course I believe that the Senate also should adopt this resolution and submit to the Legislatures of the several States the question of whether there shall be a change in the method of electing Senators.

Now, one word as to what the change should be, if a change be made at all. It has been suggested and it may be again—I do not know whether it will be or not—that there should be a sort of optional feature about the election of Senators; that this is better, as a matter of reason and principle; is more likely to prevail, and therefore is better as a matter of policy than some fixed method for choosing Senators. At first blush the suggestion is attractive and the argument in support of it specious. At first blush, the reasons urged in favor of such a proposition may appear convincing, but upon analysis and reflection a different conclusion, I think, will be reached.

The present method of selecting Senators is or is not to be preferred to the method of selecting them more directly by the people. If the present method of selecting Senators is better than their selection by a direct vote of the people, then no change should be made—not only no change all over the Union, but no change in any State of the Union.

If, on the other hand, it is better that Senators be elected by a direct vote of the people than by the several State Legislatures, then it is better, not in one State merely, it is better, not merely to get A instead of B into the Senate from one particular State, but it is better as a system; it is better upon principle, it is better because it will give the American people a better lawmaking body at the other end of this Capitol.

Now, while as a citizen of Missouri—whose present Senators would have been chosen by the sovereign people voting directly—I may feel greatly interested in the determination of who shall be selected from that great State to membership in the United States Senate; yet the people of Missouri, in their interest in legislation, are as much affected by the vote for the right or the vote for the wrong if the vote be cast by a Senator from the distant State of New Hampshire as if it comes from a Missouri Senator.

When a question of great public interest—as, for instance, the tariff question—is pending in the Senate, to be disposed of—I say "to be disposed of," although I speak also, at the same time, and in the same connection, of the United States Senate [laughter]—when a great question is pending in the United States Senate to be disposed of, it is important to the people all over this country what the action of the Senate shall be; not merely how a Senator from any particular State (unless his vote may determine the issue) shall vote, or whether he shall vote and fight for the right or shall vote and contend for the wrong, or by secret and dishonest devices, by dark and devious ways, conspire with the enemy to thwart the right while pretending to be its apostle.

It is important to the people how the legislation shall result, and let me not forget to add, when the result shall be reached, as to what the action shall be, as to whether the pending measure shall pass or shall be defeated; and if it pass, in what form and of what substance it shall be when it does pass.

Now then the proposition embodied in this resolution to amend the Constitution is for a uniform amendment. If it be adopted, Senators will not be elected anywhere in this Union except by the direct votes of the people of an entire State.

It has been suggested, as I have said, in behalf of the other theory, that if you propose a kind of automatic plan by which you can in one case elect by the people, then swing back and elect by the Legislature, or in the first instance elect by the Legislature and then by a change of the law or by a constitutional change elect by the people—electing in one State by the Legislature and in another State by the people—the persons opposed to amending the Constitution will be less violent in their opposition, will be likely to yield something of their opposition, inasmuch as their State will not be forced to adopt the new scheme; and thence it is argued an amendment to the Constitution by which some States may elect Senators by a direct vote of the people and others by the present course will be more likely to pass House and Senate and be ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

The legislator who rests upon that hope is hugging a delusion. Tell me where is there a man in this House, or where in the other body, who is opposed to the election of Senators by direct vote of the people, but who is in favor of any amendment which will permit such election anywhere? How does a man, if he is opposed to the election of Senators by the people, know that the question will not soon be a burning one in his own State?

How does he know that if an amendment be adopted by which the people of a State may elect Senators by their own votes instead by vote of the Legislature, there may not be a party in the State, powerful and aggressive, demanding that Senators in that State be chosen by direct vote of the people? The fact is, it is almost certain that that condition of things would arise in every State in this Union.

I do not believe there is in a single State such complete approval of and satisfaction with the present method of electing United States Senators that a very considerable number of people will not be found, if the opportunity be opened to them, favorable to electing Senators by direct vote of the people. In every State it would be a source of ceaseless agitation. You change from election by the Legislature to election by popular vote, perhaps making the change by a close vote. An effort will be made by those opposed to that change, and who favor the old method, to swing back. The question remains unsettled. It is a question that might overshadow and injuriously affect other great questions.

So I think upon principle, as well as for policy sake, for every reason that can be urged, when you consider it fairly, we should either adhere to the present method for all the Senators elected and to be elected in the United States, or should change the method for all. This amendment preserves to the Senators now elected, or who may be in office at the time of its ratification by the States, if it be ratified, the full right to their Senatorial seats, as though they had been chosen by popular election.

This of course is necessary for reasons unnecessary to state, and undoubtedly proper. But if we decide to make the change, then let there be no question in Rhode Island, in Missouri, or California, or anywhere, as to whether the election of Senators shall be by popular vote or by the Legislature. Let it be fixed and settled by the fundamental law of the land, if the Constitution is to be amended at all, that the selection there and elsewhere in the Union shall be by direct vote of the people.

No man here will vote, unless he does it merely as a matter of policy, with a view of killing the resolution, for an optional proposition, who will not vote for one that has nothing optional in it. No man at the other end of the Capitol, unless actuated by similar motives, will cast a like vote. No member of a Legislature will vote to ratify an amendment to the Constitution if opposed to electing Senators by the method to be employed, if that amendment shall become a part of the Constitution, because he, in great magnanimity, in Pickwickian generosity, is entirely willing that somebody somewhere may have an opportunity to elect Senators in a particular way which he does not approve.

We have tried for a century the present method of electing Senators. It has had a fair trial. If it has justified itself it ought not to be changed. It is a great and serious thing to change so magnificent and mighty an instrument as the Federal Constitution. It ought not to be done lightly. If done, those who do it ought not to say in the doing of it that they do not know whether they wish to do what they are doing or that they merely wish to experiment to give the people an opportunity to try this or that project.

The man who votes for a change of the Constitution should be prepared to put something definite, fixed, uniform, settled, immovable, clearly understood, into the Constitution in addition to what is there or in place of that which he would eliminate.

Mr. Speaker, having spoken briefly upon this question when it was up before, and not having any desire whatever to weary the House, and feeling that the question having been considered so much in public gatherings and among the people of the country, having been so frequently in the newspapers, there being such pronounced sentiments here and there in regard to it, feeling that every member of this House has his own mind made up as to how he should vote, and conceding to everybody what I claim for myself, the right and the duty to vote as his judgment shall lead him, I feel that I ought not longer to detain the House. Therefore, I yield the floor, reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question as to the meaning of this resolution?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. RAY. The resolution says:

That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution:

Then follows your proposition; which is:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, at large, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures.

And then:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

Now, it is the intention to leave out of this resolution so much of section 4 of the Constitution that I find there now, which reads:

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It is not intended to have any such language apply to the election of Senators, is it? How do you understand that, or what is your purpose?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, to be able to say that I think the gentleman from New York has a correct understanding of that proposition. The fact is, I might further add, that I do not see how anybody could have an incorrect understanding of it, inasmuch as it proposes to take out certain words and substitute certain others. I take it that is what it means.

Mr. RAY. Very good. Is it your purpose by this resolution or does the resolution in your judgment have the effect of taking out of section 4 that part in which it says—

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations—

In so far as that language applies to the election of Representatives in Congress? Does it leave that part of the Constitution in so that it will apply hereafter if a change is made in the mode of the election of Senators?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I hardly see that there is any question of judgment involved in the inquiry of the gentleman from New York. It is simply a question of reading plain language and understanding plain language when one reads it.

Now, then, for the benefit—for I want to be accommodating when I can be—of the gentleman from New York, and not for the benefit of any other gentleman upon the floor, because I believe anybody who will examine it closely will understand that it does not need any explanation, I will say that if he will give the resolution an attentive reading I am satisfied he will understand that the purpose is, and that the effect would be, upon the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution, to leave the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators to be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof. It would shut out and prevent Federal interference in the election of Senators when the election takes place by the vote of the people at popular elections. Now, then, I have no time to discuss that proposition.

Mr. RAY. It would not, in your judgment, and is not intended by you or the gentleman in charge, so far as you know, to change the Constitution in so far as it applies to the election of Representatives.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think, sir, that it has no reference to that and says nothing about it, but leaves it precisely as it is.

Mr. RAY. Then as it is, there would be two rules; one for the election of Senators and one for the election of Representatives.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Having already concluded my remarks, I will add, so far as the gentleman from New York is concerned, and I do not want to weary the House so near the adjournment hour, if he will look over the resolution and if he will read the Constitution, a night's careful reflection will bring him to an accurate conclusion upon these things without any aid from me.

Mr. RAY. I was going to ask the gentleman another question. I desire to ask you this: Do you regard it as a wise thing to do, to have one rule of the Constitution as to the election of Senators by the people and another as to the election of Representatives in Congress? Ought you not to make the same rule while you are at it, and in proposing to make a change would it not be better to have the same rule apply to both?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, unlike the gentleman from New York, the committee was not sufficiently wise to undertake the amendment of the entire Constitution. Now, I have no doubt that there are upon this floor some gentlemen who could recast that supposed immortal instrument and bring out something which, in their own estimation, would be vastly superior to it. There are some little changes in the Constitution that I might venture to make if I had the power, but which no one but the gentleman from New York would feel warranted in doing in disposing of a plain resolution carrying a simple single proposition to effect a change in the method of electing United States Senators.

Now, I can hardly think it is pertinent to determine now, especially when one feels that he is holding the floor simply for the accommodation of one member and at the expense of all others, what the other principles of the Constitution probably ought to be, and what few scraps of that instrument ought to be left in order to meet the full approval and insure the satisfaction of all or any of the gentlemen upon the floor.

Mr. RAY. I had no desire to take the gentleman's time, but I did want to understand him; and now I want to say to him that I am very much obliged for his very small and very ungentlemanly attempt at abuse, which does not affect me in the least degree. It is a very small way of answering a question which pertains to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, at the expense of a moment more of the time of the House I will say that I feel somewhat flattered, and I presume the House feels somewhat relieved, if the result of what has happened has been, even for the time being, to suppress the gentleman from New York, who neither understands his own questions nor the answers of anyone else. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Who, with the alphabet before him, would ask people to explain whether they understood that it contains 26 or some other number of letters; who with the alphabet before him would take five minutes to have somebody explain to him (if anybody would be complacent enough to do it) whether "A" begins the alphabet and "Z" ends it, and who would wind up with the comforting assurance that all he had desired was to get an answer to his question and to understand the matter.

Mr. EVERETT. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to speak of some alternative plan by which some States might adopt this measure and others adhere to the old method. Did I understand him correctly to say that any such plan was in contemplation as an amendment to this resolution?

Mr. DE ARMOND. None such is before the House. Such plans have been talked about and considered. Resolutions of that kind have been introduced, but I merely touched upon the matter and discussed it incidentally.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, the usual hour for adjournment having arrived, I should be glad if the gentleman in charge of this measure would move that the House adjourn, as I should be unable to conclude my remarks this evening.

Mr. TUCKER. We are pressed for time, but if the gentleman desires it, I will do so. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GROSVENOR obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers relating to the bill H. R. 5505, Fifty-second Congress, without leaving copies.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for ten days, on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. TUCKER was then agreed to, and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. KIEFER, from the Committee on Claims, reported the bill (H. R. 6384) for the relief of Walter S. McLeod; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1277), was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Amies, and 130 other persons, of Altoona, Pa., members of the Order of Heptasophs, for an amendment to the tariff bill to relieve and exempt fraternal societies from the provisions of the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MEIKLEJOHN: Memorial from the board of supervisors and officers of Knox County, Nebr., praying for the passage of House bill 262, a bill extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MERCER: Resolutions of the board of supervisors of Knox County, Nebr., relative to taxing the lands of the Indians in said county—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 20, 1894.

Prayer by Rev. ISAAC W. CANTER, of the city of Washington.

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 236) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to soldiers' homes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEARD, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. POST managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. COOMBS, and Mr. BINGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6720) providing for the resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCRAE, Mr. HALL of Minnesota, and Mr. MEIKLEJOHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near the city of Lexington, Mo; and

A bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, a tabulated statement showing subsisting leases of unoccupied and unproductive property of the United States under control of the Treasury Department; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for the continuance of the work of constructing the Federal building in course of erection at Worcester, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to resolutions of the Senate of July 6 and July 14, 1894, schedules of claims allowed by the accounting officers, not heretofore reported to Congress; which was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the communication be printed and that a special order may be made for expedition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, and the special order suggested by the Senator from Missouri will be made.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will yield for routine morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM. I present memorials of sundry citizens of Eureka, Peoria, and Auburn, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state, which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions, for Indian education, etc. The Indian appropriation bill has gone out of the possession of the Senate, but it may come back again; and I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I present the petition of Marshall Field & Co., Armour & Co., Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, and many bankers of Chicago, Ill., praying for the immediate disposition of the tariff bill. As the petition is only four lines long, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the petition.

The petition was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., July 18, 1894.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, Washington, D. C.:

The whole country demands that Congress terminate the pending tariff legislation immediately. Failure to dispose of the question quickly will work incalculable loss and irreparable injury to financial and industrial interests.

Mr. PEFFER presented the petition of E. B. Bebee, of New York City, N. Y., praying for an issuance of $50,000,000 legal-tender Treasury notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Advance Labor Club, Local Assembly, No. 1562, Knights of Labor, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to tax immigrants $50 each; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the board of supervisors and county officials of Knox County, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the taxation of lands held by Indians in severalty; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PATTON presented the memorial of B. S. Holly and sundry other citizens of Woodland, Mich., and the memorial of Rev. G. M. Gosling and sundry other citizens of Decatur, Mich., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oregon, praying that an appropriation of $100,000 be made for building and maintaining salmon fish hatcheries on the Columbia River and its tributaries. I submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is before the Committee on Appropriations, and the petition may be referred to that committee if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that reference will be made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Grugett as a former member of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1702) to provide for improvement of the public bathing beach, on the Potomac River, in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2118) authorizing the sale of title of United States to a tract of land in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, to William H. and George Bobinger, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2240) to repeal a part of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses, and fulfilling treaty obligations with Indian tribes for fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," approved March 3, 1893; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2241) requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold at least one session annually in the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2242) granting accrued pension to the surviving children of Shubal York, surgeon of Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2243) in aid of the exposition to be held under the auspices of the Baltimore Centennial Association, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2244) granting a pension to Mary L. Ellsworth, widow of Henry G. Ellsworth, late a first lieutenant of the United States Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BATE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPORTATION OF CHINESE PERSONS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I submit a resolution which I ask be read and lie on the table for the present.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate as to what steps have been taken, if any, by the Treasury Department looking to the deportation from the United States of all those Chinese persons who have failed to register as required by existing law.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. CALL, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and accede to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. HANSBROUGH were appointed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the communication from the House of Representatives now on our table upon the subject of the conference between the two Houses on House bill 4864 be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the Senate now await the further action of this body.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I shall vote for a motion to insist on the Senate amendments in the hope that a tariff bill may yet be evolved which will be enacted into law by Democratic votes. I supposed when we took a final vote upon the measure before us two weeks ago that such a bill had been perfected. But the events of the past twenty-four hours have shown us our error, and it is folly to deny that we are now confronted by the danger of no tariff legislation at this session. If this shall be the result, the responsibility can be fixed only by the people. Whether it shall rest upon the House of Representatives, which has repudiated in a wholly unprecedented manner the outcome of the deliberations of this body; or upon the President, whose fears of a departure from Democratic principles induced him to offer suggestions before the bill technically came before him for his consideration; or upon the Senate, which strove to harmonize wide differences of opinion by mutual concessions, is a question which can be determined only by the great mass of voters whose interests are at stake.

Whatever may be the attitude of my colleagues upon this point, I can only say for myself that I do not hesitate to accept the verdict of that tribunal as just and right.

I have always believed, Mr. President, and I believe now, that of all peoples in the civilized world the American people are most abundantly endowed with the priceless heritage of common sense.

Having that belief, and appreciating, in the face of the undisguised threats uttered and applauded by our party colleagues in the House of Representatives, the necessity of plain speaking, I wish to direct the candid consideration of fair-minded men to a brief statement of facts.

When the time came for the Democratic party to fulfill its pledges and reform the tariff, the House of Representatives contained a Democratic majority of 87. This fortunate condition alone made easy the task of securing the adoption of any party measure regardless of the local and State interests involved. But even this advantage in securing party legislation was hardly greater than that afforded by the adoption of rules which enabled the majority to close debate arbitrarily and prevent obstruction or delay of any kind. Under these circumstances no difficulty was experienced in passing a tariff bill despite the fact that its provisions were so offensive to some that the party line was broken and no less than 17 Democrats voted against the bill.

Still the majority was so large and the rules so well adapted to action that their defection was hardly noticed. I submit, therefore, Mr. President, that, whatever may have been the quality of the statesmanship and management which characterized the conduct of the original bill in the House, surely the highest order of ability was not absolutely essential to that "free and untrammeled action" on the part of the House conferees to which they seem to attach so much importance.

How different was the situation in the Senate. Here the Democratic majority was 3. The defection of only two would turn the Democratic majority into a Democratic minority. Practically every vote was needed to enact party legislation. Indeed, as a matter of fact, there has never been a time when 43 Senators would bind themselves to abide by the decree of a Democratic caucus. I apprehend, Mr. President, without designing the slightest reflection upon his capacity as a party leader, that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would have found this situation far more trying than that which enabled him to dispense with 17 Democratic votes and still retain a clear majority of nearly 60 in the House.

In any event, many times two Democratic Senators could not see their way clear, in justice to the interests of either their constituents or the whole country, to vote for the Wilson bill. Just how many held this position I can not say. I know that I was one. I made no concealment of the fact and I make none now.

The Committee on Finance, in charge of the bill, did not attempt to disguise the truth. They knew the bill could not pass in its original form. They recognized the situation as it was, and they met it, sir, to their everlasting honor as Democrats charged with the performance of a most difficult duty, like men. I do not suppose there was or is a Senator in the Chamber, Republican or Democrat, to whom some provisions of that bill, especially the income tax, seemed more offensive than myself.

But nothing less than the most intense self-satisfaction and bigotry could withstand the unflagging efforts of the Finance Committee to bring order out of chaos. Whatever may be the final outcome of this struggle, I can not refrain from seizing this opportunity to pay a tribute to the untiring zeal, earnest endeavors, and genuine self-sacrifice evinced by the members of that committee in performing their duty as Democrats and patriots devoted to the best interests of their country and their party.

Their efforts aroused the enthusiasm and won the hearty cooperation of others, and were crowned with success. A tariff-reform bill was perfected and passed by the Democratic majority of this body. It was not a radical measure. It was adapted to the unforeseen change in the industrial conditions of the country.

Unlike the Wilson bill, it contained no menace to the great industries of the nation, was designed to hasten rather than retard the resumption of business prosperity, would not have resulted in the reduction of the wages of a single workingman, but would have given employment to thousands now idle, and redounded to the credit and perpetuity of the Democratic party. Unlike the Wilson bill again, it was not drawn by a few representatives of sparsely settled districts with no great interests at stake, but was made acceptable to those who represented that section of the country which is most intimately concerned in any legislation affecting American industries and the interests of American workingmen.

It has been charged that a small minority of Northern Senators insisted upon consideration for the welfare of their constituents, and that in consequence of their demands the majority of Democratic Senators were constrained to make concessions. That is a fact. But, sir, it must not be forgotten that that minority were not only speaking for a vast majority of the people numerically, but caring for and protecting ninety-nine one-hundredths of the industries which have made this nation what it is to-day. They had a right to speak, and they were heard.

We are told that this is a protection bill, drawn at the dictation of protection Senators, in defiance of tariff-reform sentiment. Mr. President, I would not dignify so absurd a charge with a denial but for the fact that it has been advanced by our colleagues in the House of Representatives in support of the extraordinary position which some of them have seen fit to assume. A stranger unaccustomed to modern methods of making political capital might jump to the conclusion that Democratic Senators were of one mind as opposed to Democratic Representatives.

But, sir, everybody familiar with political conditions in this country knows that a large proportion of the Democratic membership of this body favors, not mere tariff reform, but absolute free trade, and this bill was as satisfactory to that element as to those of us who believe that the time has not yet come when moderate protection can be dispensed with without impairing our growth, progress, and prosperity. It did not contain room for further concessions to gratify radical tariff reformers. It contained the concessions themselves.

But now, Mr. President, suddenly, without warning of any kind, without ever having received an intimation of the kind while the bill was being perfected, we are accused of violating Democratic principles because we have not placed all raw materials upon the free list. The word "perfidy" is used, and, as an instance of our betrayal of Democracy, the fact that a duty still remains upon coal and iron ore is cited. I have only to say on this point that personally I believe in the theory of free raw materials. But I can not believe that now, when it is barely possible for miners to obtain living wages and when the newspapers have barely ceased to record the incidents of one of the greatest mining strikes the world has ever known, is the time to take the risk of striking down this great industry and robbing thousands upon thousands of miners of their means of livelihood.

This, sir, is one reason—the practical, considerate reason—why we have not put these articles upon the free list. Another, I grant, lies in the fact that by doing so we would have alienated Democratic Senators. But, sir, there is yet another of even greater importance.

There may be honest differences of opinion, Mr. President, as to what constitute Democratic principles when an income-tax proposition is taken from a Populist platform and incorporated into a Democratic revenue bill. But, sir, there was no misunderstanding in the minds of the American people regarding tariff reform when they voted in 1892. They accepted as correct, without the possibility of question, the interpretation of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. And he, sir, as you well remember, in his letter of acceptance, declared that principle and that purpose to be, not free raw materials, but freer raw materials.

Now, sir, what has the Democratic Finance Committee done and what has the Democratic Senate done regarding the articles in question? It has reduced the duty on chromic iron ore from 15 per cent to 4.39 per cent ad valorem; it has reduced the duty on all other ore from 42.70 per cent to 22.77 per cent ad valorem, and it has reduced the duty on coal from 75 to 40 cents per ton.

In view, sir, of the instances of stubborn self-sacrifice noted so earnestly and carefully in the House of Representatives yesterday, I may perhaps be permitted to say that neither of these products constitutes a material part of the industries of the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent. On the contrary, free coal and free iron ore would be a distinct advantage to all of my constituents. But, sir, these industries do figure very largely in the well-being at this time of thousands of our fellow-citizens in other States, and under the circumstances at this time, when every incentive is absolutely essential to general revival of business, I for one do not feel at liberty to depart from the Democratic principle so clearly enunciated by Mr. Cleveland.

The same policy was adhered to strictly in regard to each and every one of the schedules mentioned by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee as those upon which our action was unsatisfactory. We reduced the duty on silver-lead ore from 75.36 per cent to 37.6 per cent; we reduced the duty on metals 37.37 per cent, and on woolens more than 50 per cent.

But we are informed that the great difficulty in the pathway of an agreement in conference was a proper adjustment of the sugar schedule. This difference arose from the fact that a majority of 87 enabled the House to ride roughshod over the protests of representatives of sugar-producing States, while a majority of 3 was not sufficient to warrant like action in the Senate, even though there had been an inclination to perpetrate so gross an injustice. In view of the importance attached to this difference by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and of his threat, in the face of the President's injunction to the contrary and in flat defiance of his own doctrine of free raw materials to pass a single bill putting refined sugar only on the free list, it may be well to note the fact that the Senate made precisely the same disposition in regard to this article as of those already referred to.

The people now pay in the form of bounties about 2 cents on every pound of raw sugar produced. Under the Senate bill the consumers would pay 40 per cent ad valorem—about 1 cent a pound—a reduction of 50 per cent. The present law gives refined sugar a differential duty of one-half a cent per pound, which the Senate bill reduced to one-eighth. Under the revenue tax proposed, however, the refiner would receive in addition the advantage of the ad valorem duty upon the difference between the prices abroad of raw and refined sugars.

Taking the average prices in Hamburg from January, 1893, to June, 1894, as a basis of calculation, and adding the one-eighth additional, the total differential duty allowed the refiner is 14.90 cents per hundred pounds against 50 cents upon the same amount under the present law. The net result is a reduction of 70 per cent on the differential duty and additional revenue for the Government, instead of the payment of millions of dollars annually in the form of bounties.

In regard to the statistics, I ask consent to insert with my speech a statement of the figures of the price of refined sugars in Germany.

Unlike the production of coal and iron, the refining of sugar is one of the greatest industries of New Jersey, and I do no hesitate to say that, in my judgment, this reduction, one of the greatest of all made, is as large as it should be called upon to bear under present conditions.

I have dwelt briefly, Mr. President, upon each of the points complained of by the House conferees. I shall not tax the patience of the Senate by analyzing the remainder of the bill, which is not in dispute. I shall take the liberty, however, unless objection be made, of inserting in the RECORD a table, prepared in the Treasury Department, which shows, in totals, that if the duties provided by the Senate bill had been levied instead of those which were imposed during the past five years upon the same importations, the actual saving to the people of the United States in that time would have exceeded the enormous sum of $174,000,000.

As I understand the motion to be offered, it practically gives to the conferees on the part of the Senate an assurance of confidence, and instructs them to continue firm in support of the Senate amendment. I shall vote for the resolution, because that is the position which I wish to take. I believe, however, that our conferees have done their full duty, and, remembering their arduous labors during the past few months, I should consider it unjust to them to put upon them this additional burden for any great length of time.

So far as I am concerned—and I think I speak also for several of my colleagues—there has not been and will not be the slighest change in my position. I accepted the income tax in its modified form from a sense of duty to my party, but I did so with the greatest reluctance and with the distinct declaration, regarding other portions of the measure, that I would not vote for any bill or any amendment that would make it impossible for a single industry to continue or resume operations. I believe, sir, that the Committee on Finance will bear me out in the assertion that I have done everything in my power to aid them in their work.

It is true that I have urged the necessity of care and moderation in revising the schedules which directly concern the industries of my State, but I believe they will concede a disposition on my part to be fair and reasonable, and I know that I have demanded far greater concessions from my constituents than I have sought from the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, it has been charged that we are not sincere in our advocacy of the Senate bill; that we have made it for trading purposes, and that those of us who oppose the Wilson bill would rush into line at the first crack of the whip. I did not suppose, sir, that any person familiar with the character of this body would be misled by a notion so puerile. But it is evident from the attitude of our colleagues in the House that either they do not believe we meant what we said or they are willing to invite defeat of tariff legislation.

If the former, I have only to say that they have mistaken their men. If the latter, they must answer to the people for the defeat of a bill which should, and I believe would, satisfy all reasonable expectations.

I have tried, Mr. President, to define the position of my colleagues and myself with the candor and moderation befitting a member of this body. I have tried to speak dispassionately and in a spirit of friendliness rather than of hostility. I have tried to be frank, and have scrupulously avoided covert threats by inference or innuendo. I have not supposed cases of whose existence I know nothing. I have not said that if this or that be true, such and such must be done.

But, in the circumstances and in view of what has been said, I should certainly fail in my duty if I failed to speak with the utmost plainness. And so, sir, I say in conclusion, in all friendliness towards those who have aspersed our motives, that, so far as I am concerned, they need expect no further concessions. I have labored earnestly and honestly to bring about a satisfactory settlement of this question. But, sir, I have reached the limit. I have done.

It would be unbecoming in me, Mr. President, to suggest to our conferees what they should do. They are older and wiser and know what is best. But it is certainly fitting that they should understand the wishes of their colleagues. And so I say, for myself I know, and for many others I believe that, if I were a member of that committee I should say to the conferees from the House in answer to the defiance which has been flung in our faces: "Gentlemen, there is our bill. It is the result of great labor and infinite pains. It has met with the approval of both the free-trade and protection elements of our party. It is adapted to conditions, not theories. It is not perfect, but it is as nearly perfect as we can hope to make it at this session. In any event, such as it is, there it lies. You are at liberty to take it or to leave it."

That, sir, would be my position. I would not recede from it so much as a hair's breadth.

That, sir, is all I have to say. I trust that it will be considered sufficient.

Mr. HILL and Mr. GRAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to move that the Senate recede from its amendments to the bill as it came from the other House by which duties were imposed upon bituminous coal and iron ore, and I will proceed to speak upon the points involved in that motion.

Mr. President, a theory as well as a condition now confronts us. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries, as well as those who accept the courtesy of the Senate upon its floor, that there must be no further disorder. Any demonstration of approval or disapproval is in violation of the rules of the Senate. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. The theory of the Democratic party is that in the enactment of tariff legislation free raw materials should always be an essential and conspicuous element.

It is our creed that those things on which the industrial prosperity and progress of our country so much depend—the materials which enter into our manufactures—should be freed from the burden of tariff taxation. The best interests of the manufacturers as well as the consumers of the land demand the recognition of this wise discrimination.

We are committed to this side of the question, and we can not retreat and we can not retract. We are honorably bound to redeem our professions and our promises. Justice, good faith, and a decent regard for public sentiment all require this course.

Until recently I had supposed that there was no dispute upon this question of principle, but that every Democrat worthy of the name was willing to concede that if there was one thing more than another to which the Democratic party was committed, it was in favor of the doctrine of free raw materials; not simply freer raw materials as some now ingeniously contend, but absolutely free raw materials.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like the Senator from New York to state when the principle of free raw materials was ingrafted upon the doctrines of the Democratic party. In the Walker tariff law, the last attempt of the Democratic party to regulate our taxation, all raw materials were made dutiable, with very few exceptions. I should like to know when the Democratic party first announced the doctrine of free raw materials.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Ohio will be content to wait until I am through he will see how I demonstrate my proposition. I shall call a distinguished witness upon that point. I repeat, that we can not escape our record upon this subject, even if we are disposed to do so. The true and honest construction of every Democratic national platform for twelve years past irrevocably commits us to this just and reasonable principle.

What did our last national platform in 1892 say upon this point? Let me quote it:

> We indorse the efforts made by the Democrats of the present Congress to modify its [the McKinley law's] most oppressive features in the direction of free raw materials and cheaper manufactured goods that enter into general consumption, and we promise its repeal as one of the beneficent results that will follow the action of the people in intrusting power to the Democratic party.

To repeal the McKinley law in form simply, to reënact it in effect, is keeping this promise to the letter, but breaking it in spirit.

What were "the efforts made by the Democrats of the present Congress" [1892] to which this platform points with pride and deliberately approves? They were measures for free iron ore, free lead ore, free coal, and free wool, which were then pending in Congress, advocated by Democrats and opposed by Republicans, and some of which had then already passed or were subsequently passed.

Everybody knows to what the platform referred, and there was no necessity of any bill of particulars to inform the people. The Democratic position was so plain and is so clear that he who runs may read. The Democratic speeches in Congress were substantially all upon one side.

If any Democratic orator in any part of the country, forgetting the interests of the whole land and subserving the supposed interests of a locality, promised the people of any State or section that there would be any exception made to the enforcement of the general principle of free raw materials when the Democrats should obtain power, he exceeded his authority and misinterpreted our position.

It is said by some, in justification of or excuse for their present action, that the President's letter of acceptance in 1892 modified the extreme demands of our platform. It is true that some portions of his letter may tend to bear that construction.

It was not that bold, ringing, and explicit declaration in favor of the platform which his party had a right to expect, but was regarded by many as timid, cautious, and conservative; but whether this criticism is or is not well founded, the fact remains that he had no power or authority to change or alter one line or sentence or provision of the national platform which had been deliberately adopted in national convention duly assembled. No President can be above his party; no President can dictate to his party; no President can change his party's platform.

But no matter what idea it may be claimed was intended to be conveyed in his letter of acceptance in mitigation or modification of the platform, there can be no doubt as to the President's position at this time upon this essential principle of free raw materials. Let me read from that remarkable letter of the President's which was yesterday submitted to the House of Representatives. It expresses better than I can hope to do the true, sound, and logical position of the Democratic party upon this question.

Among other things he says:

> One topic will be submitted to the conference which embodies Democratic principle so directly that it can not be compromised.

Mark the words!

> We have in our platforms and in every way possible declared in favor of the free importation of raw materials. We have again and again promised that this should be accorded to our people and manufacturers as soon as the Democratic party was invested with the power to determine the tariff policy of the country. The party now has that power. We are certain today, as we have ever been, of the great benefit that would accrue to the country from the inauguration of this policy, and nothing has occurred to release us from our obligations to secure this advantage to our people. It must be admitted that no tariff measure can accord with Democratic principles and promises, or bear a genuine Democratic badge that does not provide for free raw material.

In these circumstances it may well excite our wonder that Democrats are willing to depart from this, the most Democratic of all tariff principles, and that the inconsistent absurdity of such a proposed departure should be emphasized by the suggestion that the wool of the farmer be put on the free list and the protection of tariff taxation be placed around the iron ore and coal of corporations and capitalists. How can we face the people after indulging in such outrageous discriminations and violations of principle?

It is quite apparent that this question of free raw material does not admit of adjustment on any middle ground, since their subjection to any rate of tariff taxation, great or small, is alike violative of Democratic principle and Democratic good faith.

Mr. President, I approve every word that I have here quoted. It is an honest and manly statement of the true attitude which the party should assume in this crisis. I am not required to defend the propriety or wisdom of the promulgation of this letter at this peculiar time.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator joins the President in expressing the opinion that the two Houses of Congress should be controlled in their legislation upon iron ore and coal by the fact of their ownership in this country. I should like the Senator to tell me, as I have no doubt he is able to do, who owns the coal and the iron ore that he and the President desire to have placed on the free list as a condition-precedent to the modification or repeal of the McKinley law?

Mr. HILL. I will answer the Senator. I do not know and I do not care. It makes no difference. I know to what the Senator undoubtedly refers. It may be brought out in this debate, and when it is I shall refer to it. I repeat, I do not know who owns a single coal or iron bed anywhere outside of this country and I do not care, and it makes no sort of difference in considering the question involved here.

It may have been indiscreet, it may operate as a firebrand to spread the flames of discord already kindled among party friends, honestly differing, as I am disposed to concede, upon questions of public and party policy. It may widen the breach already existing in this Senate, and in that view it may be regarded as unfortunate and ill-advised. It was a time for diplomacy, statesmanship, and conciliation, rather than recrimination, denunciation, and arraignment. But aside from the question of its mere expediency, I am here to defend the President's letter in so far as it demands that the party shall not be led astray into the violation of Democratic pledges and principles.

Upon the question of free raw materials the President is right and you know it. You can not answer his arguments. You can not successfully dispute his propositions. You can not doubt his sincerity and patriotism. You must yield in the end to his views. You can not stand up against the sentiment of the great Democratic masses of the country which will rally around the President in his contest with you upon this particular branch of the subject.

The time to yield is now, before there is further humiliation, embarrassment, and discord.

Mr. President, having demonstrated, as I think I have, that the true Democratic theory of revenue reform requires that free raw materials should be its distinguishing feature, let us next inquire what is the condition which now confronts us?

The Senate bill which has been passed violates this Democratic theory, and while it reduces the duty on iron, coal, lead, and some other raw materials from those imposed under the McKinley law, and in that respect is commendable, it nevertheless imposes some duties thereon, and thereby fails to redeem our pledges. It is not a question of the amount of duties which may be imposed; a question of principle is involved, and a single penny's duty violates our promises and places us in a false position. As the President well says, there can be no compromise on a matter of this character, where a vital principle is at stake.

The House of Representatives, fresh from the people, which represents more distinctly and peculiarly than we do the taxing power of the people, repudiates our bill, and a Democratic President has emphasized that repudiation, and the condition which confronts us is one of extreme embarrassment. Shall we retreat or advance? Shall we surrender to the House while we can do so honorably, or shall we wait until we are driven to it?

Mr. President, in the light of the letter of the President of the United States the House can not honorably retreat. It has no other alternative except to insist upon its bill wherein it provides for free raw materials. The President can not approve the Senate bill after what he has said in this remarkable letter, a portion of which I have read.

He arraigns the Senate, and intimates that the enactment of the Senate bill means "party perfidy and party dishonor." These are strong words, sir, which the President of the United States would not use toward a measure which he ever expected afterward to approve.

This letter, unusual and unprecedented in its character and method of promulgation though it may be, nevertheless clearly foreshadows a veto of the Senate bill, even if the House should finally concur in our amendments. What person would expect the President to approve the Senate bill after its vigorous and scathing denunciation contained in his letter. You would think less of him for his glaring inconsistency.

No, this letter is significant; it is a bold, vigorous, even if imprudent letter; it means war to the knife against the Senate bill; it justifies much that has been said against the Senate bill during all the last three months; it means that it can never receive Executive approval; it means that the Senate can not be permitted to abandon or surrender the great underlying principles for which we struggled and lost in 1888 and fought and won in 1892.

The President is right; there is no middle ground which we can occupy.

No bill which does not provide for free raw materials can be permitted to become a law.

It is unnecessary to enter into any argument to define or designate what articles constitute raw materials. Every Democrat knows what they are. Any article may be considered raw material when it is in the lowest or crudest form into which it enters into commerce. That definition is ample and sufficient, and will redeem our pledges if it is honestly applied.

Mr. President, I have thus far indorsed all that the President of the United States has so appropriately said upon the subject of the importance of securing free raw materials for the benefit of the manufacturers, the consumers, and the people of the country. Nothing more need be said by me upon that point.

If the President in his wisdom had seen fit, while the debate was progressing in the Senate, to have aided my efforts to secure adhesion to this principle by expressing his views in favor thereof in some proper and legitimate way, I should have been gratified, and it unquestionably would have been of practical benefit to the cause. I rejoice that he has expressed them even now, although I am not required to defend the manner and form of their presentation, which I do not assume.

I respectfully differ from the President in his assumption that a tax upon sugar is necessary at this time, conceding for the purposes of the argument that an income tax is to be retained. Clearly both are not needed for any legitimate purposes of the Treasury. That fact has been demonstrated over and over again during this debate. The President speaks of the "Democratic principle and policy which lead to the taxation of sugar." He asserts that in the taxation of sugar "we are in no danger of running counter to Democratic principle."

I am not now controverting that idea, but desire only to suggest that if it was desirable that sugar should be taxed "as a legitimate and logical article of revenue taxation," as he now says, it seems strange that the President did not in his last annual message make some intimation, suggestion, or recommendation to that effect. Not a word of that kind appears.

He indorsed the Wilson bill explicitly in his message, although it provided substantially for free raw sugar. He permitted the House to pass that measure without a word of protest, suggestion, or advice that there should be a tax upon sugar, which has come to be largely regarded as one of the necessaries of life.

Secretary Carlisle, the trusted financial officer of his Cabinet, speaking unquestionably ex cathedra, outlined with great care the essential provisions of the proposed tariff reform bill, but made no recommendation whatever for a tax upon sugar. While free sugar was being carried through the House the Administration remained quiet and passive; but now, after the House has acted and the country has been led to expect free sugar, the Administration shows its hand and declares for a duty upon it.

I am not now antagonizing its suggestion; I am simply stating the facts of recent history. Under the existing circumstances—with an income tax retained in this bill, I voted for free sugar before, and I shall do so again.

In my judgment the House can not now honorably retreat from its position in favor of free sugar. The President's suggestion came too late. The Senate must recede from its amendments.

Mr. President, I said that the country had been led to expect free sugar. When the House passed the Wilson bill containing a provision for free sugar it met with universal approbation on the part of the Democracy of the country from one end of it to the other. Resolutions were passed distinctly by conventions, by clubs, by Democrats everywhere, favoring that distinct principle. I read from Evansville, Ind.:

HILL, BRICE, AND GORMAN DENOUNCED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., May 25.

The First district Democrats, who last night renominated ARTHUR H. TAYLOR for Congress, adopted resolutions denouncing Senators HILL, BRICE, and GORMAN as the Benedict Arnolds of the Democratic party, and demanding that sugar be put on the free list.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by my colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, who happens to be here, to say that that statement is absolutely false; that there was no such declaration in the resolutions.

Mr. HILL. I read the Washington Post every morning with great care, and on the 26th——

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not care what you read. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. That may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hopes he will not again have to admonish the occupants of the galleries and gentlemen on the floor of the Senate accepting the courtesies of the Senate to preserve order. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. This appears to be a regular Associated or United Press dispatch from Evansville, Ind. That is all, of course, that I know in regard to it. Those dispatches are usually correct; but of course I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator from Indiana that Mr. TAYLOR says that what I have read was not contained in the resolutions.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish simply to state that I know Mr. TAYLOR, I know his character, and I stake my own on his, and if the Senator from New York or anybody else makes an issue of veracity with him, it will be met very promptly.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, does the Senator from Indiana think the Senator from New York is courting an issue of veracity?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know what he is courting. His actions seem to be very strange to me.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, is the Senator so afraid of that resolution that he thinks it would be unworthy of his constituents to pass such a resolution? Does the Representative in Congress from Indiana, who was nominated upon some sort of platform, want to stand upon some other bill than that portion of the Wilson bill? I speak of this fact——

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from New York need not assume that tone towards me. I wish to say to him that I fear nothing, absolutely, not even the Senator from New York in any form or in any shape, or in anything he can say or do. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I am glad to hear it, Mr. President. [Laughter.] I felt a little concern over the fact, and now we thoroughly understand one another.

I was casting no reflection upon the Senator from Indiana, and he need not go out of his way to pick a quarrel with me; but he seems to be remarkably sensitive over the fact that somewhere, even though the information may not be strictly correct, Indiana was denouncing me for coalition with other gentlemen in voting against free sugar, when I had voted consistently from the start in favor of free sugar.

I speak of this simply to show that the Democracy of the country upon the passage of the Wilson bill approved of it—perhaps not in all of its features, but approved at least distinctly of that provision of the Wilson bill which declared for free sugar. That is the point I desire to make; and it matters not whether this Associated and United Press dispatch is correct or not.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives is right, in my humble judgment, and reflected the demands of the Democratic party of the country when, under the circumstances, it placed sugar upon the free list in this bill. I say to the Senators around me, they misinterpret Democratic sentiment, and I think, the President himself misinterprets Democratic sentiment, when he asks, under the existing circumstances, that a duty shall be placed upon sugar.

One further suggestion, Mr. President. I welcome the President of the United States to the platform of opposition to an income tax. In the letter which he wrote Mr. WILSON on some day in July—the precise figure is a little obscure—he says:

You know how much I deprecated the incorporation in the proposed bill of the income-tax feature.

This is the first time that I have heard of that proposition. The President does not say that the country knows it, he does not say that the Democracy knows it, he says "you know it"—Mr. WILSON knows it—and Mr. WILSON has kept that information within his own breast from that day to this hour.

I have before me the message of the President of the United States, and, if I can read the English language, he substantially recommended an income-tax feature, perhaps not the one contained in this bill; perhaps it may be said that his recommendation was for a separate measure. In that respect the President is entirely right. If, however, he was speaking of this bill, then I think, if I can read the English language correctly, there was a distinct recommendation—not it is true, of this particular form of income tax, but of a modified income tax upon certain corporate investments. The President now says:

You know how much I deprecated the incorporation in the proposed bill of the income-tax feature.

I am glad to learn it. The word "deprecate" means what? It means to "pray against as an evil; to seek to avert by prayer [laughter]; to desire the removal of; to seek deliverance from; to express deep regret for; to disapprove of strongly." That is what Webster says is meant by the word "deprecate."

Mr. President, I simply cite this at the close of my remarks for the purpose of showing that the President of the United States, so often quoted in this debate here and in the House of Representatives as favoring the income tax, now comes forward, even at this late hour, and says he deprecates the putting of any such income tax in this tariff-reform bill. I trust that those sentiments of the President, which usually have weight with Senators around this circle and with Representatives in the other House, will have weight now.

I have expressed my views upon the incorporation of the income tax in this bill, and I do not propose to inflict any further argument upon the Senate in that regard. I simply say it has been from the start a disturbing feature of this measure. Eliminate it, and I stand ready to join with you earnest, honest, sincere tariff reformers around this circle to make a just and honest revenue bill, a revenue bill which shall place raw materials upon the free list, a revenue bill which, in my judgment, will meet the demands of the country.

The bill as it passed the Senate has been discredited by the Democracy of the country. Senators must be blind to the signs of the times if they can not see that it does not have the approval of the Democratic masses. In my judgment, it is our duty to recede from the two amendments to which I have called the attention of the Senate by the resolution which I have offered.

Mr. President, I desire to perfect this bill. I know it will be said by Senators around me that my views ought not to be considered because I do not intend to support the bill. I wish to be frank with you. So long as the income-tax feature remains a part of the bill I can not conscientiously support it; and I have before stated the reasons why I can not.

I still insist upon that position. I do not propose, however, to abdicate my position here as a Senator; but I desire to perfect the bill; I desire to amend it; I desire to make it as defensible a bill as possible before the people of the country and before the Democratic masses. In that view and in that line, I have offered the motion that the Senate shall recede.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives is right upon the question; the Democratic masses are right upon it; the President is right upon it. The amendments which I have offered will perfect the bill. Let us take them now, rather than wait until some other day.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is a subject of congratulation with every Democrat that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the President of the United States are at last able to stand together upon any platform at all. [Laughter.] They are both now urgently pleading with members of this Congress for the enactment of a law which will give to us absolutely free raw materials.

But these distinguished statesmen have arrived at this unification of opinion after much intellectual struggle, and are now subject to the charge of much inconsistency. So far as harmony can be produced, even to a limited extent, within the Democratic party, I join in the congratulations which must come from every portion of the country upon this union at last of these two distinguished gentlemen.

The political millennium seems to have come upon us, at least in a modified degree. The lion and the lamb of New York have lain down together, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House now leads them. [Laughter.] Which is the lion and which the lamb I leave for future adjustment, for I am not bold enough now to enter upon that discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Senator from New York tells us, as does the President of the United States, that the cardinal principle of Democratic faith in regard to tariff reform is free raw material. The President even goes further than the distinguished Senator from New York, and says that it is perfidy to Democratic doctrine and principle to consider tariff reform unless free raw materials be embodied in that reform. First, let me ask the Senator from New York, when he arraigns the Finance Committee and the Democratic party of the Senate for placing a duty upon coal and iron ore, why he declined to vote for free wool when the yeas and nays were called in this Chamber upon that issue?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I have stated distinctly that in the Committee of the Whole on several occasions I did not vote upon some of the motions. In the Senate I voted distinctly for free wool.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if my soul were burning with enthusiasm for free raw material, if I could not rest at night because the Democratic party was going to its death by putting a duty upon raw material, I should stand on no parliamentary technicalities as to the Committee of the Whole or the open Senate; but I would rush here at the peril of my life to put myself on record for this great, cardinal, elementary doctrine. The yeas and nays were called, and the Senator from New York admits that he declined to vote for free wool; and yet the wool and woolen schedule is the palladium of protection, the citadel of the protectionist in this tariff question.

Mr. President, we are told by his excellency the President of the United States, in language so emphatic that it can not be added to in that respect, and which has been read by the Senator from New York, that no modification of this doctrine shall be made in regard to free raw material; that the imposition of any duty, however small, upon raw material is an abandonment of the teachings and doctrines of the Democratic party; yet in 1887 Mr. Cleveland sent a message to Congress in which he said:

> The radical reduction of the duties imposed on raw material used in manufactures, or its free importation, is of course an important factor in any effort to reduce the price of these necessaries; it would not only relieve them from the increased cost caused by the tariff on such material, but the manufactured product being thus cheapened, that part of the tariff now laid upon such product, as a compensation to our manufacturers for the present price of raw material, could be accordingly modified. Such reduction, or free importation, would serve beside to largely reduce the revenue.

It is apparent that the President at that time did not consider the modification of the duties upon raw material to be a crime against the principles of the Democratic party, as he now declares in the letter from which the Senator from New York has read.

My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] hands to me the letter of acceptance of the President, in which he says:

> Recognizing these truths, the national Democracy will seek by the application of just and sound principles to equalize to our people the blessings due them from the Government they support, to promote among our countrymen a closer community of interests cemented by patriotism and national pride, and to point out a fair field, where prosperous and diversified American enterprise may grow and thrive in the wholesome atmosphere of American industry, ingenuity, and intelligence.
> Tariff reform is still our purpose. Though we oppose the theory that tariff laws may be passed having for their object the granting of discriminating and unfair governmental aid to private ventures, we wage no exterminating war against any American interests. We believe a readjustment can be accomplished in accordance with the principles we profess without disaster or demolition. We believe that the advantages of freer raw material should be accorded to our manufacturers, and we contemplate a fair and careful distribution of necessary tariff burdens rather than the precipitation of free trade.

This was the letter of acceptance of 1892, yet we are told now by the President of the United States that the bare contemplation of a reduction in the duties imposed upon raw materials is perfidy to the Democratic party and an attack upon its fundamental doctrines.

Mr. President, the time has come for plain speaking in regard to the matter now pressing itself upon the people of the United States. I have been the consistent friend of the present occupant of the executive chair. I defended him in the Senate when his friends could be counted upon the fingers of one hand. I shall continue to defend him so long as I believe that his aims and objects are in consonance with the success of the Democratic party, which I believe necessary to the glory and honor of this country.

But the Democratic party is greater than any man. It survived Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and it will outlive Grover Cleveland. He does not embody all the Democracy and all the tariff reform of this country. He has no right to disregard the spirit of the Constitution. He has no right to trample upon the sensibilities and obligations of other members of his party for any purpose whatever. When it reaches the limit of self-respect, I shall consider myself fettered by no other obligations than those of my conscience and my duty to the country.

Where does the President of the United States find his right, by private letter or personal appeal, to influence the legislation of Congress? The Constitution of the United States gives him the right and imposes upon him the duty to give Congress information as to the condition of the Union, and to suggest such measures of legislation as he may deem just and expedient.

When our fathers declared that there should be three great coördinate departments of this Government, absolutely independent of each other, did they mean that the President of the United States by the use of patronage, by the shadow of the great office, the greatest upon earth, which the people have given him, should, in the teeth of the Constitution, put into the hands of the conferees, instructed to have a full and free conference upon matters in dispute between the two Houses, a personal appeal to his party friends to stand by his views upon any public question?

Mrs. Adams, the wife of the second President of the United States, in some memoirs which can be obtained in the Congressional Library, gives a quaint reason why the Capitol was placed at one end of Pennsylvania avenue and the White House at the other. It was, said that good lady, to prevent the President from exercising undue influence upon the deliberations of Congress.

But, Mr. President, in a conference committee, where the conferees are instructed to have a full and free conference, the President of the United States has deliberately injected his personal appeal and his personal opinion in order in advance to influence the vote upon a measure on which, under his oath and the obligations of the Constitution, he is at last to pass. He is a part of the lawmaking power of this Government, but his functions begin only after the Houses of Congress, unswerved and uninfluenced by the executive or the judiciary, have passed upon the question placed before them.

The President of the United States, without waiting until the Constitution places this duty upon him, in a private letter to the chairman of the conferees upon the part of the House of Representatives, throws his personal authority, the weight of his great office, his hold upon the American people, into the scales, and demands from the Senate that it shall accede to his views in regard to tariff reform, or that we virtually shall be unable to enter into any canvass upon a bill such as we think meets the demands and exigencies of the hour.

Mr. President, that portion of the letter which has struck me with more alarm than anything I have heard during the course of my public life since the declaration of war between the States thirty years ago, is the statment by the President that it was impossible, without treason to the party to which we belong, without perfidy to the principles which we profess, that a bill, adopted solemnly by one branch of the National Legislature, should become a law by the votes of his political associates. If that can be done by the President of the United States, what becomes of the theory of the Constitution that each department of the Government shall in its sphere be independent of all the others?

What becomes of our boasted republican institutions, our freedom from all except the limitations of the Constitution? If the President can do this, he can send his Cabinet ministers to us, he can use his executive patronage over us, he can do as was done in regard to the silver question—punish recalcitrant Democratic Senators who did not accept his views in regard to the free coinage of silver.

But what mockery it is to talk of a full and free conference when one conferee has in his pocket at the time when he goes into conference the views if not the instructions of the President of the United States as to what shall be done? It has been said in another place, of which I can not speak without violating the rules of this body, that the Senate conferees appeared fettered hand and foot, and in sadness informed their brothers of the other House that they were not at liberty to do as they pleased.

Sir, my sadness would have been infinitely increased if I had known that at that time, in the pocket of one of the conferees of the other House, was a letter from the President of the United States informing us as to our duty in the face of the instruction that we should have a full and free conference in regard to the matters in dispute between the two Houses.

Now, Mr. President, a few plain words in a brief résumé of the history of this tariff bill. I shall content myself by saying that no one has made greater sacrifices of opinion than I in supporting the bill as it passed the Senate. The first bill reported from the Finance Committee, or the Democratic members of that committee, provided for free iron ore, free lead, free lumber, free wool, free zinc, and a duty of 40 cents a ton on coal.

That bill came or was about to come to the full Finance Committee of the Senate when a caucus of Democratic Senators was called, and after three days' deliberation, as all the world knows, we were told to go out and prepare such a bill as would command a majority of the Democratic votes in this Chamber. It is easy enough for those who are at a distance and without responsibility resting upon them to assail Democrats in this Chamber and denounce them for making weak and cowardly compromises and concessions.

What was the situation with which we were confronted? We knew that the overwhelming voice of the Democratic party in the United States was in favor of the repeal of the McKinley act and the lessening duties imposed by that legislation. We knew that the country had been carried on that issue. We realized that we were instructed above all things to relieve the country from the inordinate taxation imposed by the McKinley act. We were confronted with the alternative of going back to our people and saying to them that we were utterly incapable of carrying out the instructions of our party or of making an improvement upon the McKinley act, and which lessened the duties imposed upon the people.

What was our duty? That was the question presented to me. When the President of the United States says in his letter that we have now the power to pass any law we please, I beg most respectfully to take issue with him. All the world knows now, without elaboration of detail, that it was impossible to pass the Wilson bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

All the world knows now, unless it chooses to believe a falsehood willfully, that the only possibility of enacting anything in place of the McKinley act is to accept the measure which, after four months of such toil, responsibility, and harassing service as I shall never endure again, has been sent to the House of Representatives. When the President, secure in the White House, reads to us a lecture about our cowardly surrender, does he realize the circumstances which surround us? Does he know that we were confronted with the alternative of taking this bill or of taking nothing?

I, for one, determined that question for myself, and I stand here to-day fully responsible for my action. The bill does not meet my views. I am known to be an extreme tariff reformer; but when I was confronted with the necessity of taking this or of giving my acquiescence to the McKinley act remaining upon the statute book, I did not hesitate for one instant. I should like to see free coal, free iron ore, free lead, free zinc, free lumber, free wool; but if I can not get all, I shall take what I can get, and trust that a time may come more propitious, when the people of the United States will go further in the direction of tariff reform.

Mr. President, for us to be told now, after what we have endured and suffered, after libel, slander, calumny in all its black and tortuous details, that we, who were tariff reformers before the President commenced his phenomenal career are false to this great truth, is beyond the limit of human endurance, and for one I shall protest most vehemently against it.

A traveler who toils up his weary course along the mountain side knows that he can not reach the summit in a single hour or day. He is confronted by some marble cliff, by some icy glacier, and must by strategy make his way around, but if animated by the certainty that he must succeed at last, he will eventually stand upon the highest peak and then look back upon the toil and danger as anxious memories.

I hope that the time may come when the full fruition of my hopes in regard to tariff reform may be witnessed, but until I can get a better bill I shall take such a measure as can be enacted by the Congress of the United States, and I shall not receive my instructions from any other source in regard to my duties as a conferee than from the Senate. No President, no Administration, has the right to dictate to me what I shall consider to be my duty to the people of Missouri and of the United States.

I do not care to go further into what is at best an unpleasant task. I do not care to state more now than that the bill as it is before the Senate will, in my judgment, become a law, or the McKinley act will remain upon the statute book. I wish it were otherwise, but I shall not hesitate to go back to those who have intrusted me with the responsibility which I now bear and say to them, under all the circumstances, as a Democrat and a tariff reformer, I did the best I could.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator from Missouri sits down I should like to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri desire the Senate to understand that the Democratic managers of the conference on the part of the Senate were not aware of the existence of the President's letter of instruction for the seventeen days which elapsed from the 2d of July until the 19th?

Mr. VEST. I speak only for myself. I never heard of the letter until it was read yesterday in the House of Representatives. I had no more idea of its existence than I have now of what is being transacted in Asia Minor or Africa. I say, in addition, and I neglected to state it, that I was under the impression at the time those amendments were offered that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury were fully cognizant of their nature.

I know personally that the Secretary of the Treasury knew the difficulties which we were encountering, and that he urged us to secure the passage of some bill in place of the McKinley act, and that he agreed with me that the greatest disaster possible that could come to this country would be the failure of the Democratic party to enact a tariff bill in this Congress. When, therefore, this letter, placing upon the Senate of the United States the odium of having framed this bill and departed from the cardinal principles of the Democratic party, was made public, I use but a mild expression when I say it struck me with infinite amazement.

I am not here, Mr. President, to defend or to attack the Administration, but I am here to defend the rectitude of my motives and those of my colleagues in what we have done. I shall not make the speech which was made by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] in defense of the President. It reminded me of a desperate murder case I tried in my early life, when I was compelled to plead the abnormal and natural moral depravity of my client to such an extent that he was incapable of committing crime. [Laughter.] After I cleared him he came to me and said, "I am obliged to you for having gotten me off, but I would rather go to the penitentiary for life than to hear that speech again." [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I rose this morning as the Senator from New York was recognized, after this matter had been called to the attention of the Senate, for the purpose of submitting a motion which I then supposed was in order. I do not know now whether, after the motion of the Senator from New York, the motion I then intended to submit would be in order. It was a motion that the Senate insist upon its amendments and consent to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives. If that motion is now in order I will offer it. If it is not, I will offer it when it shall be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it will be in order at this time to make the motion, but the motion of the Senator from New York will take precedence. The question must first be taken on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GRAY. I then make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The SECRETARY. A motion that the Senate shall insist upon its amendments and consent to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not think it necessary to detain the Senate by saying anything in support of the motion that I have just submitted, or in regard to the motion now before the Senate offered by the Senator from New York. It suffices me to say that there is nothing in the situation, nothing that has occurred, so far as I am informed, in the conference between the Senate and the House upon the bill which lately passed the Senate with amendments, that makes any unusual course on the part of the Senate necessary or proper.

Although I can not speak with absolute certainty, I do not believe there will be found a precedent in the recent history of the Senate where it has, on the first report of a disagreement between the two Houses, and surrounded by conditions anything approximating those which now exist, determined to recede from the position it had taken after due deliberation, or to incontinently retreat in the face of the determined stand of the other House, or of threats from any quarter, be they what they may.

Mr. President, the bill passed the Senate in its present shape with my vote. It probably could not have passed without my vote; it certainly looked so at one time. And so might every Senator say who voted for it. The conditions out of which the Senate bill came were unusual, and they need not be recited here. Difficulties presented themselves in the path of those who were earnest, loyal tariff reformers that seemed at one time insuperable. But with a degree of patience, forbearance, wisdom, and practical statesmanship that I have not in my short service here seen equaled, those difficulties were so far overcome that a sufficient number of votes were obtained upon this side of the Chamber to pass a substantial measure of tariff reform—a measure which was as objectionable to those who supported the McKinley bill that it repealed as the Wilson bill itself.

No enemy of tariff reform rejoiced in the passage of the Senate bill. Every enemy of tariff reform did what he could, properly and honestly enough, I think, to throw obstructions in its path, to interfere with its progress in the Senate, to sow the seeds of discord and confusion among the friends of a measure that would in some degree take the burden off the bowed back of American labor and give some relief to the tax-ridden people of this country. That measure, therefore, had my free support, although it goes without saying, to those who know me, that it does not reach the standard of tariff reform which I would gladly live up to.

It does not mark the achievements in the direction of wise tariff legislation that I would rejoice to see completed; but as the Senator from Missouri said, it did record the best efforts of those who in the face of appalling difficulties succeeded at last in doing that thing. It seemed almost impossible at one time to succeed in bringing the consent of 30 Senators to a measure of substantial and real tariff reform and relief of tax burdens.

Now, Mr. President, at every stage in the progress of the bill through the Senate the enemies of the Democratic party, the enemies of what we conceive and I conceive to be sound views in regard to tariff taxation, have attempted to thwart, to hinder, to interrupt, and to prevent if possible the passage of any measure that would modify in any substantial degree what the Democratic platform declared to be the enormities of the McKinley tariff taxation.

When the bill first came into the Senate from the Finance Committee the other side of the Chamber, with its earnest, zealous, and able opponents of tariff reform, made the air vocal with their taunts that there was no agreement on this side in regard to any bill, and challenging the Democratic party that before they brought a bill here for discussion and for serious debate they should agree among themselves, believing, as I have no doubt they did believe, that such an agreement was impossible. When at last it began to be evident that such an agreement was possible and had obtained, then the same enemies of tariff reform changed their base of attack, and jeered at and taunted the Democratic party because, forsooth, with what they called a departure from the principles of their own platform, that they were not in favor of absolute free trade; and that in this particular and in that particular the bill fell short of the demands of the Democratic voters who had placed the party in power.

I am not criticising my friends on the other side who took that course. It was natural. It was skillful leadership. I only want to call the attention of my friends on this side and of Democratic reformers in the country to the attitude which the two sides of this Chamber occupied towards each other during the progress of the bill through the Senate.

Mr. President, in the process of arriving at a measure that would command 43 votes in the Senate, it goes without saying (there are none so fond and foolish as not to know) that concession was necessary on one side and the other. Of course views had to be compromised. Who ever heard of an agreement between two, much less than forty-three independent minds, in which there did not have to be concession on one side and the other? Yet we hear concession spoken of as if there were something unusual, abnormal, and unworthy in the suggestion; whereas it is usual and necessary and most worthy where the end to be accomplished is a high and patriotic one, as in this instance it was.

Mr. President, I had my views when we were in the process of arriving at this result. I urged them with such vehemence and such argument as I was able to command upon my fellows in the Senate. I was in favor of free iron and free coal when the Senator from New York was placing every obstacle that his experience and ability could command in the pathway of obtaining either.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Delaware explain what he means by that?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I am not to be betrayed——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. All I can say is, that upon every occasion, and usually upon my own motion, when the question was presented for free raw material, for freedom from duty on iron ore and coal, I voted every time for that proposition.

Mr. GRAY. There are thirty Senators within the sound of my voice who know that what I said is absolutely true.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator in justice to me should explain what he means.

Mr. GRAY. I have already in what I have said sufficiently explained; but I will repeat, that when we were in process of agreeing or endeavoring to agree to a measure that would command a sufficient number of votes, the voice of the Senator from New York was not heard by me, and I will venture to say it was not heard by the majority of Senators on this side, in favor of either free coal or free iron that he advocates to-day.

Mr. HILL. I do not know to what occasion the Senator refers. I will simply say——

Mr. GRAY. I say on no occasion.

Mr. HILL. I do not understand the Senator. It must have been——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly, I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. HILL. On every occasion in the Senate in which the question has been presented I have advocated the absence of duty on iron and coal. Does the Senator dispute that proposition?

Mr. GRAY. I do not know, and I was not speaking of what is the Senator's record in the Senate.

Mr. HILL. To what other record does the Senator refer?

Mr. GRAY. I was speaking of what my language clearly indicated, that in the effort on this side of the Chamber to come to an agreement on a tariff measure which would command 43 votes the voice of the Senator from New York was not heard by me, and I will venture to say it was not heard by any other Senator here, advocating either free coal or free iron.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I know of no occasion, at any time or place, of which it can be said that I have not held the very views I have expressed here, and I expressed them on every proper occasion.

Mr. GRAY. Has the Senator from New York any recollection of a conference of Democratic Senators where the attempt was made, and first made, and long continued, to obtain an agreement on this very bill?

Mr. HILL. I recollect distinctly that conference, sir, and shall never forget it. I recollect distinctly that upon that occasion I expressed my opposition to an income tax. I argued that. I refrained from interfering upon the details of the bill. Does the Senator mean to say that at that conference I expressed any opposition to the principle which I now lay down? If so, let him not confine himself to intimation or insinuation. Let him state what I said.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New York shall not betray me into the impropriety of disclosing what occurred in a Democratic caucus.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is at liberty, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. I repeat what I said, that I never heard the voice of the Senator from New York raised in advocacy of either free coal or free iron, and I venture to say there is not a Senator within the sound of my voice who heard it upon that occasion.

Mr. HILL. I am not aware that I spoke on the subject. Others spoke upon the subject. I listened to what was said. I made some suggestion to those around me. The Senator will not say that simply because I did not choose to monopolize the time of the caucus I was bound by any other conclusion or that I was compelled to express my views upon any and all occasions? I did, sir, in those caucuses, express my views upon most of these questions, and the Senator is at liberty to state what I said.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it is very far from my wish to get into a personal controversy with the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Then——

Mr. GRAY. But the Senator from New York has arraigned his fellows in the Senate here. He has voted against the measure upon which they agreed and he defiantly tells them to-day, while lecturing those who have always advocated free raw material, that he will not vote for the bill if we put a duty on those articles. I decline to take instructions from such a source.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator mean to say in the heat of argument that I am endeavoring to instruct him?

Mr. GRAY. Is the Senator through?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator has delivered himself this morning upon the subject, on his motion to put coal and iron upon the free list, and in so doing he has, as I conceive, endeavored to instruct his fellows, as he has a right to do where he occupies a position that permits it. But I say that he has no right to instruct me as to the details of a measure which he declines to support.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have not endeavored or intended to instruct the Senator. I have submitted and expressed the views which I hold why I am in favor of free raw material, and I have not intended to reflect upon any other Senator. If the expression of those views has reflected upon some other Senators, then I can not help it. I have the same right which the Senator from Delaware has to express my views upon the details of the bill. Whether I vote for the bill or whether I do not makes no sort of difference; I am entitled to express my views. I have expressed them, and it is because the Senator does not like them that he is squirming now.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator from New York——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PUGH. Allow me to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. HILL. I can not——

Mr. PUGH. I thought I had your permission.

Mr. HILL. Not until I have the floor and can answer the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama, and of course the Senator from New York may answer the question.

Mr. PUGH. I understand I have the permission of the Senator from Delaware to make——

Mr. HILL. I decline now, during the speech of the Senator from Delaware and after what he has said, to permit the question to be asked. When I take the floor and reply to him, if occasion permit, the Senator from Alabama can ask me the question.

Mr. PUGH. I thought I would close the controversy by a question.

Mr. HILL. It might renew it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I have ardently longed for a measure of tariff reform that would include free iron and free coal. I have done all that in me lay to bring about a result that would include free iron and free coal; and I am willing to compare my record with that of the Senator from New York in that regard. But, sir, I say I shall not yield to the temptation of self-exploitation, of airing my own views on tariff reform, nor do I desire to gain a little brief applause by declaring what drastic measures I might be in favor of if I had the power and the right to frame a bill that would contain and embody my own views. Those of my friends who take sufficient interest in my record to think on the subject at all know what those views are. They are as extreme as the extremest of the intelligent defenders of tariff reform.

The distinguished gentleman who has done so much for the great cause of tariff reform by his eloquent tongue and his incisive pen, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, will not go further, will not brave more opposition, will not make greater sacrifices to obtain a measure of practical tariff reform than will I. I will go where he dares lead and I will lead where he dares follow if practical results can be obtained.

But, Mr. President, if I have learned anything by my service in this body and by my comparatively short career in public life, I have learned that practical results are not always in strict accord with the theories and with the ideals of those who conspire to produce them. We are often obliged by circumstances to take the best that we can get, if it is moving in our direction. If we will turn our face towards absolute free trade I will march with that army, be its pace more or less slow or more or less fast. I will move on a double-quick if I can, and I will take the regulation step if I can not.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the tariff reformer is to be hounded down and brought into disrepute because he may differ with some of his colleagues as to the rate of progress that is possible toward the goal that we all desire. The beautiful imagery with which the Senator from Missouri closed his speech typifies our efforts, and aptly illustrates what has been done and what will be done in the future in order to reach the mountain top, where the sunlight of unrestricted commerce and unfettered trade shall at last shine upon the American people.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has alluded to the attacks which have been made on this side of the Chamber upon the Senate bill as a violation of Democratic principles and as an abandonment of Democratic promises and platforms. Have not those attacks been fully justified by the utterances of his personal and political friend, the highest authority in the Democratic party, the President of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think so. I only answer that in the negative. The President of the United States is amply able to vindicate himself. He has the ear and the confidence of the American people, and he can always command their attention when he desires to speak to them. They have not as yet betrayed him, and I know he has never betrayed them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Delaware agree with the utterances and expressions of the semiofficial letter which has just been alluded to?

Mr. GRAY. I am as much in favor of free iron and free coal as the President possibly can be. I do not know but that I was in favor of them before he had ever formulated the proposition to himself for his own consent and approval.

Mr. ALDRICH. But I understand, if the Senator will allow me, that the attitude of the President is that the imposition of a duty, however small, upon either iron ore or coal is an act of perfidy and dishonor.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island is back at his old practices again, trying to do the best he can to produce confusion and discord in the Democratic ranks. Now that he sees the opportunity to aid the Senator from New York, who has made the defense of the President, in order to get up a division between the President of the United States and the Democratic party in the Senate. I do not think he will be able to do it. I do not blame him for wanting to do it. It is quite natural that he should wish to do it. But let me prophesy—I do not often indulge in prophecies—that his desires and wishes in that respect are doomed to disappointment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that evidently it does not require any action either on the part of the Senator from Rhode Island or the Senator from New York to produce that result.

Mr. GRAY. That may be, but the Senator from Rhode Island is doing his little utmost in that direction. He undertakes to dance a measure with the Senator from New York, and they will waltz together down the aisle in support and in furtherance of this family feud.

Mr. President, I was saying, when I was interrupted, that no man's views as a tariff reformer were entitled to be gainsaid because he might differ with some of his colleagues as to the rate of progress that was practicable or possible under existing circumstances. If you are out in the sea in an open boat and want to get to the shore and the tide is against you, all you have got to do is to row, and if your strength will last you after a while you will reach there; but you will not advance one step by jumping overboard and trying to walk.

So, Mr. President, recognizing the conditions that surround us; recognizing the raging sea of partisan Republicanism that casts up against the prow of the Democracy all the dead and foul things that exist at the bottom of that sea; recollecting that we have these difficulties to encounter, that we have these obstacles to overcome—it would be idle to ignore them—how can we arraign our brethren who are enlisted in the same cause if they shall think that progress and final achievement require a slower gait or demand concession on this side or that, so long as the prow of the boat is kept towards the shore of our promise and our hopes.

These are not new views of mine. In 1890, at the close of the discussion on the McKinley bill, I had occasion to say:

> But it is one thing to occupy that conservative attitude toward these protected industries, turning our faces all the while in what we consider the right direction, towards greater freedom of trade, towards the loosening of the bonds that bind the intercourse of men, towards fewer restrictions and not towards an increase of them, and another to support that policy which keeps its face always turned towards a greater and greater restriction, towards building higher and higher this tariff wall, and shutting our eyes to all that lies outside of it—a policy that must be founded upon the theory, if there is anything in it, that the world is too large, and that we should be better off if the oceans that wash the eastern and western shores of this continent should bound all the world for us, and that all outside of it were a waste of waters and no civilized man found habitation elsewhere than within the confines of our own Republic.

Mr. President, I always knew, or thought I knew, that the task that was before the Democratic party after the election of 1892 would prove a most difficult and a most appalling one. Here was protection intrenched in power and place and wealth, supported by the avarice and self-interest of the protected classes, by the trained intelligence of the protected classes, all believing, and I admit honestly believing, most of them, that protection had come to be an absolutely necessary condition to the continuance of the industries that supported them. I knew the obstacles that would confront us here. I was hardly prepared, however, for all that has occurred. I knew the outcry and the clamor that would pierce the skies and resound above the Dome of this Capitol the moment we placed our hands upon what had come to be considered the sacred edifice of protection.

Every privileged class in the country, every corporation or trust that had been growing rich or making its profits out of the unequal privileges given by the McKinley law and by high protection, thronged here through its representatives in Washington, and with the best skill and the best intelligence that wealth could command assailed the ears of Senators with argument, with entreaty, with expostulation. It would be vain to say that such efforts did not produce any result at all. They have retarded the progress of tariff reform undoubtedly. They have given a road of sand through which to drag the car of our progress. It is true many of them were honest in their appeals.

Industries in a Senator's own State, frightened by the speeches and the representations of our Republican friends, came here, and necessarily gave pause to many a good tariff reformer, and made him willing to go slower than he otherwise would have done. The Republicans themselves, honestly believing in the theory and cause of protection, have been here with their appeals and their arguments, and they do not think so poorly of their own abilities as to believe that they have not made some impression on this side. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], with his great and acknowledged skill in all tariff matters, has been day in and day out with apparent, and I have no doubt real, sincerity urging upon his fellows on this side that this and that measure of the tariff bill would bring ruin and destruction to the industries of the country; and of course his arguments have had some effect.

And yet, in the face of all these difficulties, in the face of specious and plausible arguments, in the face of the obstructions of false friends, in the face of the small majority on this side in favor of tariff reform, in face of the fact that the people have not given us what we could call a working majority of tariff reformers on this side, they are demanding brick without straw We have nevertheless made our tale of brick, and we have brought out a measure, which, while not coming up to Democratic ideals in completely fulfilling the hopes and aspirations that I have entertained all my political life, yet does present to the American people a measure of substantial reform, a measure that will undo to a large degree the wrongs that have been entailed upon the people by the McKinley law; one which will give us free lumber for our homes, which will give us free wool for our clothing, which will give us reduced taxes on the manufactured products, which will reduce the taxes on structural iron and on railroad bars, and all the multiplied uses to which iron is put in civilized life and cuts in half the tax on coal and iron ore.

Mr. President, I should be recreant to the high trust that has been reposed in me by the people who sent me here if I should have failed, by my vote, to support any measure because it did not come up to the full standard of what I believed to be tariff reform, or because I found attached to it by the House of Representatives what I consider an abhorrent provision, in nowise connected with true tariff reform—I mean the income tax—yet I voted for it despite all these things; and I shall vote for any measure that comes from the conference committee that gives a substantial and real abatement and relief from what I believe to be the unjust burdens of the McKinley tariff.

There, Mr. President, I differ from the Senator from New York. I am sincerely in favor of tariff reform, and shall vote for the best measure in that direction that I can obtain. I shall vote for it whether there is free coal or free iron ore or only a duty of half the present duty on those two articles embraced in the bill; and so doing, I think I shall be discharging my highest duty to my constituents and to the whole American people.

Forty-three votes were necessary, and the conditions were anomalous. They were such that any political gambler could take us by the throat and say, "By my not voting for this bill I put the bill in jeopardy or I defeat it." That we have had to confront, and we did confront it, and we overcame it, and by God's blessing we shall overcome the remaining obstacles that lie in the path of the achievement to which the Democratic party is pledged. We shall bring honesty, we shall bring high endeavor, we shall bring all the patriotism that ought to exist in the breast of an American Senator, and we shall join hands to see that the hopes of the American people are not at last disappointed, and the fruit offered them does not turn to ashes on their lips.

Mr. President, patriotic duty requires self-sacrifice; it requires self-suppression; it requires resistance to the temptation to self-exploitation for a little popular and temporary applause. I have no doubt, in my imperfect way, I could gain from these thoughtless friends of tariff reform my measure of applause by standing here and reciting my creed in regard to unfettered commerce. I could, no doubt, receive the applause of many valued friends at home by telling them how ardently and how heroically I was standing for the things that they stood for, and that I was so heroic and so firm that I would not abate one jot or one tittle of my opinion, even though an adherence to it inflicted the McKinley law on the country for an indefinite number of years in the future. I am not that kind of a Democrat. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. President, I have said all I think it necessary to say on the motion that I desire to offer at the proper time. I believe that the dignity, the patriotism, and the self-respect of this body require it to insist upon the amendments which they have solemnly and deliberately placed upon the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I desire to move—I suppose properly it will come as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]—that the Senate recede from so much of its amendment numbered 156 as is contained in the following words:

And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 per cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

And to amend the said amendment numbered 156 by striking the said words from it.

I offer that as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. VILAS, as follows:

That the Senate recede from so much of its amendment, numbered 156, page 41, as is contained in the following words, beginning with the word "and," in line 10, and ending with the words "ad valorem," in line 14:

"And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. DOLPH. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will state his point of order.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] can be received as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. The motion of the Senator from New York goes entirely to another portion of the bill and is in relation to another subject. I suppose the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin might be offered as an amendment to that of the Senator from New York, or the two propositions might be connected.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Wisconsin can offer it as an independent motion.

Mr. VILAS. Let it be received, then, as an independent motion, if that is the proper parliamentary course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that it is in order for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to move his amendment as an addition to or as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and that the amendment in either form would be in order.

The Chair will also state, however, that, as the motion of the Senator from New York covers two independent and distinctive propositions, and that of the Senator from Wisconsin another independent and distinctive proposition, it would be competent for any Senator to demand a separate vote upon either one of those distinct propositions. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the circumstances in which we are placed have invited much discussion, which is perhaps properly to be characterized as personal. There is apparently evoked much feeling which, it seems to me, is rather the expression of individuals in their individual capacity than the judgment of Senators in their capacity as Senators. I desire scrupulously to avoid any such line of discussion.

I share the sentiments with which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] so eloquently and nobly concluded the remarks which he has just addressed to the Senate. I believe I can say, without the offense of egotism, that I have been a faithful observer of the principle of duty which he so eloquently and vigorously enunciated; for, from the time when this bill was first under discussion until the last day of its consideration, I refrained, often against a strong impulse, from occupying any of that precious time which was so fearfully wasted in the long protraction of so-called debate.

Sir, I wish now to add no word that shall be or tend to any undue consumption of time. We have heard read from the desk to-day a petition, brief and to the point, from a large number of the business men of this country, which expresses the aspiration, the eager hope, of the entire people of the country, that this legislative assembly, and its associate in legislation, shall bring to a speedy and a profitable end this long, wearisome, and exacting struggle. The business interests of this country lie waiting opportunity to take a leap forward, to relieve depression, to assuage suffering, to uplift the hope of our country and our people again. Let us then deal with this question so as to promote that end.

What now is the immediate step which we are bound to take? We have passed through that stage of our deliberations which was necessary to the passage by the Senate of a tariff bill; we have sent that bill to the other House loaded down with amendments, expressing the various opinions entertained at this end of the Halls of Legislation. After long conference the conferees representing the two Houses have disagreed; the struggle between the two has failed to bring to us a single point of yielding on the one side or the other so far as the report of the committee of conference indicates, and it is proposed now that the Senate shall insist upon every one of the six hundred and thirty-four amendments which it made to the bill.

Mr. President, without a word of personal crimination, criticism, or reproach, what is the duty, not of an individual Senator, but of this Senate, this great American legislative Chamber in dealing with this contingency? There are three considerations to which I wish to invite attention with reference to our relation to the House of Representatives in respect to this particular measure.

First, the Constitution of the United States gave a certain superiority of place and right in the consideration of revenue measures to the House of Representatives. It awarded to that House the sole privilege of originating a proposal to tax the people. That did not find its place in the Constitution of the United States as a mere prescription of a mode of business. The Constitution was not laying down a rule of order. It declared a principle, and we know whence that principle was derived. It came from the constitution of Great Britain, and it carried into our Constitution the expression of the doctrine, which has been maintained there through the centuries of their liberty, that it was in the Commons, the immediate representatives of the people, that the right of taxation primarily lay.

Sir, another thing I desire to mention, a fact rather than a principle, in exact accordance with this to which I have drawn attention, is that in truth the members of the House of Representatives, with whom we are now in contention, are the more immediate representatives of the people. They came to their seats by the choice of the electors in their several districts at the last election; and the great majority in that House in favor of tariff reform is the latest expression of the people of the United States, coming from them after many years of laborious agitation and education.

This body contains within its numbers able, honorable, and venerable men, some of whom we might fairly say come down to us from a past generation; they have been here a great number of years; and all of them are entitled to the highest consideration in every respect. Still the fact corresponds with the very idea in and upon which the Constitution predicated the proposition that taxation should originate with the immediate representatives of the people.

Sir, let me add another thing, which appeals, it seems to me, with great force to the Democratic Senators upon this side of the Chamber. We have to deal with a body composed in large majority of members of the party to which we belong, whose principles we reverence as those which alone can preserve the liberties of our country and carry forward true measures of justice to our people. As a mere coördinate branch of the Legislature, we owe duty to deal with that body in the spirit of fraternity and conciliation, in the spirit of Democratic kindness, and with effort to agree in expression of Democratic principles in our tariff legislation. We owe that duty generally, indeed in every case. It is peculiarly a duty in respect to revenue legislation.

Mr. President, having in view these three propositions, what is the situation in which we find ourselves at this time?

That body which possesses the right to originate measures of taxation, after months of arduous labor, sent to us a measure of tariff taxation, not all that tariff reformers desired, but yet such in its completeness and general scheme that its passage through the House of Representatives was the scene of tumultuous joy there, responded to in the hearts of the American people throughout the land.

That measure has now been almost six months in this Chamber, and this body, which possesses by the Constitution power only to suggest amendments, has been wrestling with it until it has metamorphosed it; and when at last our long and painful struggle was ended, and we sent it to the House of Representatives for their consideration of the amendments proposed, I grieve to say our enactment did not have the same cordial and cheerful response with which the original measure was received by the people of the United States.

And, sir, this proposition is now that we shall insist upon every amendment sent to that body. For what purpose? To compel its submission to the Senate, which has so changed the bill as that its friends would not recognize it. By what compulsion? Alas, only by public suffering. At what cost? The practical failure to pluck the fruits of victory, the result of the many years of struggle and contest through which the people of this country have passed.

Mr. President, what can justify us in taking that extreme position now? Have we found the conferees representing the other House so unreasonable, so unwilling to yield anything, that there is no opportunity for further hope? By no means. It may certainly be gathered, from what has appeared through various sources of information, that there has been a spirit of conciliation, a spirit of concession, manifested on the part of the House of Representatives.

And upon what particulars do we most insist? Upon them which in nature most peculiarly offend the spirit of the Constitution itself. We have insisted on putting on that measure subjects of taxation which the House of Representatives deliberately declared to be free. We have sought to make those things dutiable which the House of Representatives declared were improper to bear the burden of popular taxation.

I feel that in the special feature to which my motion is addressed the attitude of the Senate is so especially un-Democratic and unjust, that we ought, by receding from it, to tender to the House of Representatives an expression of our willingness to consider proper changes in the bill at the same time that we again send to them conferees with the general instruction to insist.

Sir, I am willing to vote for the motion to insist upon every other amendment proposed by the Senate, provided only we take from it this peculiarly odious and offensive tax which is embraced in the article to which I have drawn attention by the motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it interrupt or interfere with the Senator from Wisconsin if I were to read what the President says on this schedule?

Mr. VILAS. I have read what he has said, and it would be in this discussion no aid to me; I presume others have read it, and it would be no aid to them to read it again now. I prefer to pursue to the end speedily the remarks I intend to make.

Mr. President, I concede that it may be a proper thing for the Senate to insist generally on such subjects of taxation being considered in conference as the Senate has seen fit to propose, and that in a certain sense it is right that the conferees shall be supported by the expression of the Senate that the points which meet with opposition there shall be further debated. For that reason, ardently desiring myself the greatest freedom in tariff taxation, the greatest deliverance of subjects of taxation from that form of oppression which is for the benefit of the few, therefore wishing for free coal and free iron ore as well as to have other articles of similar general nature upon the free list, I am still willing to vote for a general insistance covering those items.

I might for that reason, if simply sugar were proposed as a subject of taxation, be willing to include it in the general insistance. Indeed, I believe sugar to be a proper subject for revenue duty, and therefore should desire it to be presented again to the House. But, sir, here is a tax confessedly levied for a single purpose, a tax levied for the purpose of enriching still further the most gigantic, obnoxious, iniquitous, and offensive trust that I believe has yet been openly placed upon the people of this country. It is a trust raised into its hideous power by the McKinley act itself; for, although it had some existence before, it was that act which, by making raw sugar free and placing a higher discriminating duty on refined sugar than it ever before had borne, raised this monster of the sugar trust into its position of domination over the interests of the people of the country and of tremenduous influence and power in the halls of legislation.

Now, for what reason shall we adhere to a tax solely for the benefit of the sugar trust?

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin as to whether the tax of one-eighth of a cent additional on refined sugar will not inure to the benefit of the producer? I understand him to state that the tax is exclusively in the interest of the sugar trust.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Louisiana can tell better than I can whether there is in any way some share of advantage to the sugar producer in the additional one-eighth, but if there be, certain it is that the people of this country understand that that tax was inserted, not for the benefit of the producer, but for the benefit of the refiner. They understand that it was inserted in the bill distinctively and peculiarly as a refiner's tax, and it has brought down upon the Democrats of the Senate the animadversion of the people of this country, because it was put in as a refiner's tax, a peculiar expression and illustration of the principle of protection to the manufacturer.

As such I deal with it. If more taxation be necessary to raise suitable revenue upon sugar, let it be laid. Put it on, if need be, but put it on in such a manner that nobody shall derive incidental protection from it except the agriculturist, who in the fields of Louisiana or Nebraska makes sugar from cane or beets. Let us discharge ourselves from this odium. Let us deliver the Democratic party from this peculiar expression of subserviency to the great sugar trust of the United States.

Mr. President, is there need of protection to that colossal combination? Sir, not to protract the discussion with details, have we not been advised, by such modes of information as can leave no moral doubt upon the mind, that the sugar trust has been able to divide among its stockholders in the compass of a single year a total sum nearly equal to one-third of its enormous capital of $75,000,000; that capital being itself inflated and swollen by excessive valuations of the properties in its hands? Does it need protection? As long ago as 1880 the present president of the trust testified before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives that with free trade in sugar they could beat the world in competition in refining.

By the most careful proofs, collated from trustworthy sources, it is established that the labor cost and the general cost of refining sugar in this country is much less than in any of the great countries of Europe where sugar is refined. A protective duty can only be claimed as a fair measure when it is to exclude foreign competition because that competition possesses factitious advantages which do not belong to our own country. Here the rule is reversed. By the machinery which is possessed by the great sugar trust sugar can be and is refined at a much cheaper cost and a much cheaper labor cost than in England, France, or Germany.

Upon what basis, then, shall we give to the trust a continued right to levy taxes of the same kind and in the same manner that the United States levy upon the people of this country? The United States compel the merchant, the shopkeeper, the jobber everywhere to collect here a little and there a little from every customer, from every poor man's family that buys a few pounds of sugar, some few cents or some few mills in order that revenue shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Why should the United States make the sugar trust its partner in the division of the taxes so wrought upon the people of the United States? Why take the trust into this confederation to lay upon every poor family the duty of contributing some mills upon every pound of sugar until in the great aggregate the trickling streams of wealth which spring in the sweat of the laborer's forehead gather in one mighty pour of millions into the coffers of the sugar trust? Sir, for one I can not support this measure without entering this effort to relieve the conference between the two Houses of a proposed tax so obnoxious to the principles of Democracy, so abhorrent to every principle of justice, so oppressive to all the people of the United States, so unfair, wicked, and unnecessary.

Mr. President, I am glad to know that upon the other side of the Chamber the same sentiments I utter, at least in respect to the result, are entertained. I am glad to know that there is one tax, levied in the name of protection, which has become so odious, so anathematized by every thinking man in the United States that even the men of a party which professes protection for a principle can no longer support it. I am glad to know that upon the other side of this Chamber we have had, and I hope will have again, concurrence in the effort to discharge the people of this country from this oppressive and hateful burden.

I trust that we may agree upon this subject. I hope it may be possible that when these conferees are sent, bound by the general charge of the Senate, to again insist upon the six hundred and thirty-four amendments laid upon the bill, they may carry with them at any rate this tender of conciliation, this peace-offering of fraternity, by which they will signify that the Senate at least does not intend to maintain an autocratic rigidity of purpose against that body in whom the Constitution wisely places the power to originate revenue legislation.

I do not wish to detain the Senate. There are many things which I had it in mind to touch upon when I came to the Chamber this morning, but which, for the very reason that so much has been said which is not calculated to promote conciliation, I wish to refrain from any allusion to. I prefer rather to carry to the Senate, if I can, my idea of its high constitutional duty in dealing with that other body in the great American Congress.

I trust, sir, that out of this dealing, out of all the labor we have undergone, out of all the suppressions, the self-effacements, I was about to add the self-abasements, to which we have submitted in the effort to bring harmony to the majority of this body and harmony into the councils of that party which is in the majority in the country, there is yet to come a measure of economic liberty, not the complete fruition, not the surmounting of the mountain top in the beautiful figure of speech of the eloquent and winning Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but at least a measure which shall mark to the people of this country the fact that at last a turn has been reached in the course of oppressive, burdensome, grinding taxation upon them to fill the coffers of the few; that at last hope is to shine upon the people of this country; that the day is to dawn not far distant when revenue will be raised by our customs taxation and not tributes for the increase of the wealth of any classes especially favored, but when with general liberty throughout the land in trade and commerce as well as in law and enlightment, the merchants of the United States, descending to their ships from either shore of this vast continent, will bind up in great bands of peace and Christian kindness the trade of the whole world to its center in the United States.

Let us not mark this measure from which we hope so much with a badge of servitude, nor put upon the Democratic party, which alone can be the servant of that liberty in this land, the collar of a villien of the sugar trust.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I understand the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to be an instruction to the Senate conferees to drop the differential of one-eighth upon refined sugar which has been adopted by the votes of the Senate. During the course of the Senator's remarks I ventured to ask him a question, after a strong expression on his part, and which he referred back to me for a response.

It is absolutely useless for me to say that, representing my State and its chief staple product, I have no concern with or interest in the sugar trust. I am here to advocate so far as I can the interest of my State in this particular. The one-eighth being taken off will strike a deadly blow at that interest.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to make a statement and to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. I have never been able to comprehend how the producers of sugar are interested in retaining the one-eighth for the refiners. I hope he will show how the producers are interested.

Mr. CAFFERY. The explanation is very simple. The producer of cane in Louisiana is mostly a manufacturer of sugar. The Louisiana planter, by adopting the recent improved methods, turns out a sugar which goes into consumption as refined sugar. It is a centrifugal sugar, quite equal to the German granulated sugar, which is the great competing sugar that the trust has to contend with.

Mr. President, in the matter of tariff reform I am in strict line with the orthodox tenets of my party. I was born and reared in the midst of the sugar-planting district of my State. Ever since I have attained years of discretion I have been a Democrat and a tariff reformer on the strictest lines of the Democratic faith, theory, and policy. For many years I have been censured in my own part of the country for clinging too tenaciously to the Democratic theory.

I have earnestly, in season and out of season, told my people that the anchor of safety for them was to grasp the Democratic theory and lay hold of the Democratic platform, which platform announces the theory that the Democratic party is pledged to a tariff on imports for revenue, and that having the article which produces revenue more conspicuously and to a larger extent than any other article upon the dutiable list, they were in no danger of destruction at the hands of the Democratic party.

I am not a whit behind any of my associates upon this floor in the matter of tariff reform; but when the Democratic party breaks loose from its moorings, when I am told upon this floor that the very conference committee which has brought in this report would have brought in a report for free sugar if they dared, I think it is time to call a halt, and to inquire into the reasons why we have departed from ancient Democratic doctrines.

Mr. President, it is said the reason that there is a hesitation, the reason there is almost an absolute refusal to place sugar upon the dutiable list is that it is unpopular so to do, that the people of the United States have enjoyed the sweets of free sugar, and that they owe the sweets of free sugar to the Republican party.

If, therefore, the Republican party were to adopt a principle or plan of putting on the free list every cherished subject and object of Democratic taxation, and that made it popular, then the Democratic party is to recede from its principles and adopt the plan of the Republican party. I am not that sort of a Democrat.

Mr. President, I will allude briefly to the sugar culture of Louisiana, and try to induce the Senate to believe that at this moment it would be absolute destruction to the people engaged in that industry to put sugar either upon the free list or give them such a restricted and diminished duty as that they could not live and prosper. The sugar industry existed in Louisiana before it was a State.

The first experiment made in sugar was in 1794 by M. Etienne De Boré, a gentleman who had a plantation above the city of New Orleans. It was not supposed that the juice of the cane would granulate into crystals of sugar until the experiment was made by this gentleman. He succeeded. When Louisiana was admitted into the Union under the State constitution of 1812 it found the sugar industry just about springing well into existence.

From that period, and before that period, down to the present, there is not a single Democratic Congress that ever hesitated one moment as to whether or not a tariff upon sugar was within Democratic lines and Democratic policy. We never dreamed that because the Republican party put sugar upon the free list the Democratic party would depart from the precedent of a hundred years of imposition of duty upon sugar. From uninterrupted custom, from the continuous imposition of a tariff upon sugar for more than a hundred years, the people of my State built up the industry, relying upon its continuance as an application of Democratic doctrine.

I have constantly heard upon this floor the declaration made that if the gentlemen framing this bill had their way there would be no tax upon sugar. It is about time to talk plainly, and I propose to do so now. I make no threats, no criminations. There is none of that sort of thing in me. When the test comes here as to whether I will sit in my seat and see the industry destroyed upon which the prosperity of my State is founded, I shall act promptly and decidedly.

The sugar industry had culminated under the slave régime in 1861 to the extent of supplying about one-half of the sugar of the United States. In a few more years it is my deliberate opinion that that State alone would have supplied all the sugar of the United States. I am warranted in that belief from the rapid strides the industry had made from about 1820 to 1861. After the war the sugar-planters were absolutely divested of all means to follow the pursuit.

It required, under the conditions confronting them, very large capital. It required expensive machinery. It required vast outlays. The necessary capital to commence the business had consequently to be borrowed. Before the labor relations between the owners of the soil and the emancipated blacks had been properly adjusted (as I am happy now to say they are), the history of the sugar industry of Louisiana from the war up to about ten years ago is a history of disaster and bankruptcy. Since the improvement of the method both of extracting the juice from the cane and evaporating the juice after its extraction, the industry has taken a new start.

The start commenced under the tariff that existed prior to 1890. It was accelerated after the gift or grant of a bounty by the McKinley act of October, 1890; and now the industry is in a flourishing and prosperous condition.

I will direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that when the Republican party, out of its own exigencies, in 1890 took the tariff from sugar it recognized the justice of giving an equivalent to the sugar producers, lest they should be wiped out of existence. They gave the equivalent in the shape of a bounty. There was a bounty of nearly 2 cents a pound, with an additional tariff of sixty one-hundredths of a cent on refined sugar.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Illinois, I stated that we have made to a large extent what is called refined centrifugal or off-white sugar. The term off-white is used to signify that the color is slightly off, not entirely white; and by adopting the centrifugal process, and by the establishment of large mills the planters of my State have been able to keep abreast with the times. They are not entirely so yet, but they are rapidly approaching to the use of scientific methods adopted in Germany for the manufacture of the beet into sugar.

Under the promise held out by the Senate in the report of its Finance Committee of giving a diminished bounty, the planters, in order to provide for a time when the tariff might be entirely taken off or considerably diminished, have incurred enormous expenses. I believe I am safe in saying that they have anticipated both the 40 per cent tariff and the small modicum of bounty that was allowed, for at least three years in advance, in purchasing more approved machinery and in erecting more suitable buildings.

Mr. President, living in that part of the country, knowing somewhat about the business, if not entirely an expert in it, I am perfectly justified in saying, and I do say here, that even with the proposed modified bounty which the Senate struck off, with the 40 per cent ad valorem and the eighth and tenth additional, a large number of the planters of Louisiana will go to the wall. They have censured me for accepting the proposition of the Senate Finance Committee. They have represented to me—and I know their representations are not at all extravagant—that under this diminished protection they would be met with ruin and with bankruptcy.

Notwithstanding that, in the intense desire and eagerness I had to see that a Democratic measure of tariff reform should be passed and the enormous burden of taxation entailed by the operation of the McKinley law relieved, I submitted to the proposition of the Senate Finance Committee. I did so in good faith. Then came the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] in precise line with the proposed action of the Finance Committee itself, and it was defeated by an overwhelming vote.

Now it is proposed to take off an eighth, and taking off the eighth will cripple and destroy the planters of Louisiana. It is not merely a handful of protected planters whose interests are at stake in this matter. There are nearly 300,000 laborers directly and indirecly engaged in the sugar business. There is a capital of about $100,000,000 invested in it. The annual crop, or the crop of last year rather, for the crop rises in progression, was worth at least $20,000,000. That crop has been exchanged against nearly every product of the West and the machinery of the North and the East.

The area to which cane culture is devoted in my State is embraced south of the thirty-second degree of north latitude, extending from the Mississippi River westward near the Texas line. It is bordered on the south by the Gulf. It is not fitted for the culture of the cereals. A portion of the country can not make cotton at all; the atmosphere is so damp that the worm eats up the bolls as fast as they are formed. There is no other product in the extreme southern belt, composing about twelve parishes, in my State to which the agriculturist can devote his attention; and I say here for my State, if the bounty is denied that was promised, if the duty is taken off which was agreed to be imposed, that country will become a desert.

Mr. President, this cry for relief coming from the sugar planters of Louisiana does not come from overgrown and bounty-fed corporations. It comes from the honest tillers of the soil. It comes from honest American citizens. They have been induced to go into this business by reason of the legislation of a hundred years, and it is not Democratic to strike them down. It is not only not in accordance with political economy and theories of the Democratic party, but it is not humane; it is not just; it is absolute, unadulterated cruelty.

If those people have to be destroyed by either one party or the other, humanity dictates that at least such a modicum of protection shall be given to them as will enable them to find some other pursuit or go to some other spot upon God's green earth where they will not be tortured and punished by tariff legislation. They ask this at the hands of a Democratic majority; a Democratic State asks it which never yet has wavered in her allegiance to the Democratic party. Her citizens ask it. They ask the withholding of the hand that would deal the deadly blow.

At every step in the progress of this sugar-tariff legislation schedules agreed on have been changed; promises made have been violated. We are treated to this reduction, and then that reduction, until the people of my State know not where they stand. A fair revenue tariff, a fair, square, honest tariff upon sugar in the first instance would have been what the situation demanded and what the Democratic party could have accorded without violating a single one of its principles.

What is the slight protection that we enjoy, Mr. President? We made 600,000,000 pounds, say, of sugar last year. The bounty on that at 2 cents is $12,000,000. What proportion does it bear to other protected manufacturing interests in the country even under the operations of this bill? Under the Democratic theory of adding the tariff to the amount of the sales of the domestic product we find that the domestic product of cotton goods enjoys a protection of $63,897,360.

The Senate bill proposes to put a rate of 38.45 per cent upon manufactured products of cotton. Subtracting from the amount of the gross product the amount of the McKinley tariff, the cotton manufactures have a protection of $63,897,360 on an output of $268,000,000. What about woolen products? The distinguished Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. GRAY in the chair] I think stated that wool is the palladium of tariff reform. Wool is placed on the free list, but the products of wool are not placed on the free list. The protection that woolen fabrics enjoy after subtracting from the product of the domestic manufactures the amount of the McKinley tariff would be about $37,440,000.

I have here a long list of industries protected by the bill, but I do not choose to read them all. I will only allude to iron and steel and bituminous coal. The rate in the Senate bill upon iron and steel manufactures is 34.52 per cent. The amount of protection upon the amount of the domestic sales under this calculation would be $92,114,405. This is the way the tariff reaches. It reaches by indirection.

Under the operation of the tariff prior to 1890, the tariff act of 1883, and the last year of that tariff, out of $212,000,000 realized from the duty on imports $88,000,000 of that amount was derived from sugar; the ideal subject of taxation filling up completely the Democratic scheme of tariff taxation.

The amount of protection on bituminous coal allowed under this bill is $45,312,000. I will ask the privilege of inserting these figures in my remarks.

Now, when the domestic manufacturers of sugar are trembling for their security, here is another step contemplated, another blow to be struck, which will hurl them into ruin.

Once in my life I had a fearful alternative presented to me. I was a quiet, peaceful citizen, pursuing my calling as a sugar-planter in my native State. Suddenly the tocsin of war sounded throughout the length and breadth of the land. I revered the Union and I honored its flag.

When my State called me to arms I had to answer to the call of the State of my nativity and the State of my love. I revere and I love Democratic principles. They were born in me. What little study and reflection I have been able to give to political subjects have convinced me that the Democratic theory of government is correct and that the Democratic theory of tariff for revenue is correct. But when the alternative comes between the State of my love and the party to which I owe my political allegiance, I shall stand by my State. I here distinctly state that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted and if the promise of the Senate Finance Committee to give a modicum of bounty is not complied with the bill will not have my support or sanction.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to take any part in this debate, nor do I intend to occupy the attention of the Senate more than a few moments.

Certainly I do not desire in the slightest degree to injure the production of sugar in the United States. Indeed, I think it is rather discreditable to the United States that it has not long before this time established sugar as an industry sufficient at least to meet the domestic wants. I have no desire at all to disturb the prosperity of sugar manufacturing in this country. I can not, however, justify what has been said by the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. The Senate has been extremely liberal to the sugar industry. A higher rate of duty is placed by the bill upon raw sugar than I believe ever existed except in one tariff law in the United States.

By the Walker tariff act the duty was placed at 30 per cent ad valorem upon all grades of sugar, whether refined or unrefined, and I believe that was the highest rate of duty which had been imposed upon it to that time. Mr. Walker considered it as a proper subject for revenue, and that was the highest rate of duty imposed by the Walker tariff act, if I remember aright. It is given in the compilation furnished by the Committee on Finance, and here it is. The duty on sugar was 30 per cent ad valorem.

The duty imposed on sugar in the later acts was even less. By the act of March 3, 1857, which was a Democratic Congress, the duty was 24 per cent. By the Morrill tariff act it was put at three-fourths of a cent a pound. So it is manifest that the duty of 40 per cent on all grades of sugar, which is now proposed to be levied, is as high a rate as has ever been levied before. I think that is right; I think a duty of 40 per cent is amply sufficient to develop the sugar industry in the United States, and I anticipate that within five years from this time there will be more sugar made from beets in the United States than from sugar cane. It may be that the proprietors in Louisiana will change their mode of producing sugar by taking the homely beet instead of the sugar cane. The general tendency is that way. In every country of Europe where beets can be raised beet sugar has superseded sugar from cane.

The proposition now to impose a duty, whether as a protective duty or as a revenue duty, of 40 per cent ad valorem, it seems to me ought to satisfy our friends from Louisiana, especially as they have contributed to reduce the rates of duty on almost every production of the North to less than 40 per cent, even on cotton goods, on which are imposed the highest rates in the bill. The rate is less than 40 per cent on almost every article produced in the North. Every article produced by the farmer has been reduced to 20 per cent or less. Certainly the gentleman from Louisiana ought not to complain when a higher rate of duty is now imposed upon sugar than upon any other agricultural product of the United States.

I ask my honorable friend from Indiana if he can state a single agricultural product that is now to have a duty of 40 per cent, except sugar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I can name one.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Rice.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, that is a product of the South, and the Senators from the rice-producing States have had their own way about it. I think myself the duty on rice is too high, but we have made no complaint about it. I think it ought to have been reduced to a lower grade; but the Senators from Louisiana now come before us and complain of hardship or injustice and speak as if we desire to interfere with their industry or in any way to injure it. Certainly there is no desire of that kind. The Democratic Senators on the other side have shown rather a disposition to enlarge the duty on sugar. It is true that while there was no duty on sugar under the McKinley act, the large amount given to the refiners was a mistake in that act.

I have said that over and over again, and I have stated it here in the Senate. It seems to me to be now demonstrated that so far as the sugar trust is concerned the 40 per cent ad valorem upon sugar, which is a protection to the refineries as well as to the Louisiana planters, will more than pay the cost of refining. They will go with all their immense capital into all the marts of the world, including Germany and all the countries where sugar is made out of beets, and in the tropical countries; they will buy sugar at the lowest possible rate and bring it in here; and to the extent of 40 per cent ad valorem they are protected. Why should they have an additional protection? Why should one-eighth of 1 cent per pound be given? I know from the usual temper of the House of Representatives, and I know from the way I felt when I was a member of that body, that a bounty of this kind, an absolute sum of money paid out to a single corporation whose watered capital of $75,000,000 represents only about $10,000,000 of actual property, on which they make an income every year equal to the original capital, will never be granted.

The idea of voting one-eighth of a cent a pound in aid of the sugar trust, it seems to me, is entirely indefensible. That one-eighth will not operate for the benefit of the sugar-planters. They seem to think that it will be an additional protection to them, but I do not so regard it, for the difference between the value of the raw sugar and that of the refined sugar, measured at 40 per cent ad valorem, is their protection. There is the great profit to the sugar trust. They will have a protection of 40 per cent, and that will be equivalent to 1 cent a pound, which will more than pay all the expenses of refining; for it must be remembered that in the process of refining no sugar is wasted. All the refiners do in refining sugar is to take out the coloring matter to make it more palatable and more attractive in appearance, so as to secure a higher price for it. There is no reason in the world why that one-eighth of 1 cent should be given to them.

What is one-eighth of 1 cent per pound on two or three or four million tons of sugar? I have forgotten the exact figures, but on all the sugar imported into this country it amounts to an enormous sum, and the refiners get the whole benefit of it, while the entire cost of refining sugar, as shown by the documents before us, is only about one-half of 1 cent per pound.

It seems to me that to grant a subsidy would be a scandal and a shame. I never look upon it in any other way, and I would not vote for it under any consideration. I do not think this bill should ever be passed with such a provision in it. Therefore I think we ought to recede upon that amendment, which is one of the most important features of the bill.

I should vote for striking out that one-eighth and relieve the refiners and relieve the producers and all those who have the benefit of 40 per cent ad valorem on sugar, which is more than the average rate, and more than the rate on any other agricultural production, except rice, and greater, I think, than can be justified by the circumstances of the case.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I agree with the President of the United States that raw material should be free. I represent a State that can derive no advantage from protection. Nothing that we have can be benefited by protection, and I am anxious, if I can, to avoid the oppressions which result from the attempt to protect other interests. That is all that I can do.

I am not willing to vote for this one-eighth of 1 cent a pound in favor of the refiners. I do not think it ought to be asked for by the sugar-producers. They are keeping very bad company.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] says that the sugar-growers of Louisiana do refine sugar to some extent. The amount of benefit that the sugar producers would derive from this one-eighth, under the pretense of refining sugar, is very small. The great bulk of the profit would go to the sugar trust. It would be an addition to the cost of refined sugar. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that one of the best things that the sugar-producers can do is to dissolve that partnership with the sugar refiners.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will inquire of him, first, as to the existence of a partnership, and, if there is such partnership, what kind of a partnership it is?

Mr. PALMER. I understand that the Senator from Louisiana argues that, from the improved methods of production, the sugar-producers furnish a class of refined sugar, and to the extent they do that they would be benefited by this duty; but the sugar refiners would derive a hundred times as much benefit from it as would the sugar planters of Louisiana. Hence, I say, although they may produce something of that sort, they may produce a certain species of refined sugar, that the substantial benefits of this one-eighth would go to the organized sugar refiners, who are usually characterized as the sugar trust.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if an identity of interests constitutes a partnership?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; an identity of interests and a division of profits do, and that is the exact relation that the Louisiana sugar planter proposes to occupy to the sugar trust, that they are to be one in interest and one in profit, and I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that the small share of the profits which the sugar grower would derive from this duty would be but an infinitesimal proportion of the burden which would be imposed upon the country.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to know of the Senator from Illinois whether there is any chance or opportunity of getting out of what he is pleased to term a partnership, other than by abandoning the manufacture of refined sugar?

Mr. PALMER. The simple method would be for the sugar planters to accept an ad valorem duty that would protect them, and leave the sugar refiners to take care of themselves, whether they be the sugar growers or whether they be the large interests which are represented by what is called the sugar trust. I maintain that 40 per cent is enough and all that the sugar producers ought to have. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has stated, no other agricultural interest receives so large a protection. An exception has been made in favor of that interest.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator will permit me again to inject another interruption in his speech, I think I stated in about as clear language as I could that the sugar planter of Louisiana is per force a manufacturer of sugar, and is therefore entitled to protection.

Mr. PALMER. I am perfectly willing to pay to the sugar grower of Louisiana a fair ad valorem duty on his product, but I am not willing to pay any duty to him as a refiner of sugar. That is another and a distinct employment. If it were possible to limit it to the sugar producers of Louisiana it might be endurable, but the fact is that it operates for the benefit of the persons who are engaged in perhaps the largest business in the world, and therefore I protest against it. I do not say to the Senator that I would not vote for this bill even with that provision in it, because I have yielded my convictions very largely for the sake of agreeing with my political friends.

I have regarded the doctrine of protection as essentially and radically vicious. The whole theory of protection is a fraud, and, if not a fraud, it is worse than that. This theory that the Government can and will and ought to take care of the people by finding them employment at good wages is the nursery the germ from which Coxeyism and all these isms are drawn.

Mr. PEFFER. Why not apply protection according to the Democratic rule?

Mr. PALMER. What is the Democratic rule to which the Senator from Kansas refers?

Mr. PEFFER. I asked why not apply protection according to the Democratic rule?

Mr. PALMER. The Democratic doctrine of protection is that men shall not be burdened, but shall be left to work out their own salvation; and whenever we depart from that doctrine we involve ourselves in strikes and mobs and riots.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator whether, when he proposed an amendment to place barbed wire upon the dutiable list and to take it from the free list where it was, he was then of opinion that protection was a robbery and a fraud?

Mr. PALMER. I answer that I was [laughter] and I still am.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to say that I suppose he made an exception as to barbed wire?

Mr. PALMER. I did not; and if the material from which barbed wire is manufactured had been made free I should never have intimated the propriety of taxing barbed wire. I believe in free raw material. It is the manufactured product which it was proposed to tax and to leave free the raw material from which the manufactured product is made. That, in brief, was the Democratic doctrine.

I repeat, that this eighth of a cent allowed to the refiners is not required, I think, by any real interest of the country. I should not say, like the Senator from Louisiana, that I would not vote for the bill even with that abuse in it, because I am anxious to escape from the present conditions. One of the things from which I am anxious to escape is the bounty paid to the Louisiana sugar-planter, a most vicious arrangement, which stands in the way of all real tariff reform. The system of bounties is vicious and demoralizing. I am willing to pay 40 or even 45 per cent ad valorem to get rid of that system, if by that means we can escape from the vicious provisions which gave to the sugar-growers this bounty of 2 cents a pound on sugar. I know it is an expensive experiment, but we must accomplish it at whatever price. I shall submit to anything within fair reason to get rid of it.

We have done the very best we can in the present tariff bill, and we shall have accomplished a very large amount of good if the bill becomes a law. I will state frankly that I am not disinterested about this. The tariff on coal is to me a mere bagatelle. We have 35,000 acres of coal land in Illinois, and if our New England friends would even double the duty on coal—I believe they ought to have free coal; I should be glad to see them consent to accept free coal, but they will not——

Mr. GALLINGER. No, we will not.

Mr. PALMER. Then, I am anxious that they shall not charge back to us the duty they pay on coal. I believe the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is a much truer and better friend of the industries of the seaboard than are those who insist upon having a duty on coal. I should be willing, if it were not a violation of sound principle, to see the manufacturing States double or quadruple the duty on coal, because I regard it as a protection accepted by themselves in favor of the industries of Illinois, for I think the day is not distant when the Central States will manufacture their own products, and it will not be necessary to transport products to New England to be converted into fabrics.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Sentor from Illinois not know that the manufacturing center of the United States is now somewhat southwest of Canton, Ohio?

Mr. PALMER. I did not know it in that form.

Mr. PLATT. That is the fact.

Mr. PALMER. I know that in Illinois we have coal to a larger amount than in any other State. We are on the lakes and we can transport iron ore to Chicago through the water communication of Illinois cheaper than it can be done anywhere else. Hence, if I had my way and the manufacturers of the New England States insisted upon it, they might double the duty on iron if they wish to do so. What I insist upon is that it would operate to the benefit of the Middle or the Central States, and I believe it would. I believe that to-day.

I repeat, the Senator from New York, who favors free coal and free iron ore, is a far better friend to the manufacturing interests of New England than those who officially represent those States, and so is the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who visited New England during the last Presidential canvass, and said to the manufacturers there, "You shall have free coal in case of Democratic success." I believe he was offering them a boon, which I do not think they accepted very readily, but still which ought to be given to them now. There is where free coal and free iron are needed. I am glad to see they take upon themselves all the burdens possible, because the effect will be that the manufacturing industries of the country will be driven to the point where the supplies are abundant and materials can be found on every hand.

I wish to make one other remark, and then I am through. This bill is not the very best, I hope, that we can get. It is better, however, than the McKinley law. The President of the United States in his letter—which has been made the subject of comment, and I may speak of it—with that independence which characterizes him, has expressed his own views and has given his own interpretation of the Democratic creed. Doctrinally he is right; I have no doubt but that he is right in doctrine, but the President does not know as much as some other people do. He does not seem to know that when you can not have the absolute pure milk of the word, you should come as nigh as you can, and that practical politics requires that we should pass this bill and go to the country upon it.

I am prepared to do that, even if I am compelled to take the one-eighth of a cent on sugar. Although that much sugar would be very unpleasant, I would take it precisely as I take any other disagreeable medicine. I would swallow it because it was better than to be sick. I am entirely willing that the President shall entertain his own views. I am in favor of the present bill with such modifications as can be obtained in two or three particulars. I am in favor of laying it before the President. I am then in favor of the President doing his duty as he understands it. Then, we shall all have done our duty in accordance with our own convictions. If the President thinks the McKinley act is better than this bill, he is a wise and judicious statesman to take the McKinley act rather than the bill. If he thinks we have improved on the McKinley law, he will sign this bill.

Mr. President, I favored the nomination of the President of the United States. I think I exerted some influence in securing it. There were a few foolish people in Illinois who talked about me as a candidate, and I told them it was far more important to nominate Mr. Cleveland for reasons which I do not care to give now. I voted for him. I rejoiced in his election; but, Mr. President, I want to say one thing, and then I am done. I was a Senator from Illinois before he became the President of the United States; and a word to the wise is sufficient. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Conceding all that he has said to be correct about coal and iron and the one-eighth of a cent per pound on refined sugar, I ask the Senator is it not the true policy of the Democrats who desire to pass a tariff bill to refer this question back to the conferees without instructions, and more especially so as the House of Representatives has pursued that course?

Mr. PALMER. I have the most profound confidence in the committee of conference, and should be entirely willing, and should vote cheerfully to recommit this bill to that committee after having expressed my own views upon the question.

Mr. HUNTON. Without instructions?

Mr. PALMER. Indeed, I should prefer that there should be no instructions.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, the great interest which the people of the State I have the honor to represent with my colleague on this floor have in the pending measure, justifies me in detaining the Senate while I submit some observations upon the sugar schedule.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], in the speech delivered by him to-day, stated what is apparent to everyone, that it requires 43 Democratic votes to enact this measure into law. Recognizing that it required that many Democratic votes to revise the tariff, the Democratic Senators in conference in March last came to an understanding in respect of amendments that should be proposed to the Wilson bill, so as to compromise and adjust the difference between them, and reach a common ground upon which 43 Democratic Senators could stand in support of the bill. Accordingly, amendments drawn upon the lines thus laid down were reported by the Finance Committee, and, with one exception, to be noted hereafter, substantially adhered to in the consideration of the bill by the Senate.

Mr. President, no tariff-revision bill could have passed the Senate which was not a measure in its nature a compromise of conflicting opinions. There were interests represented by Senators on this side whose reasonable demands it was necessary to meet. All important legislation is at best a compromise. We have a country of widely extended boundaries; of great diversity of industry; of many millions of people not entirely and not always homogeneous. It often happens that the interests of sections clash. What is good in the way of legislation for the people living in one geographical division of the country is or may be hurtful to those residing in another geographical division. Each section has its representatives in the Senate and House, and to them is especially committed the interests and welfare of the people they immediately represent.

It is to be expected that Senators representing a State or a section of the country should earnestly desire that legislation enacted by the body of which they are members should not be of a character harmful to the people whose trust they hold; and that they should seek to control, or at least to reasonably influence, legislation affecting the interests of their people or States.

Hence it was, Mr. President, that in order to reach a common ground whereon united action could be had by forty-three Democratic Senators, constituting a majority of the Senate, it was necessary to make concessions to different interests, different sections, different States.

To accomplish this the conference of Democratic Senators heretofore referred to was held.

Mr. President, I had some doubts whether a reference to this conference and what was said and done at it, was quite proper in open debate in the Senate; but to-day in the speech of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], in his colloquy with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], the conference or caucus of Democrats to which I have alluded was referred to, and some of the things said and done there exploited before the Senate.

Following this example set by two of the leaders on this side of the Chamber, I trust I will be pardoned for also referring to this conference and for recalling to the recollection of Senators certain understandings and agreements there had.

Mr. President, among other things discussed at the conference, what the sugar schedule of the bill should be was distinctly stated by a leading member of the Finance Committee. This statement covered the following features:

1. Duty on raw sugars: 40 per cent ad valorem.
2. With one-eighth of a cent differential on refined sugars.
3. One-tenth of a cent discriminating duty on sugars whereon an export bounty was paid by the country of production.
4. Bounty under the provisions of the present law to be paid on all sugars manufactured during the current calendar year.

This was proposed in lieu of the schedule previously agreed on proposing a scale of specific duties on sugars.

The Louisiana Senators (myself and my colleague Mr. CAFFERY) present at the conference accepted this modified schedule. It was not what we wanted, or what our people demanded, but we thought the sugar industry of our State could live under it, and in the interest of harmony in the party, in a spirit of concession and compromise, willing to do our part towards reaching a common ground of unity of action with our Democratic colleagues from other States, we determined to give it the sanction of our acquiescence. We did so.

One Senator only arose and attacked the schedule as outlined to the conference by the member of the Finance Committee. He objected to certain features of it, but finally declared he would acquiesce. He did so, and has kept the faith throughout. He is not among those who have sought by their votes, or who now seek by their motions, to disregard and violate the understanding had in caucus.

All the other Senators present at the conference acquiesced in the schedule as stated from the Finance Committee. Among them was the very Senator from Wisconsin who now makes this motion which looks to striking down the one-eighth differential duty. He took a leading part in the deliberations of the caucus, made a strong speech counseling harmony, concession, compromise.

The sugar schedule as stated to the caucus was part of the plan for harmony, for concession, for compromise. The one-eighth differential duty was a necessary part of the sugar schedule, to make it satisfactory as a compromise measure.

The Louisiana Senators heeded the words of the Wisconsin Senator uttered in the conference, accepted the compromise, made the concessions, agreed to accept the modified sugar schedule. In other words, they did their part toward enabling 43 Senators to reach a common ground of unity of action.

Shortly after the conference was held the Finance Committee reported its amendments to the Wilson bill, and among them was the modified sugar schedule, containing all the features hereinbefore stated by me.

The Senate shortly afterward went into Committee of the Whole to consider the tariff bill. The Louisiana Senators, with a sugar schedule fairly acceptable, were in full and hearty accord with their Democratic colleagues in the effort to push the bill through to final enactment into law. On their votes the bill was carted along over the rough road of legislative action.

With these votes in active opposition, the bill would never have gotten beyond the threshold of its consideration. We from Louisiana—with vital interests at stake, with four or five hundred thousand people in our State directly and indirectly interested in the production of sugar, and with $100,000,000 of capital invested in the industry by the people we represent—we kept the faith.

We voted with the Finance Committee, and only for the amendments offered by the committee as had been agreed upon in caucus. During the whole of the three or three and a half months the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole of the Senate we steadfastly adhered to the caucus understanding and agreement. We (my colleague and myself) voted against the proposition emanating from the Republican side to reënact in the pending bill the bounty provision of the McKinley act; we voted against the proposition to substitute the bounty on a diminishing scale of one-tenth off each year, for the sugar schedule; and we voted against other amendments from that side of the Chamber which were more acceptable to the sugar producers of our State than the sugar schedule as agreed on in caucus

We kept the faith. We are Democrats, and stood with our party. We desired a tariff-reform bill passed; we wanted the pledges of the party to the people for tax revision and reduction to be kept.

Of all the Democratic Senators who attended the conference to which I have alluded, only one, the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], announced he would not be bound by the caucus action, and he placed his opposition on one ground only—the income tax. He objected to nothing else.

All the Senators who attended the conference (other than the Senator from New York) adhered to the caucus understanding as to sugar throughout the long period that the bill was under consideration by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The hostile amendments of the Republican Senators, to strike out the sugar schedule entirely, to strike off the one-eighth of a cent differential duty on refined sugars; to strike out the bounty for the present year by making the schedule go into effect at once instead of January 1, 1895, and other amendments of like hostile intent, were all voted down. They were voted down by the votes of Senators carrying out the caucus agreement.

But, Mr. President, when the bill, emerging from Committee of the Whole with the sugar schedule intact, came before the Senate proper the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] offered an amendment to change the date when the sugar schedule should go into effect from January 1, 1895, to the time of the passage or approval of the bill. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to deprive the sugar producers of the country of any bounty whatever on the crop of the present year.

I have already shown that the bounty for this year was part of the caucus agreement. With the Louisiana Senators it was a sine qua non to the acceptance of the modified sugar schedule. Without it we would not have assented to the caucus arrangement as to sugar.

We relied upon the assurance of our Democratic confreres. They had voted straight along with us all through the period of perfection of the bill in Committee of the Whole.

But in the Senate, Mr. President—the open Senate, as contradistinguished from the Senate as in Committee of the Whole—we were abandoned by three Democratic Senators, who united with the Senator from New York and the Republican Senators, and by their votes enabled the date of the going into effect of the sugar schedule to be changed so as to deprive the sugar producers of any part of the bounty for the present year.

The caucus understanding and agreement was broken by this action of the three Senators alluded to. It was a disastrous blow struck at the people of Louisiana in the house of their friends. It was a throwing overboard, so to speak, of the Louisiana Senators after their votes had been used to carry the bill along to within sight of its goal.

Mr. President, I speak of these things with sorrow and regret. I mean no offense to anyone. But it is time to speak plainly. Nothing is to be gained by mincing words. The party to which you and I, sir, belong is in peril—in peril of the failure of the redemption of its pledges of tariff revision and reduction. Plain speech should be used so as to indicate clearly where the responsibility belongs. The failure to redeem this, its most important pledge to the people, means disaster, and may mean ruin to the party.

It is time to speak plainly. The greatest industry in my State is threatened with destruction by this departure from the caucus understanding with the Louisiana Senators. The loss of the bounty for the current year means the loss of $12,000,000 or more to the people of Louisiana. More than that, sir; it means ruin and bankruptcy to many.

The sugar crop of the present year is predicated upon the continuance of the bounty for the year. Contracts have been made by the sugar planters based upon the belief that the bounty for the year would surely be paid them. Anything short of this would be rank injustice and wrong. What justified them in entertaining this belief? Why, sir, the action of the Senate Democratic caucus held in March last. There and then it was agreed that they should be paid the bounty on the crop of 1894.

Again, by the existing law they were guaranteed the bounty for the year. That law has not yet been repealed. It is still in existence and in force. The year—the calendar year—is now more than half gone. The bounty for the year is more than half earned at this time. Planting of crops in this country is regulated according to the calendar year and by the seasons. The sugar cane crop was planted in the winter and the spring of the early part of the year, and the sugar beet crop in the spring and early summer of the year.

Beet sugar making in California began last Monday, and in Nebraska and other parts of the Union will be commenced next month. The cane crop of Louisiana is rapidly maturing, and sugar making from cane will begin early in October. The greater part of the expense of the sugar crops of the year has already been incurred.

In this way and in this sense the greater part of the bounty for this year has been earned. If the bounty be cut off now by repeal of the existing law granting it, the fact would still remain that part of the bounty for the year had been actually earned before the repeal of the law; earned by the outlay of funds to make the crop; earned by the fact that the crops of cane and beets out of which the sugar is manufactured have already been grown for the year; earned by the fact that more than half of the calendar year during which the crops are grown from which the sugar is manufactured has elapsed; earned by the fact that in the case of the beet sugar manufacturers licenses for sugar-making for the year have already been issued, under the provisions of the bounty clauses of the McKinley act, and in the case of the cane-sugar manufacturers the licenses have long since been applied for and are now ready to be issued; earned by the fact that the promise of the bounty for the year is contained in existing law still in force and by the promise of the dominant party in this Senate in caucus assembled.

Mr. President, somebody is not living up to this promise and this understanding had in caucus.

Not only has the bounty for the year been stricken out of the bill by the Republican vote of this body, plus the votes of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and three other Democratic Senators, but now comes the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] and moves that the one-eighth differential duty on refined sugars be stricken out.

Mr. President, not one word of objection to this one-eighth duty did the Senator from Wisconsin urge in the Democratic caucus; not one word of objection did he urge to it when the bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole of the Senate.

When the bill was in Committee of the Whole, a motion was made from the Republican side to strike off this one-eighth. How did the Senator from Wisconsin then vote? He voted against it. He was then adhering to the caucus agreement.

Why is he not doing so now? What change has come over him now, that he should so suddenly about-face and change his position from one of adherence to the caucus understanding to one of violation of that understanding?

Ah, Mr. President, the scarecrow used by the Senator from Wisconsin and by others to frighten the Senate away from this one-eighth duty is the sugar trust.

Somebody is riding the sugar trust as a hobby. Somebody is seeking to make a good deal of capital out of its alleged connection with legislation relating to the tariff. I speak plainly, Mr. President, but I speak without intention of offense.

The sugar trust—or the sugar-refining company, more properly—no doubt has a large interest in the retention of this one-eighth duty, but so have the sugar-producers of the country. It is a fact that all the beet sugars made in the country are refined sugars. It is a further fact that we manufactured in Louisiana last year 600,000,000 pounds of cane sugars, of which 74 per cent were refined sugars, in the sense that they tested at and above No. 16 Dutch standard in color (which is the dividing line between raw and refined sugars); sugars ready for consumption on leaving the sugarhouse; marketable sugars in quality and color. Now, these sugars enjoy the additional protection which springs from the one-eighth differential duty just as the sugars refined by the trust do. Therefore, the duty of one-eighth is in the bill for the benefit of the sugar-producers as much as it is for the trust. It was part of the stipulation of the caucus agreement. It is wanted by the people for whom my voice is raised to-day.

It can not be stricken out by Democratic votes without a violation of the caucus understanding.

That caucus understanding, Mr. President, is as binding in good faith and morals to-day as it was when the bill was under consideration in the Senate before going to the conference between the two Houses.

I ask Senators on this side of the Chamber to pause and consider well this matter before voting to further reduce the sugar schedule.

It is already below the danger line. I ask them, and the Senate conferees representing them, to see to it that the caucus understanding in reference to the bounty for this year be reinstated in the conference.

This is but just and fair to those of us on this side of the Chamber who in good faith accepted this caucus understanding and acted upon it; it is but just and fair to those of our countrymen in Louisiana and elsewhere who are interested vitally in the retention of the bounty for the year and who all these months have been relying upon this promise of the caucus.

Mr. President, it will be remembered that when the pending measure passed the Senate, it did so by a majority of 5 votes; but if the 2 votes of the Senators from Louisiana had been cast against it, there would have been a precarious majority of 1 only.

Notwithstanding the fact that the understanding had in Democratic conference had been violated by striking out the bounty for the year in the Senate, the Louisiana Senators, under protest, cast their votes in favor of passing the bill through the Senate in order that it might go to the conference, hoping that in conference the bounty which had been agreed upon as stated would there be restored.

But now, when the conferees on the part of the Senate report to this body a disagreement with the House conferees, Senators on this side of the Chamber are not content with what has heretofore been done towards reduction of the sugar schedule as agreed upon in caucus, but we find a Democratic Senator, who was a member of that caucus, moving to still further reduce the schedule by seeking to abolish the one-eighth differential duty.

Mr. President, I am not here for the purpose of making any threat, and I do not wish to be understood as doing so; but I do say that those of us who represent upon this floor the sugar producers of the United States desire that our people be treated in good faith in this tariff bill. Taking from us the bounty imperils the 43 votes which are needed to enact this measure into law. Taking from us now the one-eighth duty still further imperils this vote.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] took the position in his remarks, following those submitted by my colleague, that the 40 per cent ad valorem is about as high a rate of duty as it has been usual to place upon sugar in past tariff enactments. The Senator from Ohio, if I understood him aright, was certainly mistaken in that statement.

The last tariff enactment preceding the McKinley act of 1890 was the tariff law of 1883; and surely the Senator from Ohio has not forgotten that the duty upon sugar, as levied by the act of 1883, ran from 1¾ to 3¾ cents specific duty per pound. The 40 per cent ad valorem in the present bill will average only from 1 to 1.1 cents per pound, calculated on a specific basis.

The sugar producers of Louisiana and throughout the country were well content with the duties as fixed by the act of 1883, and it was over their protest that those duties were stricken down by the McKinley act of 1890, when raw sugars were placed upon the free list and a bounty in lieu thereof given. But they acquiesced in the same and adjusted their business of sugar making and sugar manufacturing to the new order of things. That enactment of the bounty was to last fifteen years.

Now, here is a tariff bill which proposes to repeal the law of 1890 and in lieu of it to give a duty of 40 per cent, with an eighth and a tenth upon refined sugars. This change from the bounty system back to the duty or tax system should not be too sudden. The sugar producers ought to be allowed to meet the unusual expenses incurred by the purchase of new and enlarged machinery, predicated upon the continuance of the bounty, by being accorded the bounty for the current year.

Mr. President, while I concede, as a legal proposition, that the legislative power has a right to withdraw the bounty for the future, I deny that bounties earned can be withdrawn by the legislative power. The beet-sugar manufacturers commenced the manufacture of sugar from beets, as I have heretofore stated, last Monday in California. The cane crop of Louisiana is, as heretofore stated, approaching maturity, and it must be conceded by all fair-minded people that a part at least of the bounty for the current year has been already earned.

I hold that the sugar producers do not have actually to manufacture the sugar, under the circumstances, before the bounty, at least in part, is earned. As stated, the greater part of the expense of cultivating the sugar crop for this year in Louisiana has already been incurred, and it now remains only to grind the cane in the sugar mills and make it into sugar to earn the full bounty for the current year.

Now, if part of the bounty for the year has been earned, and earned before the law granting the bounty had been repealed, it is not in the power of Congress to withdraw the bounties so earned.

It is well settled that bounties earned can not be withdrawn

by legislative action. When earned they acquire the character of vested rights. (See Cooley's Constitutional Legislation, 383, 384; Meyer on Vested Rights, page 52, sec. 268; Calder vs. Henderson, Federal Reporter, vol. 54, page 802; 9 Mich. Reports, page 327; 80 Mich. Reports, page 205; 19 Mich. Reports, page 259.)

Mr. President, it is to be hoped that when the bill goes back in the conference between the two Houses, the justice of the claim of the sugar producers of the United States for the bounty for the present year will be recognized.

I trust it will be considered and that the point I make, that the bounty for the present year is already earned in part will be recognized. I trust further that the Senate conferees will not forget the agreement and understanding upon that point had in Democratic conference.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator from Louisiana permit me?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he is not mistaken in regard to any specific agreement being had as to sugar or any of the other matters at the time to which he refers? I think he will find that the whole matter was left absolutely and entirely to the Finance Committee, and that no details were entered into in that caucus, so far as any caucus action or conference action was taken.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator from West Virginia will recollect, when I recall it to his attention, that in a general way a member of the Finance Committee stated in the conference what the sugar schedule would be, and that the 40 per cent, with the eighth and the tenth and the bounty for the present year, formed part of it. If the Senator from West Virginia does not recollect that, I do, and other Senators recollect it. There can be no doubt that such was the case.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator from Louisiana permit me? I myself do not propose to go into any of the details as to what occurred in a private conference of Democrats, more than to say that there was no action by the conference on any details in reference to the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There can be no doubt, I repeat, that the general outline of the sugar schedule was there given, and just as it was there given it was placed in the tariff bill as reported by the Finance Committee. My friend from New York [Mr. HILL] nods in assent to the statement that what the sugar schedule should be was there stated. He now is in a position of antagonism to sugar, and yet in that conference, which he attended, he did not have one single objection to raise to any part of the sugar schedule as it was stated to the caucus.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me for one moment? Without going into the details of what took place at the Democratic caucus, I simply desire to say that, as the Senator from Louisiana knows, I dissented entirely from all the conclusions of that caucus openly and fairly. Everybody understood my position, that I was not bound and would not be bound by the caucus.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not first inject into this discussion the reference to what was done in the Democratic caucus. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Delaware were the first to do that. The fact that they did so is sufficient justification for me to still further allude to what took place there.

The Senator from New York had there a good deal to say in opposition to the income provision of the bill, but not a word of objection did he, or the Senator from Wisconsin, who now makes the motion in opposition to the one-eighth differential duty, or the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who supports the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, urge in opposition to the one-eighth or any other part of the sugar schedule as outlined in the conference.

They urge their objections now; but having been silent then, they should be estopped from objecting now. I ask that there be carried out in good faith by the 41 Democratic votes on this side, needed with the 2 votes of the Senators from Louisiana to enact this measure into law, what was said, understood, and agreed on in the caucus. I repeat that I am not saying this in any spirit of menace. I am saying it because I believe it is my duty to say it, and to speak plainly.

There is not a Democrat in the Senate or in the United States who is more anxious for the passage of a tariff-revision law, repealing the iniquities of the McKinley act, than I am; but while we are enacting a tariff-revision law, doing away with the iniquitous McKinley act, I wish good faith adhered to in dealing with that schedule which affects the people of my State.

The letter of the President read yesterday in the coördinate legislative branch of Congress declares in effect that a tax upon sugar is a proper tax, and that any bill designed to revise the tariff should impose this tax. He even goes further, and intimates that a duty upon refined sugars is a proper thing to concede also in the bill.

Yet the Senator from Wisconsin, ignoring that part of the President's recommendation in his letter, now moves to strike out the one-eighth differential duty upon refined sugars, which would leave the sugar schedule with only the 40 per cent and the tenth of 1 cent discriminating duty against the bounty-fed sugars of Europe.

No such sugar schedule would ever have had the votes of the Louisiana Senators on this floor. From the beginning of the consideration of the bill by the Senate three or four months ago it was necessary, in order to get the bill beyond the threshold of consideration, to have the votes of the Louisiana Senators.

In good faith the votes of the Louisiana Senators were cast with the Finance Committee, in support of their amendments and their recommendations, up to the time when the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] moved to change the date when the sugar schedule should go into effect from January 1 to the time when the bill shall have passed into a law. Then occurred the first violation of the caucus understanding, and it was not by either of the Senators from Louisiana.

I trust, Mr. President, all these matters will be considered in the conference between the two Houses. I hope the bill will be such that my vote can be cast for it, for I repeat there is no man in this Chamber, or elsewhere in the Democratic fold, more sincerely desirous at heart of having a tariff revision bill passed than I.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that when the Senate adjourn today it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). The Senator from Missouri moves that when the Senate adjourn today it be to meet on Monday next. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HILL. Is there any special reason why that course should be pursued?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no special reason for it.

Mr. HARRIS. The question is not a debatable one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "yea," and I will vote to make a quorum if that is necessary.

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. MCLAURIN'S name was called). I wish to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. MURPHY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. If there is no objection I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PUGH. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. This seems to be a political question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not notice when I voted that the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] is not in the Chamber. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. BRICE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted upon this question, but it has assumed a political bearing, I understand. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] if this is a case where I should observe my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]? If it is, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not one to give an opinion on that point. The Senator from Ohio must decide for himself.

Mr. BRICE. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] understands that he has a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

Mr. PASCO. I have been requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and I voted inadvertently. Since that time the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has transferred his pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and therefore I let my vote stand.

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and I am advised since I voted that he is not present. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—30.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 20, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. McCARTY, D. D., of Washington.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FISH HATCHERY, PHILADELPHIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Fish Commissioners, submitting, in response to House resolution dated June 9, 1894, an opinion as to the desirability of the Government establishing a fish hatchery in the grounds of the Zoological Society of Philadelphia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 5294 REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend section 5294 Revised Statutes, so as to make it apply to vessels, immigration, quarantine, and alien contract labor laws, as well as to the laws relating to steam vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

G. W. GRIFFITH VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of G. W. Griffith against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNOCCUPIED AND UNPRODUCTIVE PROPERTY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a tabulated statement of unoccupied and unproductive property of the United States leased under the act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RESURVEY OF GRANT AND HOOKER COUNTIES, NEBR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 6720) "providing for the resurvey of Grant and Hooker counties, in the State of Nebraska," with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Line 8, after the word "same," insert "so far as these lands are concerned."

Line 9, after "abrogated," insert "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide claims of any actual occupant of any of said lands to the lands so occupied; and that the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. MCRAE, Mr. HALL of Minnesota, and Mr. MEIKLEJOHN.

SOLDIERS HOMES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 236) entitled "An act to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to soldiers' homes," with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 13, strike out all after "California" down to and including "Indiana," line 15, and insert: "And to homes for the widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors established and maintained by any State or Territory."

Page 1, line 17, after "Territory" insert: "Receiving aid from the United States under legislation of Congress."

Pages 1 and 2, strike "journals of each House of Congress at each and every session, all" and insert "session."

Page 2, line 20, after "documents" insert, "in the abridgment thereof."

Page 2, line 21, strike out all after "RECORD," down to and including "Congress," line 22.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company.

The amendments were read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments to the Senate, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to make inquiry——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to inquire the purpose of the discontinuance of that portion of the road of the Metropolitan Railroad Company which now runs along Florida avenue to Seventh street and up Seventh street?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand it the situation there is about this: At the head of Ninth street the Metropolitan cars run along Boundary to Seventh street, and up Seventh street about 100 yards, over a line used by the Brightwood Street Railroad, which uses the overhead trolley. The proposition is simply that this road shall not, by running round on Seventh street, encumber the operations of the other line, the Brightwood line, running outside the District, and using the overhead trolley.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The statement as to the portion of road proposed to be discontinued is undoubtedly correct; but it seems to me the patrons of the Ninth street line ought to have the privilege of being carried to the terminus of the Brightwood road; that the connection should be continuous.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I quite agree with the gentleman as to that; and I think if the House should assent to that amendment we ought to accompany it with an amendment providing for continuing the connection.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I observe that the Senate has struck out the word "electric." Can the gentleman state what is the purpose of the Senate in that regard?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not, except by reference to the debate published in the RECORD, by which it appears that the word "electric" was stricken out upon the request of some Senator in order, as stated, that the company might have the right to use a pneumatic system, if it saw fit to do so, or any underground or surface motor. The company did not ask that privilege and do not desire it, as I understand. So far as I have understood the expression of the members of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, they favor reinserting the word "electric." Certainly I do.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I raise no objection on that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not believe there is any pneumatic system by which the road can be operated.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do hope that the House conferees will, in the interest of the people of the District, insist upon the continuance of the right of passengers on this line to connect with the suburban line that I have referred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think that is right.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is one amendment to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee. I refer to an amendment in the fifth section, on page 5. I think disagreement to that amendment ought to be insisted on. The amendment emasculates the section, making it of no value whatever.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand the gentleman from Ohio, he desires that the text of the House bill be adhered to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is it exactly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have had no conference with my colleagues on the committee on that subject, and therefore can not undertake to bind them by anything I may say. I have not examined the amendment carefully, but it strikes me the gentleman's proposition is a reasonable one.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to have it understood that nonconcurrence of the House in this amendment is something more than formal; that the House really desires to insist on its disagreement to this particular amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. So far as I understand there is no intention to yield that point.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The effort on the part of the House was, among other things, to compel immediate obedience to the enactments heretofore adopted in the attempt to control this road. And in pursuance of that purpose, a provision was adopted requiring the company to complete all these improvements within one year. Under the Senate amendments, they are required to do this with reference to one part of their road; but in regard to another part they are granted two years, and no penalties are to attach for nonperformance with regard to that part of the road until the end of three years.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I am advised that the text of the bill that is now on the desk shows that the word "two" has been substituted in place of "three" in the printed bill. There seems to be some mistake in the text as printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was right in my statement, made privately to the gentleman from Iowa, that the amendment of the Senate reduced the time to two years.

Mr. HEARD. They changed the text in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. For myself I want to bring the completion of this work down to the very shortest time possible; but I doubt, without expressing any opinion upon the matter, or having had an opportunity to examine the proofs in respect to it, if the work can be done at an earlier period than the two years fixed in the amendment. However, I shall insist, as far as I am able to insist, that the work shall be done at an earlier period than that if it be demonstrated by the proof that such a thing is possible. The amendment of the Senate, as I understand it, however, calls for two years and not three, as the gentleman supposes. Here are the amendments; the gentlemen can examine them.

Mr. HEPBURN. Again, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the matter I am about to mention now, I refer to it with a great deal of delicacy. I have great respect for the gentlemen composing the Committee on the District of Columbia; but I would submit in the appointment of the conference committee—or I would like to suggest to the Chair—whether it would be an improper thing to place on the committee gentlemen who, on the floor, were opposed to every one of the amendments that the House engrafted on the bill and that the Senate eliminated?

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow a correction?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman is mistaken about one material point, that is about the use of the word "electric." That, the committee accepted, and urged on the floor of the House. And more than that, let me say to the gentleman, in conference with a Senator having this bill in charge in the Senate, he plainly intimated that there would be no material resistance to the restoration of that word, which of course we will insist upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is one important matter. But, Mr. Speaker, the most important in all, in my judgment, is the amendment with reference to the time of completion. The gentleman from Tennessee has already intimated that he is prepared to give away the propositions and commands of the House in that regard.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa has no right to quote me that way, because I said I had not investigated and was not prepared to express a decided opinion upon the matter. I did take the position, when the matter was pending in the House, that I did not think one year was long enough, and I have not changed my mind since. I did think, however, that three years was a reasonable time; but now I am almost prepared to say, although I have not, as I stated before, sufficiently investigated the subject or examined the proof to say that the work can be done in two, though one year, I am satisfied, is too short a time.

Mr. HEPBURN. The House thought one year was sufficient.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will allow us to get on now with the report, as I am being pressed by gentlemen having in charge the special order for to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. In a moment.

I want to ask the gentleman, if it is proper to do so, his view in regard to the amendment of the Senate in lines 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 on page 5? The House provided that the District Commissioners shall have power to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Railway Company by other railroad companies in the District on such terms and conditions as the Commissioners shall deem just.

The amendment of the Senate provides that the District Commissioners shall have power, "in all cases where the lines of one or more companies coincide under routes authorized by Congress with the route of the Metropolitan Railway Company, and where the nature of the mechanical power used by such company will allow," to permit the use of such tracks, and so on. That, I think, destroys the whole purpose of the House amendments.

The purpose of the provision, as inserted by the House, was to secure the admission of suburban routes into the central parts of the city, on roads already established, so as not to insist on the duplication of tracks. Routes that have no authority to come within the limits of the city—companies that have no routes that coincide with the Metropolitan Railway tracks—upon the adoption of that amendment will be absolutely deprived of the power of coming within the city limits. In other words, the amendment destroys the purpose of the House. I hope the gentleman appreciates that fact and understands the purpose of the House in connection with it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do appreciate it fully——

Mr. HEPBURN. It was to bring into the central parts of the city those cars belonging to roads whose companies did not have the power to come in at present, and who have no routes that coincide or are parallel to the route of the Metropolitan Railway. If this amendment of the Senate is accepted it renders the purpose of the House entirely abortive.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa must bear in mind, however, that Congress must exercise discretion and power in this matter. Congress would not authorize the Commissioners to charter a railroad in the city or to make one coincide with the tracks of the Metropolitan road where it did not do so; but wherever Congress itself has authorized such a thing to be done, of course there could be no objection such as that urged by the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. But here is the point. Let us suppose the road reached from the suburbs to the terminus of this Metropolitan road, say on Connecticut avenue. Now, it has no authority to come any farther; and if this amendment is adopted its cars can not come into the central part of the city by using, on proper compensation, the tracks of the Metropolitan road. It was the purpose of the House to accomplish just that thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that.

I want to say only this in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that so far as being appointed on the conference committee is concerned, I am not a candidate for the place, and do not desire it. I would rather, in fact, be relieved of that duty. If the Speaker, in his discretion, sees proper to put other gentlemen on that committee it will be satisfactory to me, and, I suppose, to the other members of the committee. I am perfectly content to leave the matter to the Speaker.

I now demand the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to nonconcur and ask a conference with the Senate, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 2.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Subsequently the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HEARD, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. POST.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The Speaker laid before the House the following Senate bills, which were read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

A bill (S. 1778) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1211) for the relief of pay inspector John H. Stevenson, of the United States Army—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2024) authorizing additional compensation to the assistant commissioners to the industrial exhibition held at Melbourne, Australia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. 1591) to provide for the reservation, sale, and settlement of certain lands in several of the States and Territories—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. WISE, until Tuesday next, on account of business.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and ask a conference.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to this bill in gross, and to ask for a conference.

Mr. REED. What is the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. The legislative bill.

Mr. REED. I should like to have some explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill again.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. REED. I should like to know the nature of the differences between the two Houses, if the gentleman can give the outline of them.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Senate have made comparatively few amendments to the bill. One amendment increases by $100,000 the fund for the payment of special pension examiners. There is another proposition, to change somewhat the organization of the Naval Observatory, and also a proposition to prohibit an officer of the United States who has a salary, or receives a compensation of $2,500, from holding any other office, except when expressly authorized by law.

Mr. REED. I should like to have that amendment relating to the Naval Observatory read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think there will be any trouble about it.

Mr. REED. I wanted to say a little something about it. I should like to have the amendment read. I wish to call the attention of the House to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment relating to the Naval Observatory.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, after line 8, insert the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person selected from civil life, learned in the science of astronomy, who shall be styled director of astronomy, at the United States Naval Observatory, and who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, which is hereby appropriated. Such director shall have charge of all astronomical work at the United States Naval Observatory, not including the Nautical Almanac, and of all astronomers, assistant astronomers, and computers now employed at said Observatory; and such as may be hereafter appointed shall be under the superintendence and control of said director; and all astronomers, assistant astronomers, and computers shall hereafter be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, upon the recommendation of the director of astronomy; the salaries of such astronomers, assistant astronomers, and computers hereafter appointed to be fixed by the President, and all laws relating to astronomers, assistant astronomers, and computers at the United States Naval Observatory are hereby repealed, but nothing herein contained shall affect the salaries or terms of office of persons now holding positions as astronomers, assistant astronomers, or computers at said Observatory."

Mr. REED. I simply want to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, and especially of those gentlemen who will have charge of this matter in the conference, to the fact that that amendment is in its nature somewhat misleading. It is not a devotion of the Observatory to the cause of astronomy. It does not take it away from the Navy Department, but it only makes a very feeble pretense in that direction, and is an amendment most unfortunate in its character, and one which the House conferees ought to resist with all the power that they have. It does not in any way dislodge the naval officers from complete control. On the contrary, it puts them in more offensive control than they ever were before, if there was anything offensive about it at all, in regard to which I make no charges whatever and no suggestions. It simply provides that there shall be an astronomer who shall have control of what will be found to be only a very few people, when the matter is figured down, a few computers and a few assistants, leaving the Observatory entirely under its present control. Now, on its face it pretends to do something else. If it is proposed to devote that Observatory to science, under national auspices, free from the control of the Navy Department, why, then, it needs an amendment of a totally different character, and it needs most careful consideration.

The amendment which was proposed in the Senate by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] contains the element of a reformation in regard to the observatory. I felt it my duty to call the attention of the conferees to this, because in the multiplicity of matters before them they may not have noticed precisely what that amendment means.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman from Maine has put a proper interpretation upon the Senate amendment, as I understand it; and speaking for myself only, I would say that an amendment proposing a reorganization of so important a branch of the Government service as this is should, in my judgment, have careful consideration by a committee before it is engrafted upon our statutes.

Mr. REED. Has the gentleman looked at the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not.

Mr. REED. I would commend it to the gentleman's attention before the discussion comes up. I ventured to ask this question, because I do not see present any of our friends from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who will be one of the conferees, is before the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I noticed that most of our friends were absent, and had gone, presumably, to hear the answer to the indictment read to the House on yesterday.

Mr. DOCKERY. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who represents the minority, is here.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the following conferees, Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. COOMBS, and Mr. BINGHAM.

TARGET PRACTICE ON SUNDAY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution.

Mr. TUCKER. I believe I will have to demand the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will take but a moment; and I will raise the question upon you if you can not be a little courteous. It would save time not to stop the matter.

Mr. TUCKER. If I were satisfied that it would only take a short time I would not demand the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will withdraw it if it takes more than a few moments.

Mr. TUCKER. Then, on your statement, I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the following statement is being widely published in the press of the country:

"Cedarquist had scruples." "Would not do target practice on Sunday and must go to prison." Omaha, Nebr., July 14.—Charles O. Cedarquist, private, Company A, Second Infantry, has been court-martialed and sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for six months with forfeiture of $10 per month of his pay for the same period.

"Cedarquist refused to go to target practice on Sunday, on the grounds that his religious scruples would not allow him to violate the Sabbath day by discharging firearms. The defense contended that the order was unlawful, in that it enjoined a duty in violation of orders and regulations limiting Sunday labor in the Army to the measure of strict necessity, and that the act required to be done would have been a violation of a law of Nebraska.

Brig. Gen. Brooke affirmed the finding, but ordered, in view of the peculiar circumstances attending the offense, that the sentence be reduced to two months' imprisonment: Therefore,

Resolved, That the honorable Secretary of War be requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the said publication contains a truthful statement of the facts in the case described, and if so to report whether such a conviction and such punishment is authorized by any law of Congress, or practice, orders, or regulations of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. TRACEY. I think it ought to go to a committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that any committees having bills to report may have leave to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-four minutes to 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Committee on the Judiciary was called and passed over with leave to go back. Under the order the gentleman will have the right to do so.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would like for the committee to be called now.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. There was a day assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, and at the close of that day the then acting chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary called up the bill (H. R. 5598), and pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for its consideration the House adjourned. I should like to have the Speaker rule now as to when that bill comes up.

The SPEAKER. It has no status but its place on the Calendar.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There was a day assigned to the consideration of business from the Committee on the Judiciary, and——

The SPEAKER. That day was exhausted, and nothing would come over from that day unless the previous question was ordered; and the bill the gentleman refers to not having reached that stage, would retain its place on the Calendar, just as it was before.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It would retain its place on the Calendar, and it does not come up in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING IN COURTS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 7258) to authorize the comparison of handwriting by courts and juries in cases where the genuineness of a signature or writing is in dispute.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where the genuineness of any signature or writing is in dispute, comparison of such disputed signature or writing with any writings admitted or proved to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings and evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the signature or writing in dispute.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

[Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary in pursuance of correspondence addressed to the Speaker of the House on April 21, 1894; and I ask that those communications be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of letters of Anthony Comstock, post-office inspector of New York, and the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department relating to a change in the rule of evidence in regard to the comparison of handwriting in the trial of cases in the courts of the United States, and I respectfully request that the matter be laid before the House of Representatives for consideration.

Very respectfully,

FRANK H. JONES,
Acting Postmaster-General.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

OFFICE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 19, 1894.

SIR: I call your attention to a copy of a letter written by Inspector Comstock, of New York, to the chief post-office inspector, and by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General referred to me for consideration. I have carefully examined the question presented by Mr. Comstock, and I fully concur with him as to the importance of a legislative declaration by Congress of the rule of evidence recommended by him, which is as follows:

"Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be the genuine handwriting of any person, claimed on the trial to have been made or executed, the disputed instrument or writing shall be permitted and submitted to the court and jury in like manner."

This rule, after a long controversy and many conflicting decisions, was adopted by statute in England in 1854. (17 and 18 Vic., ch. 125, s. 27.) It has also been adopted by statutes in Georgia, Iowa, Louisiana, New Jersey, New York, and Wisconsin, and in the rule under the common law of the States of California, Connecticut, Kansas, Maine, New Hampshire, Ohio, Vermont, and Virginia. The rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States is that "papers, not otherwise competent, can not be introduced in evidence for the mere purpose of enabling a jury to institute a comparison of handwriting."

"Strother vs. Lucas, 6 Pet. (U. S.), 763.
"Moore vs. U. S., 91 U. S., 270.
"Williams vs. Conger, 125 U. S., 397."

I suggest that you transmit to Congress copies of Mr. Comstock's letter and this communication, with the recommendation that the rule of evidence be changed by legislative enactment to conform to the views above expressed.

I hand you herewith letters addressed to the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate for you to sign, if you concur with me.

Very respectfully,

JOHN L. THOMAS,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

NEW YORK CITY, April 10, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: One of the most serious annoyances and embarrassments in the prosecution of criminals for depositing nonmailable matter in the mail arises from the fact that some of the United States judges do not follow the practice prevailing in the State courts in the matter of comparison of handwriting.

There are numerous cases brought to my attention as a post-office inspector where postal laws have been violated, and where we can secure the handwriting of the defendant, and where the examination of the writing used by the defendant in carrying on the unlawful business through the mail shows it to be identical with the handwriting which we are enabled to prove absolutely to be the handwriting of the defendant.

The laws of the State of New York, chapter 555, as approved by the governor, June 9, 1888, read as follows:

"Comparison of a disputed handwriting with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be the genuine handwriting of any person, claimed on the trial to have been made or executed, the disputed instrument or writing shall be permitted and submitted to the court and jury in like manner."

I would very respectfully ask that the attention of the honorable the Postmaster-General and also the attention of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department be called to the difficulty and embarrassment under which the inspectors labor, and to this section of law, as enacted in New York (and other States), and, if possible, a similar law be enacted by Congress, so as to make the rule uniform in all the States.

If this can not be done, then I respectfully urge that it may be sought so far as applying to the proof of offenses against postal laws.

I need hardly offer any argument before the chief inspector, as your experience, I am sure, would enable you to support and favor the enactment of such a law. But in order that I may make myself clear to others who may consider this subject, I desire to present:

First. "The department of mail depredation and its inspectors always move upon probable cause to believe that postal laws are being violated."

This "probable cause" is found upon the face of the newspaper advertisement, or the printed circular or letter, sent out by the fraud who is operating an unlawful scheme or device through the mail.

Again, it comes from complaints of persons who have received unlawful matter sent to them. Or, perchance, some parent or teacher who has found obscene and indecent matter sent to the children.

Second. The moment this probable cause comes to an inspector, his duty is clear, to wit, to ascertain the facts and secure such evidence as shall bring the offending party to justice.

In the case of a person sending obscene matter into a school or seminary, we have the handwriting upon the matter sent of the party thus operating unlawfully through the mails.

Having found his customer he becomes bold. Then the handwriting of the fraud or criminal is easily obtained by means of correspondence, or a returned registered receipt. We can bring the carrier, who has seen defendant write receipts for his registered mail, into court and establish beyond any question the defendant's handwriting.

Under existing rules in this district such handwriting of the defendant would be excluded if offered for comparison.

The same is true of a person violating postal laws by sending lottery circulars or lottery tickets through the mail.

It is especially true of persons who send obscene anonymous writings and papers into homes, and to boys and girls.

While we are obliged to resort to circumstantial evidence to prove all the offenses through the mail, yet one of the strongest circumstances in the transaction, to wit, handwriting, we are deprived of availing ourselves of by this adverse ruling of the courts.

I have had many very flagrant cases which could have properly been brought into the United States court, where the evidence would have been clear and positive, but where we were debarred because of the rigid ruling of the judges, in failing to follow the practice of the State courts.

I do not see any remedy for this embarrassment except legislation by Congress.

Such an act, permitting a comparison of handwriting, would facilitate the enforcement of postal laws, and make available most conclusive and convincing evidence of guilt, and evidence that would be most easily applied by any ordinary mind (to say nothing of an expert), and would enable the inspectors to establish the guilt of many a man who now goes unwhipped of justice, notwithstanding the fact that he is guilty of sending the most shameful and degrading matters through the mail.

I have the honor to be, with very great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
Post-Office Inspector.

M. D. WHEELER, ESQ.,
Chief Post-Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, this correspondence was referred by the Speaker of the House to the Judiciary Committee on the 21st of April, 1894, and the bill that is now brought before the House is the unanimous report of that committee. The rule of evidence as now adhered to by the Supreme Court of the United States is that where the genuineness of a paper is involved, papers can not be offered independently as standards by which either the court or the jury may determine the genuineness of the paper in question.

This rule has been modified by judicial decisions in several of the States, in most of them perhaps, so as to allow this to be done. This old rule of the common law was changed by act of Parliament in England in 1854. Section 27 of the common-law procedure act of 1854 in England is as follows:

SEC. 27. Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writing and evidence of witnesses respecting same may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute.

The law thus changed has been found to be a great improvement on the law as it prevailed in England prior to the passage of the act.

To show that there is no reason for retaining the old common-law rule of evidence the Supreme Court holds that while papers can not be introduced in the case for the mere purpose of enabling the jury to institute a comparison of handwriting, not being competent for any other purpose, yet where other writings admitted or proved to be genuine are properly in evidence for other purposes, the handwriting of such instruments may be compared by the jury with that of the instrument or signature in question and the genuineness thus inferred from such comparison. The rule allows comparison as a proper method of determining the genuineness of writings, but denies parties the means for making the comparison.

As stated, this rule was changed by an act passed in 1854 in England. In 1874 a similar statute was passed in New Jersey. Like statutes have been passed in Wisconsin, Iowa, New York, California, and perhaps other States, and in most of the States the rule has been modified by decisions of the courts. This bill is for the purpose of applying the same rule which prevails in those States to trials of cases in the criminal courts of the United States.

The letters from the Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department and the Post-Office Inspector show that it is important that the rule now prevailing in the United States courts should be changed by statute. The bill was unanimously reported from the Judiciary. The report so fully sets forth the reasons for the passage of this act that I request that it be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The report is as follows:

Mr. WOLVERTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 7258):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the letter of Hon. F. H. Jones, Acting Postmaster-General, dated April 18, 1894 (Executive Document No. 196), addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the accompanying letters of the Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, to the Postmaster-General, and letter of the post-office inspector at New York City, addressed to the chief post-office inspector at Washington, D. C., have considered the question submitted in the said letter and report thereon as follows:

The rule of evidence as laid down and adhered to by the Supreme Court of the United States is that papers can not be introduced in the cause for the mere purpose of enabling the jury to institute a comparison of handwriting, unless such papers are competent for some other purposes in the cause, but where other writings admitted or proved to be genuine are properly in evidence for other purposes, the handwriting of such instruments may be compared by the jury with that of the instrument or signature in question, and its genuineness inferred from such comparison.

In England and in many of the States this rule has been modified by legislative enactment. In many other States it has been changed by judicial decisions, so that in most of the States the rule is to allow the jury to compare the handwriting of papers admitted to be genuine or proved beyond question to be in the handwriting of the party to be put in evidence to enable the court or jury to compare them with the disputed writing.

Section 27 of the common-law procedure act of 1854 in England is as follows:

"SEC. 27. Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writing and evidence of witnesses respecting same may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute."

In New Jersey, act of March 27, 1874, section 19, provides as follows:

"In all cases where the genuineness of any signature or writing is in dispute, comparison of the disputed signature or writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writing and the testimony of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court or jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the signature or writing in dispute: Provided, nevertheless, That where the handwriting of any person is sought to be disproved by comparison with other writings made by him not admissible in evidence for any other purpose, such writings, before they can be compared with the signature or writing in dispute must, if sought to be used before the court or jury by the party in whose handwriting they are, be proved to have been written before any dispute arose as to the genuineness of the signature or writing in controversy." (Revision of New Jersey, page 381, section 19.)

In Wisconsin, volume 2, Sanborn and Berryman Annotated Statutes, section 4189, page 2157, is as follows:

"Comparison of a disputed handwriting with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses in all trials of proceedings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute."

In the State of Iowa there is the following act:

"Section 4905, of McClain's Annotated Code of Iowa, volume 2, page 1446: Evidence respecting handwriting may be given by comparison made by experts or by the jury with writings of the same person which are proved to be genuine."

State of New York Revised Statutes, Codes and Laws, Birdseye, volume 1, page 1028, section 91:

"Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing, proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses in all trials and proceedings; and such writing, and evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness of the writing in dispute."

In California there is the following provision:

"Evidence respecting handwriting may also be given by comparison made by the witness or the jury with writing admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the judge."

Law of Evidence, Wharton, volume 1, section 711:

"By the Roman law the genuineness of a contested writing may be sustained by witnesses comparing such writing with the other writing acknowledged to be genuine. Some fluctuation of opinion, however, was exhibited as to the writing to be taken as a basis for such comparison. It was held that in order to put a greater check on forgery writings thus exhibited must be publicly registered or be testified by three witnesses. Subsequently it was declared that for the same purpose proof may be by writings deposited in public archives. The substantial result, however, finally reached, is that, to enable a writing to be adopted as a standard, it must be demonstrated to be genuine.

"It makes no matter what the writing is thus adopted. It may be, as Gensler argues, a love letter, or it may be a testament. If genuine, it may be received as a standard. By the English common law it is said such a comparison is inadmissible. The reasoning on which this conclusion rests is that handwriting, especially among those with whom writing is not a habit, often changes from period to period. A man not accustomed to writing may write now very different from the way he did five years ago. * * *

"In the United States we have a series of authorities which rest on the old English rule, and hence following this reason exclude evidence of genuineness based on comparison of hands when offered as independent proof. Under the act of Parliament of 28 and 29 Victoria, chapter 18, above recited, it has been held, first, that any writing the genuineness of which is proved to the satisfaction of the judge may be used for the purpose of comparison, although they may not be admissible in evidence for any other purpose.

(Eagen vs. Cowan, 30 Law Times, 223; Birch against Ridgeway, 1 Fost. and Fin., 270; Cresswell vs. Jackson, 2 Fost. and Fin., 24.)

"Next, that the comparison may be made either by witnesses or without the intervention of any witnesses at all by the jury themselves. (Cobbett vs. Kilminster, 4 Fost. and Fin., 490.) Or, in the event of there being no jury, by the court. If, therefore, an action be brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor, who by his plea has denied the indorsement of the drawer, it seems that the jury may, by simply comparing with an indorsement of the drawee which is admitted to be genuine, find for the plaintiff, even though witnesses be called to disprove the bill. (Taylar's Evidence, section 1607.)

"This rule seems to have been adopted in many States by a statute and in others by decisions of courts.

"In the United States courts the old common-law doctrine is adhered to. In Moore vs. The United States (91 U. S., 270) the question is thus discussed by Bradley, J.:

"'The general rule of the common law, disallowing comparison of handwriting as proof of signature, has exceptions equally as well settled as the rule itself. One of these exceptions is that if a paper, admitted to be in the handwriting of a party, or to have been subscribed by him, is in evidence for some other purpose in the cause, the signature or paper in question may be compared with it by the jury.'

"It is not distinctly stated in this case that the writing used as a basis of comparison was admitted to be in the claimant's hand, but it was conceded by counsel that it was, in fact, a power of attorney, given by him to his attorney in fact, by virtue of which he appeared and presented the claim to the court. This certainly amounted to a declaration on the part that it was not his hand, and to contend the contrary would be fraud upon the court."

Williams against Conger, 125 U. S., 397, Justice Bradley, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"'It is well settled that the witness who only knows a person's handwriting by seeing it in papers produced on the trial and proved, or admitted to be his, will not be allowed from such knowledge to testify to that person's handwriting unless the witness be an expert and the writing in question is of such antiquity that witnesses acquainted with the person's handwriting can not be had. (Green on Evidence, paragraph 578.)

"'It is also the result of the weight of authority that papers can not be introduced in the case for the mere purpose of enabling the jury to institute a comparison of handwriting, said papers not being competent for any other purpose. (Green on Evidence, paragraphs 579, 581.) But where other writings, admitted or proved to be genuine, are properly in evidence for other purposes, the handwriting of such instrument may be compared by the jury with that of the instrument or signature in question and the genuineness inferred from such comparison, etc.'

"In many States it is a settled practice to admit as a basis of comparison any papers, whether in themselves relevant to the issue or not, if they can be shown to the satisfaction of the court to be the writing of the party whose signature is disputed. In Pennsylvania, however, it is said that at common law, the proof from comparison of hands must be viewed as supplementary and can not be relied upon exclusively, and comparison is to be made by the jury and not by experts. To the admission of a contested paper it is essential that it shall be proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the court. Such standard must be substantively proved. It can not be proved by comparison. (Wharton's Law of Evidence, volume I, section 714.)

"In Pennsylvania, the case of Travis against Brown (43 Pa. St., 9) is a leading case on the subject."

There are several reasons, which will appear from the examination of the letters referred to your committee, why the rule of evidence in United States courts should be changed so as to allow any paper or writing admitted or proved to be in the handwriting of the party who is alleged to have executed the disputed instrument to be submitted to the court or jury for their inspection to enable them to determine upon the genuineness of the instrument in question. In England and in the States where the rule of evidence has been changed by statute, it is claimed to have proved beneficial. It is difficult to see what substantial objection there could be to the change.

Under the rule which now prevails in the United States courts, unless there happens to be in the evidence some paper admitted to be genuine and in evidence for other purposes than that of comparison of handwriting, the jury is deprived of this means of determining upon the genuineness of the disputed instrument, which in many criminal cases where there is a conflict of testimony, might necessarily result in the acquittal of the defendant who otherwise ought to have been convicted. Your committee has prepared a bill, accompanying this report, providing that in all cases where the genuineness of any signature or writing is in dispute, comparison of the disputed signature or writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writing, and the testimony of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court or jury as to the genuineness or otherwise of the signature or writing in dispute.

Your committee recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us have a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOLVERTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FUNDING ACT OF ARIZONA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6754) to amend section 15 of an act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona, approved June 25, 1890.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890, and paragraph 2952 (section 15) of said act, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto as follows:

"Provided further, however, That the present outstanding warrants, certificates, and other evidences of indebtedness issued subsequent to December 31, 1890, for the necessary and current expenses of carrying on the Territorial government only, together with such warrants as may be issued for such purpose for the years ending December 31, 1894, and December 31, 1895, may also be funded and bonds issued for the redemption thereof; and thereafter no warrants, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness shall be allowed to issue or be legal where the same is in excess of the limit prescribed by the Harrison act."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill carrying to a further extent the funding act of Arizona, so as to prevent the payment of 10 per cent on outstanding warrants for the current expenses of the Territory. It is desired to fund them under the funding act until the collection of the taxes, so as to be able to start on a cash basis. This is purely a local matter extending our funding act, and the bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HUNTER. I see that it provides for extending the time up to 1895.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes. That is, until the collection of taxes.

Mr. HUNTER. But if the Territory should become a State in the meantime would not that have some effect on the provisions of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It would not have any effect, for the debt would be bonded as it arose, and the limitation placed by the Territorial Legislature, which does not meet until February, 1895. The Legislature can provide then for everything that happens thereafter, and this is intended only to fix the time up to the meeting of the Territorial Legislature.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COLLECTION OF TAXES UPON CORPORATIONS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6284) to prevent interference in the collection of State, county, and municipal taxes assessed against corporations and corporate property, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That taxes heretofore or hereafter assessed by State, county, or municipal authority against any corporation or corporate property shall not be classed as debts to be passed upon in the first instance by any court of the United States, but shall be collectible by the proper authorities of such State, county, or municipality according to the assessment, whether such corporation be in the hands of a receiver or not; and no judge or court of the United States shall have any other or greater authority or power to enjoin, restrain, or in any way interfere with the collection of such taxes against any corporation or corporate property in the hands or under the management of a receiver than if no such receivership existed; and the seizure as well as the sale of any property for the collection of any such taxes shall divest the receiver and the court of all control over the same: Provided, That any and all property taken out of the hands of the receiver and from under the control of the court and not sold for such taxes shall be returned to the receiver, and shall again be under the control of the court: And provided further, That a corporation or receiver of a corporation shall have the same right that a citizen of such State, county, or municipality may have, under the laws of such State, to apply for the abatement of any tax, or to sue or defend on account of any alleged overassessment or improper or illegal assessment in any court having jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts, in so far as the same are repugnant to or inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to enable States, counties, and municipalities within the States to collect taxes against corporations in the hands of receivers with as little trouble or hindrance as they encounter in collecting them from individuals or corporations not in the hands of receivers. The occasion of the bill is that in a number of instances troubles have arisen because some of the Federal judges have held that where corporations are in the hands of receivers the taxes occupy the position merely of claims or debts, that the court is to pass upon the matter, that there is no authority to collect the taxes, and that the collection of them may be delayed as long as may seem to the court fit or proper.

Some difficulties arose in South Carolina and in other States over this matter. In most of the States of the Union, I believe, provisions similar to those contained in this bill are made by State law. The tax laws operate equally upon all persons. All have the same opportunity to defend against claims for taxes; all have the same recourse to the courts. That is the provision of this bill.

Since the bill was reported, it has been decided in South Carolina (by Judge Simonton of the circuit court, I believe) that this is, in effect, the law now, but it has been thought desirable in order to prevent conflicts between State and Federal authorities, and in order to facilitate the collection of taxes and to prevent any sort of trouble or delay, that this bill should pass. I think this statement sufficiently explains the object and purport of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How far does it go in providing a remedy?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It simply provides, in effect, that proceedings for the collection of taxes against a corporation in the hands of a receiver appointed by a Federal judge or court shall be the same as in other cases, with precisely the same rights on the part of the corporation to defend or to institute proceedings in any court having jurisdiction, whether State of Federal.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with these remarks and as a part of them I will have printed the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, which is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill 4927, having duly considered the same, recommend that the accompanying substitute therefor be adopted.

The measure reported by the committee is designed to put corporations in the hands of receivers appointed by judges and courts of the United States in the same condition with respect to the collection of State, county, and municipal taxes as if no receivership existed.

It often happens that corporations, by orders of United States courts, pass into the hands of receivers and remain there for a number of years; during which time taxes assessed against such corporations and their property are paid, or not paid, according to the judgment and direction, and in some cases the caprice, of the Federal court. Your committee believe that the power to levy and collect taxes is one without which the State governments can not be maintained or perpetuated. This power and authority, essential to the maintenance of State governments, is often interfered with and suspended by action of the courts in the cases of corporations managed by receivers.

These courts frequently assume authority to pass upon and classify demands for taxes as if such demands were of no higher character than ordinary money liabilities. By this practice corporations in the hands of receivers are enabled to defer the payment of taxes levied against them almost indefinitely, to the great inconvenience and prejudice of the States and of the municipalities within the States.

Your committee are of opinion that corporations in the hands of receivers should enjoy no greater immuntity with respect to the payment of taxes than that which is possessed by corporations carrying on their business operations outside of court and without receivers, and that the tax laws should operate without interruption upon corporations as well as upon natural persons, whatever may be the financial condition of either.

The attention of the committee was specially drawn to this subject by the bill introduced by Mr. LATIMER, of South Carolina, for which the accompanying measure is a substitute, and the condition of affairs in that State which led to the introduction of that bill. Without going into the merits of the controversy between the State and local authorities on the one hand and the United States courts upon the other, it is evident that the laws of South Carolina for the assessment and collection of taxes can not be enforced against certain railroad corporations of that State in the hands of receivers appointed by the United States courts, because those courts claim and exercise complete jurisdiction over all the property and affairs of the corporations and deny and prevent the seizure or sale of any property of such corporations for the payment of taxes.

Now, the tax laws are different in the several States of the Union, but the jurisdiction and power of the Federal courts as at present claimed and exercised are sufficient to stay and thwart the proceedings of the States under State laws for the collection of taxes in any case where a Federal court has appointed a receiver for a corporation and is exercising control over its business and property.

The extensive jurisdiction and powers claimed and exercised by the United States courts over corporations and corporate property in the hands of receivers do no rest upon any statute. These courts assumed jurisdiction years ago, hesitatingly and to a limited extent, and for special purposes, growing out of the apparent necessity of the case, appointed receivers for corporations, especially railroad corporations. Gradually this jurisdiction has been extended further and further, and every advance has served as justification or excuse for still greater advances, until the time has come when these courts, for the security of the States and the preservation of the fundamental rights of the people, as well as a due observance of constitutional restrictions, should be curbed.

Although a corporation may, for sufficient or insufficient reasons, be in the hands of a receiver, its property ought, nevertheless, to be subject to taxation and liable for taxes, the same other property. To insure this just and proper condition of affairs the committee have prepared and recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute. It is their belief that with this measure embodied in our statutes, United States courts would no longer have any pretense of authority for passing upon taxes in the first instance, as they do upon all moneyed demands against corporations in the hands of their receivers; corporations in the hands of receivers would no longer have any immunity from taxation, or any means of escaping the collection of taxes except such as are open to all corporations and all individuals in any particular State; property of corporations in the hands of receivers could be seized and sold as if no receivership existed; Federal courts could not exercise any jurisdiction as against the State or any of its municipalities seeking to collect taxes which it could not exercise in the case of an individual or of a corporation not in the hands of receiver; and that, at the same time, all corporations and receivers of corporations could have access to the courts upon the same footing as individual citizens.

Your committee append hereto a copy of the measure, the passage of which we recommend, and which we believe really furnishes its own interpretation.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I can not consent that this bill pass this House without interposing my protest against it. I do not think I shall carry my opposition to the extent of compelling the attendance of a quorum, or anything of that sort, if the principle of the bill meets the approval of this House, and I know it will appeal to the Democratic heart, for it strikes at the dignity and power of the General Government. I regard the principle of this bill as wrong. I am opposed to it for the reason that it appears to me to be an interference with the laws, the power, and the authority of the Government of the United States in matters where railroads are under its control, or the control of its courts.

When these roads have gone into the hands of a receiver and taxes of any description are unpaid, it does seem to me that the matter of the payment of those taxes or the ordering them to be paid ought to be left to the discretion and decision of the courts of the United States, and ought not to be subject to the will or wishes of a municipal corporation or the laws of the State.

The effect of this measure in a great many cases, where companies have been chartered and organized under the laws of the United States, practically will be to put the laws and the authority of a State above that of the Government of the United States. That is the way I understand this bill. As I have said, it appears to me wrong in principle. I regard it as an attack—an indirect attack, it is true—upon the supremacy of the laws of the United States and of the General Government. For that reason I oppose the measure.

I, of course, recognize on the other hand the fact that the State and municipal corporations through whose territory a railroad runs ought to receive their taxes, when justly and properly assessed and levied.

The great object and purpose of appointing a receiver of a railroad corporation is to protect and preserve the property, property rights, and franchises of the company for the payment, first, of the debts of such corporation, including of course lawful taxes thereon; and second, a dividend, if possible, to the stockholders of the corporation. Such receiverships are the only safeguards against the wrecking of railroads and a waste or sacrifice of the interests of the creditors and stockholders therein. Millions of dollars are invested in this kind of corporations, and probably one-half or more of the stock of these companies is held by widows, guardians, executors, etc., or poor people who have their all here invested.

It is impossible to run a railroad without incurring indebtedness, and the ability to pay such indebtedness depends on the earning capacity of the road. Dull times, railroad strikes, and many other occurrences frequently intervene to cripple and almost destroy the earning capacity of the road for the time being, and then, if its obligations are not promptly met, judgments follow, the rolling stock of the company is levied upon, and a sale follows, and the operation of the road is absolutely suspended unless some court can take possession, suspend these forced sales, and continue the operation of the road, waiting better times, a foreclosure of the mortgage, and an advantageous sale of the whole corporate property and franchises, and a distribution of the proceeds of sale among those entitled to it.

In such a proceeding, and such a disposition of such matters, not only the creditors of the company, but the stockholders of the company and the general public are deeply concerned. The opening of this great country of ours, the growth and extension of her industries, the increase of her people until nearly seventy millions of free independent American citizens claim the protection of our flag, have been made possible by the existence of these great railroad systems that form a network over this continent. Commerce, interstate and foreign, demands the preservation and encouragement of this means of transportation and intercourse. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the very existence and perpetuity of our Government depends upon it. Without the great and magnificent systems of transcontinental railways now existing within these United States the great Pacific Slope would be almost a stranger to the East and West and South, and estrangements would follow and possibly internecine strife and a disruption of the Republic.

This bill attacks the power of the Government of the United States to protect and preserve these corporations. It seeks to undermine Federal authority in such cases, and permits State and municipal authorities to seize and sell the rolling stock of these companies and thus defeat the very object of a receivership. Under this bill the courts of the United States will be powerless to protect and preserve the rights of creditors, of stockholders, or of the general public. The evils of the proposed legislation are manifest and manifold. It is not a blow at corporations or corporate encroachments or abuses, but at the private interests of the small stockholders who will be unable to protect themselves, and at the general public who utilize the roads and who would be greatly discommoded by their nonexistence or inability to operate.

This bill puts it in the power of State, county, or municipal authority to tax out of existence almost any railroad affected by it, to cripple it at any time, and especially in times like this, when business is stagnated and strikes are the order of the day.

Mr. Speaker, there is a public feeling against railroads and great corporations. Some of it is just, but much of it is exaggerated. But the correction is within the power of legislative bodies. It is neither necessary nor proper to crush them out of existence in order to defend ourselves against their encroachments. But above all, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to strike a blow at good government, at Federal authority and discretion.

It is true that the bill as first presented has been deprived of much of its original animus. The power to injure and wreck railroads is given by the bill, while the effect of the acts that that may be done by State, county, and municipal authority are only alleviated to a very small extent. It is true that the State and all its subdivisions should have their taxes, but it is far better that they be compelled to await payment the same as other creditors rather than that they be clothed with power to cripple and ruin the roads essential to prosperity of millions of people and forty-five States.

As I understand—I ask the chairman of the committee whether I am correct—an amendment was suggested and adopted by the committee providing that the railroad company may pursue all legal remedies for the refunding of taxes which may be found to have been illegally or improperly assessed or collected. Is that true?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is provided in the bill—that the corporation shall have the same right as the citizen to sue or to defend.

Mr. RAY. Then, under the bill as it now stands, the validity of taxes imposed or any question regarding them may be litigated after they are paid——

Mr. CULBERSON. Or before.

Mr. RAY. And the taxes may be refunded. The bill provides for a refunding, does it not?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. It gives a railroad corporation the same right that a citizen has, to seek a remedy in any court having competent jurisdiction.

Mr. RAY. I will not delay this matter; I simply desire it understood that I am opposed to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DE ARMOND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MANDAMUS AGAINST UNITED STATES OFFICERS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 4312) to provide for the removal of suits, by mandamus, against officers of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in suits or proceedings by mandamus in the courts of the United States, against any officer of the United States, to compel the performance of an official duty alleged to be enjoined upon such officer by law, if he dies, or his office becomes vacant during the pendency of such proceeding, the same may be revived against his successor or successors in office, by scire facias, or on motion, in the court where the same is pending.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides that proceedings by mandamus in United States courts against any officer of the United States to compel the performance of an official duty shall survive in case of vacancy in the office by death or otherwise.

As such proceedings would be against the defendant as an officer, and not as an individual, there is no reason why such proceedings should abate by death of the officer, expiration of his term, resignation, or the office become vacant in any other manner.

Mr. RAY. There is no objection to the bill, so far as I know, on this side.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOLVERTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INSPECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 5246) providing for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no alien immigrant shall be admitted within the United States unless he or she shall exhibit to the United States inspectors of arriving immigrants at the place of admission a certificate signed by the United States consul or other authorized representative of the United States at the place nearest where said immigrant last resided, setting forth that the said consul or other United States representative has made an investigation concerning said immigrant and that said immigrant does not belong to the class or classes of alien immigrants excluded from admission into the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act in amendment to the various acts relative to immigration and the importation of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor, its amendments or supplements," or by any other law of the United States that now exists or may hereafter be passed.

It shall be the duty of United States consuls and United States representatives in other countries to investigate and grant or withhold certificates, as shall be disclosed on investigation under the directions and instructions of the State Department.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "passed," in nineteenth line, page 2, insert "said immigrant shall, in addition, conform to all present requirements of law."

After the word "Department," in twenty-fourth line, insert the words "according to the laws of the United States as aforesaid."

Add as section 2 the following: "That this act shall take effect from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895."

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], who prepared the report on this bill.

[Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENALTY FOR EMBEZZLEMENT BY OFFICERS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5863) to increase the penalty for embezzlement by directors, officers, or agents of national banks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5209 of Title LXII of the Revised Statutes of the United States (1878) be amended by striking out "or" and adding, after the words "every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any association who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association," the words "shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than fifteen years if the amount embezzled, abstracted, or misapplied is less than $100,000, or the value thereof; and not less than fifteen years if the amount embezzled, abstracted, or misapplied is $100,000, or the value thereof, or more; and any person." That said section shall be amended further by adding at the end of the section the following words: "and persons arrested under this act shall receive no other or better treatment or greater privileges while in custody before conviction or after conviction than is accorded to persons in custody for violation of other laws of the United States;" so that the section as amended will read as follows:

"Every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any association who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than fifteen years if the amount embezzled, abstracted, or misapplied is less than $100,000, or the value thereof; and not less than fifteen years if the amount embezzled, abstracted, or misapplied is $100,000, or the value thereof, or more; and any person who, without authority from the directors, issues or puts in circulation any of the notes of the association, or who, without such authority, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the association, with intent, in either case, to injure or defraud the association or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of the association or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of any such association, and every person who, with like intent, aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than ten; and persons arrested under this act shall receive no other or better treatment or greater privileges while in custody before conviction or after conviction than is accorded to persons in custody for violation of other laws of the United States."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Beginning after the word "amended," in line 5, strike out all the text down to the beginning of line 23, and insert "so as to read as follows;" also strike out the word "fifteen," in line 27, and insert the word "ten:" also strike out the word "fifteen," in line 30, and insert the word "ten," and after the word "years," in line 30, insert the words "nor more than twenty years."

Mr. CULBERSON. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], and I yield the floor to him.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I introduced it, made the penalty for embezzlement by national-bank officials more severe than the committee felt justified in favoring. The bill, as amended by the committee, leaves the punishment as it now exists where the amount embezzled is less than $100,000. The penalty for embezzlement by national-bank officials is under existing statutes not less than five years nor more than ten years' imprisonment, without regard to the amount embezzled, and this bill, with the committee amendments makes the penalty not less than ten years' imprisonment nor more than twenty years if the amount embezzled exceeds $100,000.

The bill also provides that the following words shall be added at the end of section 5209, namely:

And persons arrested under this act shall receive no other or better treatment or greater privileges while in custody before conviction or after conviction than is accorded to persons in custody for violation of other laws of the United States.

While I would be glad to have the penalty made more severe, and to have the increased penalty apply to a less sum than $100,000, I accept the bill as amended by the committee because it is a decided improvement over the present law.

The circumstances surrounding the punishment of this class of crimes makes it necessary to raise the minimum limit for large embezzlements, because the criminal in such cases usually stands high in business, social, and political circles, and the discretion left with the Federal judge is so exercised that the lowest penalty is too often imposed. To give a light punishment to a big embezzler and a heavy punishment to a petty offender subjects the Government to just criticism. This bill is a step in the right direction in that it to some extent fits the penalty to the crime, and prevents the imposition of a short sentence if the amount embezzled is large.

The words added at the end of the section are intended to prevent courts and marshals from showing special favors to this class of offenders. To keep the poor thief in a dungeon and the rich thief at a first-class hotel is not in harmony with that Democratic principle, "equality before the law." There is no reason why money should purchase immunity from the hardships of prison life any more than that it should defeat punishment entirely.

If any mercy should be shown at all, it should be shown to the unfortunate person whose surroundings are such as do not encourage virtuous conduct and a manly life, rather than to the embezzler who adds to the crime of theft the betrayal of the confidence of those who trusted him. But, Mr. Speaker, I shall not add more unless some objection is made to the bill. There seems to be no oppositon, and I ask for a vote.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRYAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT AND JURISDICTION UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7384) to provide for the appointment of United States commissioners and to define their jurisdiction, powers, and duties.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of "commissioner of the circuit court" is hereby abolished and all acts authorizing their appointment are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That the Attorney-General shall divide the several States and Territories into so many commissioners' districts as may be required for the efficient and economical execution of the laws, and for this purpose is authorized to abolish, change the boundaries of such districts, or create new districts, when, in his opinion, the proper administration of justice requires it.

SEC. 3. That the President shall appoint, upon the nomination of the Attorney-General, so many commissioners in each commissioner's district and in the District of Columbia as may be deemed necessary by the Attorney-General to afford a speedy and convenient hearing and trial of persons charged with crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States, with the least expense to the Government. Such commissioners shall hold their office for the term of four years from the date of their respective commissions, unless sooner removed, and the Attorney-General is authorized to remove any commissioner appointed under this act when, in his opinion, the proper administration of justice shall require such removal. Before entering upon the discharge of the duties of their office, each commissioner shall make oath or affirmation before some officer qualified to administer oaths in the district wherein he resides, in such form as may be prescribed by the Attorney-General, that he will perform the duties of his office with fidelity, charge only the fees allowed by law, and make a true return to the Attorney-General of all fees and emoluments received by him, of every name, kind, and character, by virtue of such office.

SEC. 4. That such commissioners shall have the same jurisdiction and powers within their respective districts as are now conferred upon commissioners of the United States circuit courts under existing laws, but their jurisdiction shall not extend to offenses committed outside their respective districts, except in cases where no qualified commissioner resides in the commissioner's district where the offense was committed, in which case the commissioner residing nearest the place where the offense was committtd shall have jurisdiction, and except also offenses against the postal laws of the United States, in which jurisdiction shall remain as now provided by law.

SEC. 5. That commissioners shall keep dockets in which shall be entered minutes of all business transacted before them, and for the purpose of establishing uniformity the Attorney-General shall furnish forms for dockets, books, and blanks to be used by such commissioners. It shall be their duty to keep their dockets, books, and papers in such form and manner as may be required by regulations prescribed by the Attorney-General, and to perform such other duties as may be required by such regulations. All dockets, books, papers, and accounts relating in any way to their official business shall be open at all times to the inspection of any district attorney or other person authorized by the Attorney-General to inspect them, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any parties interested, and all dockets, books, and papers relating to the business of such commissioners shall be transferred to their successors in office.

SEC. 6. That at the end of each quarter commissioners shall make out a statement, in such form as the Attorney-General shall prescribe, of all fees and emoluments of every kind, name, and character received by virtue of their office, whether specified in any fee bill or not, and submit the same to the United States district attorney for the district in which the commissioner resides, who shall carefully examine the same and cause the commissioner to subscribe an oath to the correctness of each and every item in such statement, and that it contains a true and correct account of the fees and emoluments of every name, kind, and character received by virtue of his office for the time covered thereby; and if said district attorney shall approve of such statement as correct, he shall indorse his approval thereon in writing and shall forward same to the Attorney-General, who shall cause same to be audited and allowed if found to be correct, and if found to be incorrect shall cause such corrections thereof to be made as will make such statement conform to the law; and the approval thereof by the said United States district attorney shall not prevent the Attorney-General from making such deductions therefrom as justice may require, under the law and regulations prescribed by the Attorney-General. When the quarterly statement of a commissioner shall have been audited and allowed, as herein provided, the amount found due to him shall thereupon become immediately payable: Provided, however, That no commissioner shall be allowed to receive and retain of the fees and emoluments of his office any greater sum than $2,500 a year for his compensation, to be audited and allowed by the Attorney-General, nor exceeding that rate for any time less than a year, audited and allowed in like manner; and the surplus over said sum shall be paid into the United States Treasury by the commissioners at such times and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Attorney-General.

SEC. 7. That in all prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws commissioners shall not be entitled to fees, unless they have been taxed against and collected from the defendant or unless the prosecution has been commenced upon a sworn complaint by a United States district attorney, collector, or deputy collector of internal revenue or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief and approved either before or after arrest by a district judge or the attorney of the United States for the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed.

SEC. 8. That in case any person against whom a warrant may be issued by a commissioner for any offense committed within said commissioner's district shall escape, go into, reside, or be in any other city or county out of the jurisdiction of the said commissioner who issued such warrant, it shall be lawful for, and it is hereby declared to be the duty of, any commissioner of any commissioner's district where such person shall escape, go into, reside, or be, upon proof being made upon oath or affirmation of the handwriting of the commissioner granting such warrant, to indorse his name on such warrant, which shall be sufficient authority to the person or persons charged with the service of the same to execute the same in such other commissioner's district out of the jurisdiction of the commissioner granting such warrant, and to apprehend and carry such offender before the commissioner of the district who indorsed said warrant; and in case the offense for which such offender shall be so apprehended shall be bailable in law by any commissioner, and such offender shall be willing and ready to enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties, to be approved by said commissioner, for his appearance at the next United States district court having jurisdiction of the offense, such commissioner shall and may take such bail for his appearance in the same manner as the commissioner of the proper district might have done, and the said commissioner so taking bail shall deliver or transmit such recognizance and other proceedings to the commissioner who issued the warrant, who shall return them to the clerk of the district court where such offender is required to appear by virtue of such recognizance, and such recognizance and other proceedings shall be as effectual in law as if the same had been entered into, taken, or acknowledged in the proper commissioner's district where the offense was committed, and the same proceedings shall be had therein; and in case the offense for which such offender shall have been apprehended in any other commissioner's district shall not be bailable in law before a commissioner, or such offender shall not give bail for his appearance at the proper court having cognizance of his crime or offense to the satisfaction of the commissioner before whom he shall be brought, then the marshal or other person so apprehending such offender shall carry and convey him before the commissioner who issued the warrant, there to be dealt with according to law.

SEC. 9. That the following fees are fixed for commissioners:

For administering an oath, 10 cents.

For taking an acknowledgment, 25 cents.

For issuing a warrant, docketing the same, and all proceedings on a criminal charge where no arrest is made, $1.

For hearing and deciding on criminal charges, including docketing of the same, the commitment or recognizances of defendant, sureties, and witnesses, and oaths of witnesses as to travel, order to marshal to pay witnesses and return to court, and all proceedings thereon, $5 in each case, and no more; but where two or more charges are preferred against the same person or persons at the same time only one fee of $5 shall be allowed.

For attending a reference of a litigated matter in a civil case at law in equity or admiralty, in pursuance of any order of court, $3 per day for the time necessarily employed.

For taking and certifying depositions to file, 10 cents for each folio.

For a copy of same furnished to a party on request, 10 cents for each folio, to be paid by the party requesting the same.

For issuing a warrant under any treaty with any foreign government, $2.

For hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense and arrested under the provisions of any such treaty, $5 for each case, and no more.

For the examination and certificate in any case for application for discharge of poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of a fine or fines and costs, $5 for each examination and certificate and all services therein, and no more.

SEC. 10. That no bill for witness fees for hearings before a commissioner shall be paid until the United States district attorney for the district shall have certified thereon that the witnesses were regularly subpœnaed and in actual attendance by order of the United States attorney. There shall only be taxed fees for two witnesses unless, before the hearing, the United States attorney shall, after investigation, have directed in writing the commissioner to summon more than two, and without such directions in writing the commissioner shall only examine that number, and no more witness fees shall be paid in any such case: Provided, That when a witness has been subpœnaed and attends hearings in more than one case on the same day before the same commissioner, he shall be paid but one mileage fee; und where a witness is required to attend or testify in more than one case between the same parties on the same day, he shall be paid but one per diem witness fee; and no witness fees or mileage shall be paid to an officer who is officiating as such before a commissioner.

SEC. 11. That every person who, having taken an oath before a commissioner that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, and contrary to such oath testifies to, states, or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, shall be guilty of perjury with like effect as if he had testified to, stated, or subscribed any such matter under oath in any legal proceeding in any court, and shall be punished in like manner.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the objects of this bill are apparent from the reading of the bill itself. The second section of the bill provides that the Attorney-General shall divide the States and Territories into as many districts as may be required for the efficient execution of the laws, and is authorized to change the boundaries of such districts, or to abolish them, or create new districts when, in his opinion, the proper administration of justice requires it. United States circuit court commissioners are now appointed under section 627 of the Revised Statutes. The jurisdiction of these commissioners extends over the entire State. It will be seen that this gives the Attorney-General power to limit the districts or change their boundaries so as to more efficiently promote the administration of justice in such districts and prevent the abuse of judicial process. The Department of Justice has annually for many years called the attention of Congress to the necessity of some legislation limiting the jurisdiction of commissioners to certain boundaries.

The principal purpose of this section is to prevent the practice which exists under the present law and which allows the arrest of a person charged with an offence against the laws of the United States, and the officer to drag him the whole length of a

State for a hearing before a commissioner in order to make fees for the marshal in charge of the execution of the writ.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTER. Are the bounds of any commissioner's district fixed in the bill?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No; that is left to the discretion of the Attorney-General, who is required to fix them for the convenience of the parties in such number, size, and shape as will insure proper administration of the law and as may best serve the ends of justice.

Mr. HUNTER. And who is to determine the necessity for the districts so as to obtain this action on the part of the Attorney-General? How, for instance, is the process to be initiated to secure a change in the districts?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The Attorney-General is charged now by law with the duty of examining the business of the commissioners, and has supervision over them. He knows what business is done in Boston, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, and other places, and therefore, under the bill, he can so arrange the districts as to adapt them in size and location to the business to be transacted and that is being transacted now, and can arrange them so as to relieve the defendant from great hardship and enforce the laws with least expense to the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. Now, in my country—in Illinois where I live—parties are arrested and taken from 100 to 150 miles before a commissioner at Springfield or Cairo, and yet we have a commissioner already in the district before whom such parties could be tried. But the marshal or deputy marshal, disregarding the local commissioner, travel this distance in order to make fees.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The very purpose of this bill is to prevent that.

Mr. CULBERSON. If you pass this bill that will not be done any more.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, I hope not.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Commissioners under the present law hold office during good behavior, which means for life, and there seems to be no power to remove them from office. By this bill their tenure is limited to four years, unless sooner removed by the Attorney-General, who is authorized to remove them for abuse of their office, whenever in his opinion the proper administration of justice requires such removal.

The bill gives the Attorney-General full power to establish rules of practice before them, and to supervise their accounts.

It limits the number of witnesses in hearings without special directions of the district attorney.

It does away with private informers in internal-revenue cases and requires such prosecutions to be instituted by some revenue officer or the district attorney.

It establishes a certain fee bill which limits charges for services and will prevent the existing practice in many places of continuing hearings from day to day at $5 each for the mere purpose of making fees against the Government.

There is no office so capable of being abused as that of United States circuit court commissioner, and in many parts of the United States abuses of the office have disgraced the administration of justice. The Department of Justice and the Comptroller of the Treasury have for years been complaining of these abuses and have been powerless to prevent them because of powers and latitude they have under existing laws. This bill has the approval of the Attorney-General, and it is believed that it will go far toward remedying existing abuses in the administration of this office.

The enormous increase in the expenses of the United States courts during the last few years is attributed largely to the institution of frivolous prosecutions before United States commissioners and collusive prosecutions for the sole purpose of making fees against the Government.

The expenses of these courts have grown from $2,955,481.57 in 1878 to $5,191,844.95 in 1893. For 1890 they were $1,718,126.32 higher than in 1880, and in 1893 they were $128,724.60 higher than in 1892. In 1880 commissioners' fees were $140,230.90; in 1893 they were $265,000. In 1880 United States marshals' fees were $630,000; in 1893, $1,450,000.

The facts relating to this office are so fully set forth in the report accompanying this bill that I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There is no objection whatever to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOLVERTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I ask that the report accompanying this bill may be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. WOLVERTON) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7384) entitled "A bill to provide for the appointment of United States commissioners, and to define their jurisdiction, powers, and duties," having considered the same, respectfully make the following report:

United States circuit court commissioners are now appointed by the circuit courts of the United States under section 627 of the Revised Statutes. They hold their tenure during good behavior or for life, and there seems to exist no power anywhere for their removal from office. There exists no provision of law subjecting their proceedings to the control or review of any court, and the office is in no legal sense inferior to the circuit court itself.

A commissioner has no definite responsibility with any other officer and seems to be subject to no control. His jurisdiction is coextensive with the district or State, and there is no office which offers such opportunities to the professional fee-maker as that of United States circuit court commissioner. The office has been so much abused in different parts of the United States, so many complaints have been made by the Comptroller's Office and the Department of Justice in relation to the manner in which many commissioners conduct their offices, that there is a universal demand for some change in the law regulating their appointment, limiting their jurisdiction, and providing for a limited tenure of office and their removal when the interests of justice require it.

The Department of Justice has called the attention of Congress almost annually for several years to the abuses which prevail in many parts of the United States and to the necessity of some legislation on the subject. As their jurisdiction is unlimited, combinations are easily made between them and deputy marshals for the arrest of persons living in distant parts of the district and bring them before a certain commissioner for the purpose of making fees for the commissioner and a mileage for the marshals. In many districts through such combinations, although commissioners have been appointed and reside in the immediate neighborhood where the offense is alleged to have been committed, warrants have been issued by certain commissioners residing in a distant portion of the State, arrests made, and the prisoners conveyed long distances for hearing before these commissioners, not only making large fees against the Government, but subjecting the defendant to great hardships and expense.

The Department of Justice has endeavored to break up this practice for a long time, and strongly and justly condemns it as an unnecessary hardship for a defendant and needless expense to the Government. The practice of arresting persons for the alleged violation of a statute in one part of a State and taking them away from the residence of the United States commissioner to a distant point in the State for hearing before a particular commissioner is in violation of the spirit of all statutes on the subject, and there can be but one way to account for it, and that is that it is done to make fees for officers concerned in prosecutions. Attorney-General Garland, in his annual report of December 1, 1887, makes the following suggestion in relation to this abuse:

"Commissioners of circuit courts generally issue warrants that are returnable to themselves alone, regardless of the distance and cost consequent upon the order. They have the right to do this, yet experience shows that the right is open to reform. The right to issue a warrant might be left unrestricted in all respects, leaving the commissioner discretion to act upon reasonable grounds of suspicion and belief on a charge made upon reasonable cause of the commission of a felony; but the commissioner before whom the warrant should be returned might be another, and perhaps ought to be another, if the offense is committed without the country of his residence.

"Some of the United States judges have directed commissioners to make warrants returnable to the commissioner nearest the place of the offense. This is practicable only to a limited extent, as it presupposes that the officer issuing the warrant knows who is the commissioner living nearest the place of offense. Error in this particular would lead to confusion, and perhaps to a greater abuse than the one sought to be remedied.

"The marshal (an executive officer only) does not appear to be the proper officer to decide to whom he shall return the writ. A district attorney may be the right one to advise, and perhaps is the only one. The Department of Justice can not direct the commissioner how to act as that officer is subject to the court alone. It is therefore a proper subject for legislation to devise means to remedy the abuse.

"It is suggested that a remedy may be found in limiting the territorial jurisdiction of these officers on the hearings for commitment, and as much complaint has been made for the past several years that trivial and useless prosecutions have been originated before these commissioners, it might be well to have legislation upon this subject, defining more particularly their jurisdiction as well as the mode of procedure, especially as their jurisdiction now rests on old statutes that make these officers of the States where they are what committing magistrates in these States are. I think this whole subject deserves the consideration of Congress."

In his report, December 1, 1888, the Attorney-General reiterates this recommendation.

Attorney-General Miller, in his report, December 22, 1889, says:

"From a number of judges, as well as from other sources, comes the information that very great abuses arise out of the action of commissioners of circuit courts in the amount of fees they make and charge for themselves, as well as those whom they assist, the marshals, and in some cases district attorneys, in making. Whether it is practicable to eliminate entirely the excessive charges in the enormous bills of expenses in proceedings had before these commissioners is perhaps doubtful, but Congress, by enacting a clear and definite fee bill for such proceedings, and providing that no prosecutions shall be commenced, except in an emergency shown in an affidavit, until the district attorney shall have approved of the commencement of such proceedings, and by prescribing severe punishment for any violations of the laws so enacted, can do much to repress these abuses and relieve the Treasury from illegal exactions."

Attorney-General Olney, in his annual report, December 1, 1893, page 32, says:

"Directly in line with the tenor and purpose of the last preceding paragraph is the recommendation also made in the President's message of 1885, that United States commissioners should be clothed with power of trying and determining certain classes of petty offenses within the grade of misdemeanors. As violations of the law of the kind referred to have of course increased in number with the increase of the population and business of the country, the importance of the recommendation is now greater than ever and should lead to its immediate and favorable consideration. The language of the message of 1885 comprises all that need be said upon the subject.

"[Extract from message.]

"The multiplication of small and technical offenses especially under the provisions of our internal-revenue laws, render some change in our present system very desirable in the interests of humanity as well as economy. The district courts are now crowded with petty prosecutions involving a punishment in cases of conviction of only a slight fine, while the parties accused are harrassed by an enforced attendance upon courts held hundreds of miles from their homes. If poor and friendless they are obliged to remain in jail during months, perhaps, that elapse before the session of the court is held, and are finally brought to trial surrounded by strangers and with little real opportunity for defense. In the meantime, frequently, the marshal has charged against the Government his fees for an arrest, the transportation of the accused, and expense for the same, and for examining witnesses before a commissioner, and grand jury and a court. Witnesses have been paid from the public funds large fees and traveling expenses and the commissioner and district attorney have also made their charges against the Government."

In pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives in 1890, during the Fifty-first Congress, a committee was appointed consisting of Hon. A. C. Thompson, Hon. H. C. McCormick, and Hon. W. C. OATES, to investigate abuses of judicial power or authority by officers of the judicial department of the United States. This committee took a large amount of testimony showing that the abuses above referred to prevailed in different States and recommending legislation on the subject. The report is No. 3823, and the following is an extract from it (page 9):

"The evidence shows that in some parts of the country men are induced by deputy marshals and United States commissioners to make complaints against each other for violations of the internal-revenue laws and of the timber laws, are arrested by the deputy marshals and brought before the commissioners, where, after a hearing they are bound over to court, often becoming bail for each other, and appearing before the court as defendants, witnesses, and bail. They come up in batches At one time, in the State of Alabama, eighty-nine men from Marion County plead guilty at Huntsville, and at another time forty-one men from Lamar County plead guilty, at Birmingham, of violations of the internal-revenue laws, and in both instances sentences were suspended and defendants discharged without punishment. United States District Attorney Parsons says:

"'You start with a defendant in a neighborhood with two or three witnesses against him and you soon find around it has gathered a batch of cases in which every defendant had been a witness against somebody else, and every witness had been a defendant.'

"As witnesses they receive 5 cents a mile going and coming as mileage, and an attendance fee of $1.50 a day. It is part of the scheme to transport them long distances, a few at a time, past nearer commissioners, for the purpose of increasing their mileage, and the mileage and fees of the deputy marshals who arrest them.

"The marshals charge for endeavoring to arrest, for serving warrant, for mileage, for transportation of prisoners, for guards, for subsistence, for making returns, for subpœnaing witnesses, for attendance before the commissioners, for committing and discharging, etc., and their fees in each case will average from $15 to $20, and the fees of each witness and commissioner will average about as much. But the following extract from the testimony shows how fees and costs may be increased indefinitely:

"'On January 30, 1891, Deputy Hewlett charges for arresting George Doss, Daniel McCullas, and three others at Cross Plains, in Calhoun County, and for their transportation, together with three guards, from that place to Huntsville, a distance of 247 miles, the Government witnesses being George Noble and E. Haldron, two prominent and wealthy citizens. The defendants employed James H. Savage as counsel, and he endeavored to secure a hearing before Commissioner Erwin at Cross Plains, the home of the defendants. Deputy Marshal Hewlett refused to allow this, and Mr. Savage telegraphed to Commissioner Bone at Huntsville to obtain his consent to a hearing in Cross Plains. Commissioner Bone refused, and telegraphed the deputy marshal to bring defendants and witnesses to Huntsville, which was done, defendants leaving Cross Plains on February 1.

"'Upon the conclusion of the trial, on February 4, the two United States witnesses, Noble and Haldron, were arrested by Deputy Hewlitt on writs sworn out by George Doss and Daniel McCullas before Commissioner Erwin at Cross Plains, on February 1. Both gentlemen (Noble and Haldron) immediately gave bonds before Commissioner Bone for their appearance at Cross Plains, and set out for that place in company with H. L. Jeffers, a United States commissioner, and G. B. Douthill, two very old gentlemen, Deputy Hewlitt remaining in Huntsville, and charging in his accounts for transporting prisoners Noble and Haldron and guards Jeffers and Douthitt from Huntsville to Cross Plains, 247 miles. The total expense to the Government of this transaction in marshal's fees alone was over $700."

"Often defendants travel to the commissioner's office themselves, at their own expense, but the deputy marshals charge for transportation and guards for prisoners and for subsistence, although neither transportation, guards, nor subsistence has been furnished. Shortly before the court sits, although the accused are under bail to appear before the court, their sureties, who are often defendants and witnesses in other cases, surrender them to some deputy marshal, who carries them to court at the expense of the Government, making fees for himself and saving defendants, who are bound by their bonds to appear before the court, the expense of traveling to the place where the court sits. They are then indicted, or informations are filed against them, when they often disappear and have to be brought in on capias, making additional fees for the deputy marshals, marshals, and clerks.

"When they are brought in witnesses are often absent and the defendants are again put under bond for their appearance, and the case is continued until the next term of the court. At the next term of the court frequently they fail to appear and are brought in on alias capias, making more fees for the deputy marshals, marshals, and clerks. When they are finally brought before the court they plead guilty, are sentenced, and as a rule the sentence is suspended by the judge. Pending arrest and rearrest the bonds of the absent defendants are forfeited, suits are instituted thereon, and judgments nisi are rendered, and when, upon arrest or rearrest, they are brought in these judgments nisi are nearly always set aside unconditionally. These proceedings largely increase the costs of clerks.

"After suspension of sentence these defendants, now convicts, go to the clerk's desk, get a certificate showing the number of days they have attended as witnesses and the amount of mileage they are entitled to, and this they take to the marshal, who pays them anywhere from $15 to $30 each for attendance and mileage. These amounts are paid without deducting the fines and costs assessed against them as defendants. They return to their homes, and as soon as court is over they and the commissioners and deputy marshals resume these practices of fee-making and are on hand at the next term of the court with a new batch of cases, and the Government is robbed in this way of thousands of dollars every year.

"The evidence shows that sentence in the case of the same individuals has been suspended many times. The district attorneys in some parts of the country attend many of the hearings before commissioners when there is absolutely no necessity for it, and in Massachusetts the district attorney attends every hearing, for which he gets a per diem of $5 a day."

Again, on the 1st of February, 1892, the Fifty-second Congress passed a similar resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to investigate all the complaints of illegal and disreputable practices indulged in by certain officials connected with the courts of the United States in certain localities, including illegal fee-making and jobbery discreditable to the judicial administration. The committee was appointed, consisting of WOLVERTON, LAYTON, and BRODERICK, who made their report to the House of Representatives, No. 1966, to which reference is made. Before the last committee J. W. Nightingale, an examiner in the Department of Justice, and who had filled that position for twelve years, testified:

"There were eighteen commissioners in the district of Massachusetts located at different points throughout the State, but Mr. Hallett, a commissioner at Boston, transacted all the business, you might say, in the district. In other words, no matter where the defendant might reside, he would be brought to Boston, ignoring the other commissioners who live in cities outside of Boston. I thought it an unnecessary expense. Commissioners had been located at other places to hear cases so that defendants would not be taken too far from their homes. It is also an unnecessary expense to the Government for the transportation of these defendants to Boston and also of the witnesses.

"A man arrested, for instance, at Worcester could be taken before a commissioner there, and, as the witnesses lived there, if he was held they could be taken to Boston and imprisoned, but if he was discharged the Government would not be put to the unnecessary expense of travel, paying for travel of deputies and witnesses. There were commissioners at Worcester, at Pittsfield, and New Bedford. Defendants were arrested at those places and instead of being taken before the commissioners there for preliminary hearing were carried to Boston and taken before Commissioner Hallett, never before any of the other commissioners residing in Boston. In other words, he had a monopoly of the entire business.

"Q. How did you account for that?

"A. A great deal of that was done by the deputy marshals. They have, of course, entire power to take a man where they wish, and probably they may have liked Mr. Hallett's ways better than they liked those of any other commissioner. Of course the deputy marshals generally make arrangements for their own benefit.

"Q. Did you find that to be the fault to some extent of parties making complaint coming before him instead of other commissioners?

"A. Well, that in true to some measure. The complaints at that time were made to a great degree by deputy collectors of internal revenue, who all reside in Boston, and they would go before Mr. Hallett. Some were made before him by deputy marshals. He having issued the warrant, they, of course, would skip all the other commissioners and bring him in before Hallett. In the case of a preliminary hearing where defendants resided at Springfield, they could have been taken before a commissioner there at very little expense, but by taking them to Boston the Government is put to expense of traveling—for a deputy 100 miles, $10; travel for prisoner, $10; and guard, $10. Taking the average number of witnesses, which are three it would make the expense of traveling 100 miles $60, which if he was taken before a commissioner at Springfield there would hardly be any expense at all; anyway, it would be very small.

"Q. Well, these marshals have the right to go before any commissioner, or even any officer to take bail?

"A. Yes, sir; The Department has held that; they have tried in fact to have it done in all districts throughout the country that the defendant should be taken to the commissioner nearest the place of arrest, but it has not been done in a large number of districts; it has been resisted.

* * * * * * *

"Q. I suppose that these abuses that you have spoken of, that have occurred in Massachusetts, occur also in other States, and the hardships are as great or greater where the Territory is larger?

"A. Yes, sir. I have known in some districts through the South that defendants have been transported by marshals 250 or 300 miles, and have, of course, been held for court and given bail; but in those cases where they had to go so far the sureties came with them, and they would allow them to start, and give them a fair start of some 50 or 100 miles, and then they would overtake them again and arrest the security for having committed perjury, for swearing they were worth a certain sum of money, and they would take them back to a place and put them through another examination and discharge them again.

"Q. In such cases the fees would be enormous?

"A. Yes, sir. The worst case I know of that kind was in Southern Georgia, at Macon, which was the worst I ever had anything to do with. The fees in that case became so enormous it caused a special examination to be made to see what had made them run up so high, and they found collusion there between the commissioners and the deputy marshals to make fees. They could have taken these men before other commissioners, but they seemed to have picked out one who lived the farthest away, because they got more."

Attention is called to the report of Leigh Chalmers, examiner of the Department of Justice, to the Attorney-General, dated January 8, 1894, which shows conclusively that some legislation is necessary. The letter is as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., January 8, 1894.

"SIR: In order to a better understanding of the reports that I have made and am to lay before you on the accounts of the judicial officers of the northern district of Alabama, I think it best that I should submit the following facts relative to the administration of justice in the district:

"Upon examining the books and accounts of the court officers, I soon became convinced that the immense increase of expenses in the district was not justified by the legitimate increase of the business of the courts. An investigation of the vouchers against the witness fund appropriated for the district revealed the facts that for the fiscal year 1891 witness fees amounted to $22,555.77; of this sum $16,412.95 was paid witnesses before the United States circuit and district courts, and $6,142.82 to witnesses before commissioners; total $22,555.77.

"For the fiscal year 1892, amounts paid witnesses, circuit and district courts, $24,244.93; commissioners' courts, $12,218.16; total, $36,463.09. For the fiscal year 1893, including the months of July, August, September, and October of the fiscal year 1894, circuit and districts courts, $54,905.53; commissioners' courts, $30,364.82; total, $85,270.34.

"This shows an increase for the fiscal year 1893 (with the four months added) over 1892 of $48,807.25 and $26,251.48 over 1891 and 1892 combined.

"In the $85,270.34 above stated I have included unpaid vouchers amounting to $27,736.10 yet on file in the marshal's office.

"By an examination of the records of the courts I found that the total expenses incurred by the United States for the courts in this district, as per accounts approved by the court, from July 1, 1892, to November 1, 1893, to be:

Fees of witnesses	$85,270.34
Fees of commissioners	27,332.49
Fees of United States attorneys	13,695.60
Fees of jurors	14,974.10
Pay of bailiffs	1,723.10
Miscellaneous expenses	3,702.29
Fees and expenses of marshal	62,643.50
Fees of clerk of United States court	14,093.52
Support of prisoners	14,125.00
Total	237,559.94

In order to ascertain the cause of the enormous increase of expenses in this district I collected from the records of the marshal's office the following table of expenses, by appropriations for the fiscal years 1891, 1892, and 1893, the latter embracing the months of July, August, September, and October of the fiscal year 1894, and also a list of United States circuit court commissioners, with amounts of accounts of each approved by the courts from July 1, 1892, to September 30, 1893:

	1891.	1892.	1893.
Witnesses	$22,555.77	$36,465.09	$85,270.34
Jurors	7,126.85	8,691.90	14,974.10
Bailiffs	603.25	1,217.30	1,723.10
Miscellaneous expenses	1,159.89	1,502.22	3,702.29
Support of prisoners	5,072.60	6,345.61	14,125.00
Fees and expenses	19,134.85	22,118.22	62,643.50
Total	55,653.21	86,338.34	182,438.33
Expenses 1891 and 1892 combined			141,991.55
Difference of expenses for fiscal year 1893 over 1891 and 1892 combined			40,446.78

Amounts of accounts of United States commissioners approved in time indicated.

Robert Charlson, Attalla	$7,093.95
W. B. Briggs, Anniston	4,329.60
W. H. Hunter, Birmingham	3,908.95
D. N. Cooper, Russellville	3,506.65
H. M. McCulloch, Huntsville	2,584.14
J. B. Shields, Jasper	1,390.50
H. A. Wilson, Birmingham	1,305.25
J. H. Bone, Huntsville	964.05
E. E. Greenleaf, Huntsville	519.60
R. Scott Parks, Scottsboro	447.95
Sam Thompson	312.60
J. W. Jaggers, Hartselle	306.55
G. H. Smith, Florence	279.10
O. D. Laird	274.20
N. W. Trimble, Birmingham	91.80
R. A. Mosely, Tuscaloosa	47.60
Total	27,332.49

I found that the number of cases brought before United States commissioners in this district from July 1, 1892, to November 1, 1893, to be 1,479. Of this number 1,017 were held to bail by the commissioners and 462 discharged. Of the 1,017 cases held to bail the grand jury refused to indict 401, making 863 cases not of sufficient importance to warrant an indictment. It is not reasonable to charge the grand juries with a failure to perform their duty when, out of the 1,017 cases submitted to them they found 616 indictments, and it is but reasonable to suppose that, upon sufficient testimony, they would have found indictments against the other 401 cases submitted. It is also reasonable to calculate that 25 per cent of the cases upon which indictments are based will fail of conviction on a final trial before a petit jury. By taking this estimate as a basis, and taking the entire expenses of the court in the district for the term covered by my examination (from July 1, 1892, to November 1, 1893), viz, $227,559.94, we find that it costs the Government $500 for each man convicted, and a large majority of the cases are, by a strained construction of the law, for retailing liquor.

Dissecting these facts and figures to arrive at the cause of this profligate increase of expenses, I find that the difference between the items of fees and expenses of marshals and amount paid witnesses for the fiscal year 1891 to be $6,420.92; for the fiscal year 1892 to be $4,344.67; for the fiscal year 1893, including the months of July, August, September, and October, to be $22,626.84.

This points very clearly to the fact that a very large sum of the amount appropriated for the expenses of the courts is unnecessarily expended in payment of witnesses. When we take into consideration the fact that out of the 1,479 cases tried by commissioners 462 were discharged, and the grand jury failed to indict 401 of those held, making a total of 863 frivolous cases, with an average of three witnesses to each case, and the further fact that in the 401 cases ignored by the grand jury the same witnesses (1,203) were resubpœnaed to testify before the grand jury, we are forced to the conclusion that the greatest cause of this profligate increase is attributable, in a very great degree, to the trifling character of cases brought before commissioners.

To satisfy myself fully as to the character of cases tried by commissioners and the manner of proceedings before them, and to fully test the legality of accounts of deputy marshals, I took the testimony of sundry persons who had been arrested and tried before commissioners, and of those who had attended as witnesses before them, aggregating 165 pages of typewritten matter, which I submit, marked Exhibit A and B. Many of these witnesses I found in jail serving sentence. I also put myself in communication with citizens in many parts of the district, whose replies to my letters I also submit with the other testimony.

This testimony, if true, reveals a startling state of affairs in the judicature of the district.

It appears from this evidence that many of the deputy marshals had subdeputies, appointed by themselves, whose business it was, by a well-regulated system of espionage, to work up cases for his principal and act as witness in the trial of the cases before the commissioners, thereby receiving his mileage and per diem in addition to the pay allowed him by his employer. This subdeputy, or "bootlick," as he is called by the mountaineers, would "spot" a sufficient number of violators of the law to make a trip to the commissioner profitable, notifying his principal to meet him at a given point on the railroad, and together with the accused they would go to the place of trial.

It also appears that some of the commissioners had their professional witnesses whose duty it was to scour the country for violators of the revenue laws, report, swear out warrants, and attend as a witness in the case, and draw his per diem for attendance and mileage from the place of arresting defendant, irrespective of the place of service of the subpœna.

Again, the testimony shows that it was the practice of some of the deputies to visit the jails and offer inducements to prisoners to inform on citizens for violating the revenue laws, and when sucessful to take the informers from jail to the commissioner and have them swear out a warrant against his victim. On this warrant the citizen would be arrested, arraigned, and the informing witness used as a witness in the commissioner's court, get his per diem attendance, and frequently mileage from his home to the place of trial, notwithstanding the fact that he actually traveled to testify only from the jail to the commissioner's office, distant in Birmingham but a few blocks.

It appears also to have been the practice of some of the deputies to use every means to induce defendants to plead guilty regardless of the facts in the case. These practices have been carried to such an extent as not only to bring odium upon the Department of Justice, but to the very great harassment of and injustice to many innocent citizens. The very sharp competition to get business by such methods has caused the country and cities to be scoured for victims, who are hunted down and brought in from the "hedges and highways" until no ignorant man, however innocent, is safe in his liberty. Many cases not only frivolous, but criminally frivolous, were developed by the testimony.

I call your attention especially to two of these cases, that of Anthony Gray and C. E. Willborn.

Anthony Gray is a poor old negro, 76 years of age, with frosted head, body bowed down with years of servitude, and too ignorant to know his rights. He was arrested on the information of a professional witness, taken before a United States commissioner as a retail liquor dealer, intimidated into pleading guilty, bound over to court, and in default of bond cast into prison. Knowing that no language at my command could give you an adequate idea of the criminal frivolity of this case and show to what extent the competition to get business has been carried, I secured the services of a photographer and had him take a picture of the poor old negro in his nakedness and squalidity, which I attach to and submit with his testimony as an object lesson. I instructed the stenographer to take his testimony as given, without let or hindrance or dictation, in his own dialect, which carries the import of verity too strongly to be doubted.

The facts in the case of Charles E. Willborn are that among the whitecappers who were put in jail at Birmingham last spring was a distiller, who, to amuse himself, improvised a toy still out of a spittoon for a furnace, half a gallon oil can for a boiler, and a piece of gas pipe for a worm. The materials used for the mash were bits of corn bread and molasses taken from their scanty jail rations and mixed with water. On his way to the penitentiary this whitecapper told the deputy in charge of the fact that he had been experimenting with the still in jail and had left a portion of it in Willborn's cell.

On his return to Birmingham, the deputy informed one of the deputy revenue collector of the facts, who swore out a warrant for the arrest of Willborn (who was in jail), and with the deputy marshal and another as a posse, they proceeded to jail, arrested Willborn, seized the broken toy and carried prisoner and toy before a United States commissioner, who, with the deputies and posse as witnesses, tried the case, found "probable cause" against the defendant and bound him over in a bond of $200, in default of which he was committed. The papers in this case, especially the bill of cost, loom up in full proportions as a genuine raid against an illicit distiller. This little toy still, with a capacity, using the material at hand, for running a gill a day of a nondescript villainous decoction, will, at the estimate above made, cost the Government $500 provided the prosecution is carried to a finish.

Recurring to the matter of witness fees, I will say that I examined several hundred witnesses' pay rolls certified by commissioners for payment, and by questioning orally and corresponding with the witnesses whose names appeared on these rolls as to the fact of their attendance, how many days and what amount they received, and by comparing the signatures of the same persons who had served as witnesses and afterwards testified before me, I became satisfied that they had been tampered with—names forged, fictitious names added, and amounts for mileage and attendance raised. So thoroughly was I convinced of this fact that I filed a written protest with the marshal against the payment of their accounts still remaining on file in his office unpaid.

In fact, I am certain that the greatest frauds are perpetrated in the district and the largest amount of money is wasted in the matter of making and paying witness fees. If a commissioner should be disposed to defraud the Government, this furnishes him with the safest method. Commissioners doing the greatest amount of business in the district all have clerks and brokers in their offices ready to discount for cash all witnesses' pay rolls in cases tried by the commissioners, and there is nothing easier for one disposed to do it than to get witnesses to sign rolls in blank, take their pay, and leave the roll with the commissioner or broker, who can add to the amount of per diems and mileage as much as the case will stand and collect the money from the marshal. In fact, you will find, in the evidence submitted, abundant proof that this practice has been followed by some of the commissioners.

It is but just and fair to call your attention to the fact that all of the testimony submitted is entirely ex parte, and much of it of persons who have been convicted of violating the revenue laws and were at the time of testifying in jail serving sentences, and of others who had, upon a preliminary trial, been sent to jail in default of bond. It was a subject of harsh complaint, by some of those interested, that I went to the jail for any testimony at all, but when it is remembered that the witnesses examined by me in jail were the same used by commissioners who had certified to their credibility, and upon whose testimony reputable citizens had been deprived of their liberty, I will be excused for not feeling humiliated by their objugatory criticism.

While there are hundreds of frivolous cases brought and tried in this district, there is no doubting the fact that violations of the internal-revenue laws are on the increase, and many offenders who ought to be arrested, tried, and convicted. Yet this does not palliate the wrongs done and immense cost of arresting and trying ignorant and innocent citizens. To find out the source of and remedy for the evil was the end to which I worked. I have tried to be just and impartial in tracing the evil to its source, and have no hesitation in saying that it is the commissioner's court. With them the responsibility rests. The fact that some of the deputy marshals have worked up and brought before them complaining witnesses in frivolous cases is no excuse for them in issuing warrants. The character and merits of the cases are before them, and upon them rests the responsibility of issuing or not issuing the warrant, without which no further wrong could be done. With the issuance of it commences the evil, and to prevent its issuance in trifling cases and against innocent persons the remedy.

The complaining witnesses have been required to swear of their own knowledge that the offenses have been committed, and commissioners have been required to certify of their own knowledge to the credibility of complaining witnesses before the United States attorney would approve the issuance of the writ. The present attorney, who is using all means at his command to
